To Anti-Saloon Republicacans.

Important Assistance that Every Republican can Render by Prompt Action,

The Anti-Saloon Republican National Committee has removed its headquarters to No. 1 Broadway, New York City, and desires to hear from temperance republicans in every part of the country in reference to all matters of interest in their respective localities. It is especially anxious to know who are willing to do something to help the cause of temperance and republicanism. All such will oblige by writing at once, giving a short statment of the condition of sentiment in their respective localities, with suggestions as to what should be done to improve matters. Mere common scolds and pessimistic grumblers will oblige by not trespassing on our time.

Bones in This.

Col. Ingersoll's Statement of Why He Opposes the Democratic Party.

I am opposed to the democratic party, says Col Ingersoll, and I want to tell you why. Every ordinance of secession that was ever drawn, was done by a democrat. Every enemy this country had for twenty-five years was a democrat. Every man that starved Union soldiers, refusing them a crust in the extremity of death, was a democrat. The man that assassinated Abraham Lincoln was a democrat. Every man that sympathised with the assassin—every man that was glad that the noblest President ever elected was slain was a democrat.

Every man that wanted the privilege of whipping another man to make him work for nothing and pay him with lashes on his naked back, was a democrat. Every man that raised bloodhounds to pursue human beings was a democrat. Every man that clutched babies from the breasts of shrieking, shuddering, crouching mothers and sold them into slavery was a democrat. Every man that swore he would never pay the bonds, every man that swore he would never redeem the greenbacks, every maligner of his country's credit, calumniator of his country's honor, was a democrat. Every man who hid in the bushes and shot at Union soldiers simply because they were trying to enforce the laws of their country, was a democrat. Every man that cursed Lincoln because he issued the emancipation proclamation, was a democrat. Every man who believed that a state could get out of the Union at pleasure, every man who believed that the grand fabric of the American government could be made to crumble instantly to dust at the touch of treason, was a democrat. Every man who tried to burn asylums in the city of New York, was a democrat—although he knew thousands would perish and the great serpents of flame, leaping from one building to another, would clutch children from their mothers' arms—every wretch that did it was a democrat. Recollect it! Every man that tried to spread the smallpox and yellow fever in the North, was a democrat. Soldiers, every scar you have on your heroic bodies was given you by a democrat. I am a republican.

All Prohibitionists Not to Be Counted as Third Party Men.

Toledo Blade.

We recently discussed a false parallel which the third party leaders are fond of using as an argument for the existence of their organization, and showed clearly that the facts of history are against their assumptions. We wish to call attention to another pretense of theirs, which is often the cause of error on the part of many peasons who do not closely note the facts. It is, the assumption that all prohibitionists are to be classed as third party men. Wherever a popular vote has been taken on a prohibitory amendment to a state constitution, the total number of votes in its favor is claimed by the third party men.

A Chicago organ of the third party, the Lever, publishes a table giving the vote on constitutional prohibitory amendments in ten states, which it quotes from the columns of the New York Mail and Express, and which we copy below:

	For	Against
Maine	70,783	23,811
Massachusetts in 1886	109,783	94,931
Rhode Island	15,100	9,239
Ohio	323,189	240,975
Iowa	155,436	125,077
Kansas	92,302	84,304
Michigan	178,659	186,316
Oregon	19,973	27,958
Tennesee	117,504	145,237
	1,211,998	1,160,456

The table is incorrect as regards the Ohio vote, which was cast in October, 1883. The column "Against" contains only the actual number of ballots bearing the word "No." But the constitution of Ohio provides that no amendment shall be valid unless it receives a majority of all the votes cast at such election. Hence all ballots which did not contain the word "Yes" had to be counted against the amendment; and the "Against" vote of Ohio in the above table should stand 408,181. As it is given above, it looks as if the amendment carried which it did not. We are sorry, however to be obliged to make this explanation, for we should be glad had Ohio arrayed herself on the side of prohibition.

What is the significance of the above table? In every instance the ballot was taken after a hard fought battle. The votes for prohibition were inspired by a deep conviction in the righteousness of the cause, and the consciences that were awakened in the struggle will not readily become silent. The 1,511,998 who voted against the saloon still adhere to their convictions, and it is only fair to presume that their votes next November will again be against the saloon. It is an insult to American patriotism, an asperion upon American honor to think otherwise. * * *

Reduced to Hobson's choice, does not loyalty to American citizenship compel the belief that these 1,211,998 voters will vote for General Clinton B. Fisk? What other course can they pursue and retain their self-respect?

Now the Lever here makes the assumption that every voter who supported prohibition must, to be consistent, support the third party. This involves the pretense of which we spoke in the opening paragraph of this article. The truth about the matter is this:

The majority of the prohibitionists of the United States do not believe in separate action.

We might make this still stronger, and still be perfectly truthful, by saying that fourteen out of every fifteen of them oppose separate action. And we will proceed to show the truth of this statement. We will repeat the above table so far as to give the figures of the vote for the prohibitory amendment, and in the second column the third party vote for its own state ticket, for the same year:

	For Prohibition.	For Third Party.
Massachusetts (1889)	109,783	8,251	(1886)
Rhode Island (1887)	15,100	1,895	(1887)
Ohio (1883)	323,189	8,362	(1883)
Iowa	155,436	518	(1880)
Kansas	92,302	8,094	(1886)
Michigan (1887)	178,636	25,179	(1886)
Oregon (1887)	19,973	2,775	(1886)
Tennesee (1887)	117,504	1,131	(1874)
Totals	1,211,998	79,264

In Massachusetts, Rhode Island and Ohio we have given the votes in the same year as the vote on the prohibitory amendment. In the other states, we have given the votes cast at the latest election of which we have the figures.

But what does this comparison show? That in these the states, out of the total number of voters who favored prohibition by their ballots, only 6½ per cent. are in favor of separate political action, or are willing to affiliate with the third party. To put it in different form, for every voter for the third party, there are fourteen who will not do so.

In the light of this showing, the Lever's assertion is supremely ridiculous, that these voters will necessarily be for Fisk next November. Is it not rather cheeky, to speak informally, for the one prohibionist who favors separate political action to insist that the other prohibitionists who favor non-partisan action shall come over to his view, or be charged with lack of patriotism, lack of self-respect, and other unpleasant things? Is not such a course on the part of the one against the fourteen highly suggestive of an attempt of the tail to wag the dog?

We ask our readers, is it to be supposed that of the 1,211,998 prohibitionists whose votes are tabulated above, there are but 79,264 who are consistent and sincere? Are we to suppose that fourteen out of every fifteen are fools, not knowing their own minds? On the contrary, is it not more likely that the one is mistaken in his view as to the best method of reaching prohibition? than that the fourteen are?

The Blade most earnestly believes that the work of prohibition is being pushed as rapidly as the growth of public sentiment warrants, and the work that is crying to be done is not the formation of a separate party but the pushing of the warfare against rum. There are fourteen prohibitionists who believe in the non-partisan plan of work to one who uses his energies to the upbuilding of a new party. The first and most evident work the latter are doing is the arousing of political pejudice against prohibition; for by their fraudulent effort to include in their ranks the vast majority of prohibitionists who do not affiliate with it, they are but putting obstacles in the way of the union of all prohibitionists in the mighty effort to Pulverize the Rum Power.

Fully alive to the demands of the age in which we live and keeping pace with its progress the Exposition management are preparing a multiplicity of attractions, with which to delight the public eye. In these days of reform nothing has excited more universal attention than the improved methods of educating the young in the art of housekeeping, and all that pertains thereto. In the days of yore, the schools were separated from the home life entirely, the common education embracing only the simplest studies, there being no attempt made to teach the scholar what he or she should eat, drink or wear, or how to prepare articles of food or clothing; such matters being left to the already over-burdened mothers, with the natural result of preventing much improvement as comes from a comparison of methods, and an analysis of results, which is made possible under the system now in vogue in our public schools. The prominent high schools of the United States now include in their course of studies the art of cooking, the manufacture of wearing apparel, and wood and iron working. The Exposition will show on Ladies' Day, Sept. 20, whether the scientific instruction of the modern school which gives to us angel cake and orange pudding, and like delicacies, is of greater benefit to mankind than the home instruction which provided the the good old time molasses gingerbread and Indian pudding. The grandmothers and mothers must look to it, and not be distanced by the modern girl.

A Dollar a Bushel.

Pioneer Press.

A dollar a bushel is the old familiar price at which the farmer was satisfied to see wheat selling at Chicago. There was many a year when prices went far above that mark, but under it there was a general belief that wheat would not continue to be raised and sold in large quantities. For several seasons past a dollar a bushel, however, has represented a vanished joy and a forlorn hope. Supplies everywhere increased faster than demand. The great Northwest added millions and tens of millions to its product, the Russian output was undiminished, and the fields of India came in to the competition. A succession of good crops everywhere found the market overstocked, and the immense quantities of grain carried over from year to year gave no opportunity for prices to rally through a reduction of supply. The resulting trial to the wheat grower was a severe one. He found the price of his product so little above the actual cost of production that only the most pinching economy enabled him to keep above water. It is with a satisfaction all the more intense by reason of this long time of self-denial that he now sees prices moving backward toward the figure which he had begun to class with the other good things of auld lang syne. Chicago wheat hovers in a persistent sort of fashion about 90 cents, and the bulls in the market are confident that before the holidays, they will be able to make once more the old quotation of $1 a bushel.

It will not be well for the farmers to be too confiding. The strong advance in wheat has encouraged the speculative tendency which years of heavy losses had quelled. The bouyancy of prices, their constant reaction from decline, and advance toward a still higher figure, is partly artificial. But the argument in favor of good prices is a very strong one. It does not depend upon the fanciful rumors of European wars which are about on the street. Nor is it even, for the most part, the result of poor crops abroad, although these are certainly below the mark, and that of Great Britain threatens to be almost an entire failure. It has a still more substantial foundation. Demand, in these years of depression, has had an opportunity to overtake the increase of supply. Ever since the market became overstocked, wheat production has felt the check. If it increased in the sections where new lands were opened up, it gave place in older communities to other forms of agricultural industry. Meantime, the population and the wants of the world were growing in the usual ratio. The great stocks of wheat that had accumulated in the principal trade centers were slowly but surely drawn down. Now this country is credited with a crop considerably below that of recent years, while the foreign shortage promises to be real and considerable in amount. The New York Times notes that, in 1879, one of the last years of boom prices, cash wheat in Chicago ranged from 83½ to 88¾ cents per bushel, rose from 85 cents to $1.06 in September, touched $1.21 in October, and went to 133½ in December. And now, in August of 1888, the Chicago quotation for No. 2 wheat is 90 cents. Although he would be a very unwise husbandman who should refuse to sell his crop at a fair price on such an uncertain promise as this, still it is by no means impossible this season, as it has been for so many in the past, that the country should be gladdened by the return of the market to a dollar a bushel. The fact of most importance to the Northwest is that, in a year when it has raised a fair average crop, the price is already such as will bring to the producers, millions of dollars more than they have received; and that there is no probability of a return to the low prices of the recent past. It means such a season of prosperity for this section as it has not known since the great drop in the price of cereals.

Verndale Journal: We do not believe that a great number of republicans are going to desert Mr. Comstock and vote for Charles Canning, the probable democratic nominee for congress. They have no valid reason for so doing, and republicans as a rule, are averse to voting against the party without good reasons. Mr. Comstock is a man of excellent character, ability, experience and an earnest advocate of the principles which have made the republican party illustrious. He believes in protection to American industries and American workmen, but he is not the friend of monopolies nor in favor of an unreasonable and unjust tariff. In opposing free trade and the impoverishment of American laborers, he is certainly in line with the right-minded people of this district and of the entire state of Minnesota. Republicans in standing firm for Mr. Comstock, will honor themselves and the party to which they belong. We believe they will do so.

Minnesota's Wheat Crop.

From all reports at hand the conviction is forced upon us that the wheat crop of Minnesota this fall has suffered severely from blight. In the Northwest the cause of the damage will be laid at the door of Jack Frost, and he will get more credit than we think is his due. While there is no doubt but that he got in his work on some pieces of wheat that were in the milk, we think the reason those pieces were not far enough along to be out of danger, is due to rust, and this wheat never would have been good if no frost had come. We have before us as we write, samples of wheat taken from adjoining sections, the one so badly shrivelled and shrunk as to be fit for nothing, unless it may be good for feed; the other sample is just as good wheat as was ever raised in the county. On the former the rust is apparent, on the latter there is none perceptible. We know of one piece where the frost was not heavy enough to injure cucumber vines, and the wheat resembles the first sample we speak of—shrunken, soft and not fit for anything but feed, if that. From all that we can learn of the condition of wheat since cutting, we think that our estimate of only one-fourth destroyed was too light by at least one-half, and we do not expect the average yield will exceed one-half our usual crop. We still think, however, that what wheat we have will leave about the usual amount of money in the county, and that next year, if crops are good, the farmer will be well rewarded for all these years of anxious toiling he has endured. If history repeats itself (as we are led to believe is the case) the farmer has reason to hope for bright times in the near future.

Harvest is well under way now. The average yield will, no doubt, be a trifle lighter than last year. The late frost did not hurt the grain any in Woodside, but we hear of its having done considerable damage in adjoining towns. STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

We never have seen a fall in this country yet that the benefits of diversified husbandry were not made unmistakably plain, and this one is no exception. Southern Minnesota would have been utterly bankrupt years ago had it not been for the cow, and, to-day, the farmers there are thanking their lucky stars that they have the dairy to depend upon in this crisis. Supposing the farmer here, who has lost all his wheat from blight, had had 15 or 20 good Holstein or Jersey cows that had given him all summer from 1½ to 2 lbs. of butter per day, instead of having none, as nine-tenths of them are situated, or, if they do have cows at all, the majority of them are such as do not pay their way. Some farmers will claim that they are not able to go into good stock, yet many of these very farmers have from six to twenty cows, none of which has ever really paid the cost of her keep. Far better would it be to dispose of every hoof on the place and get one or two good cows, and thus grow into a good herd, than to keep on year after year raising runts that do not pay their keep. Even the cows of the country could be improved with proper care, yet how many farmers have we who ever take any pains to secure the services of a thoroughbred of a dairy breed, and thus make the most of what we have to do with? We have a few farmers who take pains to get good stock, and we have yet to see one who has gone to work intelligently, who will not tell you that he is making money. It requires brains, just as it requires brains to manage any business successfully. It requires more brains to make a successful breeder than it does to make a simple wheat-raiser, but your simple wheat-raiser is never your successful farmer, and if any man has an idea that a successful farmer can be made without brains, there is right where he makes his grand mistake. But, you say, does it not require some capital, as well, to start a big stock farm? It certainly does require capital to build up a fine dairy herd in a year or so, but it does not require so much as one would think to improve upon the cow, that you already have, and all that one need to do is to exercise the very same care in relation to his cows that he does with his horses, to work a very marked improvement upon the herds of the country in a very few years. What would you think of a man who would rather use a scrub sire at $5 than a thoroughbred horse that would cost him $20 to $25? You would say at once that he was either an idiot or crazy, and yet how many really intelligent farmers are there who use no better judgment with their cows? If the principle of thoroughbred horses is good for anything, the same holds good with cows, and the expense is far less, never exceeding five dollars. Cows that will make two pounds of butter per day are not uncommon cows in this age of improvement, yet how many of such cows can be found in Polk County? How many farmers are there in Polk County who have ever patiently and intelligently tried to obtain such cows? How many are there who, by actual test, can tell what each individual cow in his herd pays him per year? If you ask that question in relation to his horses, probably nine-tenths of our farmers could give you an intelligent and practical answer. Why should not the farmer require his cows to give an account of themselves, just as much as he does his horses? In the present age of sharp competition every animal produced upon the farm must be of the very best to pay a proper dividend, and the cow is certainly no exception to the general rule. That the farmer who raises scrub cows is fooling away his time and money, has been so often demonstrated that the wonder is that any can be found content to plod along in the old rut without a care or thought for improvement; and yet there are, and these very men furnish examples that you hear quoted when you hear the expression, "there is no money in stock!" The experience of every intelligent breeder in the United States shows that there is money in stock only when intelligently handled.

What Fisher Will Do.

He Will go with the Duluth & Winnipeg Railway Company.

Minneapolis Tribune.

Duluth Sep. 2—[Special]—It is positively stated here by personal friends of Vice President Fisher, of the St. Paul & Duluth railway, that as soon as his connection with the road is severed he will at once assume charge of the work of constructing the Duluth & Winnipeg railway, filling at the same time the offices of president, general manager and superintendent of construction. Work on this latter road, it is expected, will commence about Sept. 15.

Duluth Evening Herald: Gen. Dick Taylor, one of the best-known generals in the Confederate army, in an article explaining the defeat of the rebellion said: "We made two great mistakes. Had we avoided them we should have conquered you. The first was we did not substantially destroy the protective features of the tariff in the winter session of 1857 and 1858, by an act which provided a rapid sliding scale to free trade. * * * * We should have passed such a law and held it tight on you till it closed the furnaces, workshops, woolen and cotton mills, and steel and bar iron works of the whole North and West, and scattered your workmen over the prairies and territories. When the war was ready for you, you would not have been ready for the war. You could not have armed and equipped and put into the field a large army, nor built a large navy. You would have been without supplies, machinery and workmen, and you would have been without money and credit."

Interesting to all Writers.

'Does Literature pay?" is a question asked and answered by Eugene L. Didier in the September number of the The Writer (Boston). Other bright and interesting articles in the same number of the magazine are: "Newspaper social Personals," by Kate Brownlee Sherwood; "The Ruler of Criticism," by S. S. Kingdon; "The Story of Rejected Manuscript," by E. B. Cheesborough: "New York Newspapers," by Charles Fiske; and "Two Common Errors," by William T. Brigham. The Writer admirable fulfils its purpose of being helpful and interesting to all literary workers, and each number is filled with practical hints and suggesting about the details of literary work that are well worth many times the price of the magazine to all who write. The September number is peculiarly rich in such matter. The Writer is published monthly by William H. Hills and Robert Luce, both on the editorial staff of the Boston Globe, and numbers many prominent literary people among its contributors. It cost ten cents a month or one dollar a year. Free Trade is Unjust to the Farmer.

Exchange: The advocates of free trade are especially earnest in their appeals to the western farmer, as the voter most likely to furnish aid in overturning the existing fiscal policy of this country and once more trying that of England. In their efforts to this end they are untiring, ingenious, unscrupulous. No possible resort remains untried, no illustration unused, no appeal long neglected. They seek to inflame the worthy ambition to better one's condition in life by picturing a mythical market which is at once the cheapest for the buyer and the dearest for the seller. The seek to create sectional prejudice by persistent repetitions in speeches and writings of the antithesis "western farmers," "eastern manufactures"—just as if the west had no manufactures, the east no agriculture. They ignore the common sense inference that, if the people of the United States paid the duty on foreign competing articles sold in this country, the foreigners would be by no means so persistent for the removal of our tariff. In view of such tactics it will be well for farmers to keep in mind certain facts which with practical men are likely to outweigh all the theories of British free traders and their attorneys in the United States.

Money is necessary to the existence of government. Under our fiscal system the main reliance of States, counties and municipalities is upon taxation of property—the exception being the sale of license for carrying certain lines of business. Money raised by taxation comes from owners of factories, machinery and other personal property, as well as from farms and farm equipments, and is the price paid by the owners for defence of their rights in property and the peaceable pursuit of the buiness of their choice.

To exempt any one man's property from taxation would be an injustice to all compelled to pay taxes. Yet this is just what free trade proposes to do. American owners of farms, machinery etc., are to be taxed, while the same rights they enjoy are to be given free to others—to men who owe no allegiance to our government and who seek profits from trade here to be spent in other countries.

Hay, barley, wheat, wool, etc., are grown in large quantities by Canadian farmers who never paid a cent of taxes toward the support of the government. If these men prefer to send their products here to be sold in our markets, why should they not be taxed, at least as much as our farmers are taxed, for the privilege? But the free trader says no, let the foreigner have our markets without cost, although American farmer's taxes need to be increased in consequence, and then complacently suggests that if growing such articles under this one-sided arrangement proves unprofitable for our farmers to turn their attention to some other productions.

Protection insures for our own citizens not only the first, but always the best, chance in the markets in the country they have helped to build up. This is both patriotism and good business policy. Its opposite is the un-American policy advocated by the President and other free trade advocates, and for which they have received the plaudits of the Cobden Club and every prominent journal in Great Britain. It remains to be seen if a majority of American farmers agree with them.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Monday August 27.

SENATE.—Mr. Plumb, from the committee on public lands, reported back the senate bill to forfeit lands granted to the state of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Marquette to Ontonagon, and gave notice that in a few days he would call it up for consideration.

A new conference on the army appropriation bill was agreed to and Senators Allison, Plumb and Gorman were appointed conferees.

Mr. Davis, of Massachusetts introduced a resolution requesting the president to communicate to the house copies of all communications addressed by his direction to the government of Great Britain, remonstrating against the breach of the treaty of 1871, whereby Great Britain promised to the United States equality in the matter of canal transportation, and the replies of Great Britain to such communications.

HOUSE.—Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, and Mr. Bynum, of Indiana, indulged in some rather lively personalities in regard to the statement recently made by the latter gentleman that Levi P. Morton, while a member of the Forty-sixth congress, had voted in favor of a motion to lay on the table a bill to enforce the provisions of the eight hour law. The fact was developed that, according to the Record, Mr. Morton had voted as stated by Mr. Bynum, but according to the journal of the house Mr. Morton had not voted at all.

Tuesday, August 28.

SENATE—The resolution offered by Mr Hoar last Friday, calling on the president for all correspondence between the United States and Great Britian in regard to the fisheries trouble, together with the amendment offered by Mr. Edmunds, were agreed to.

Representative Mason offered a resolution citing the fact that the administration of the treasury department had deposited with the national banks without drawing a cent of interest $60,000,000, worth to the banks, at 5 per cent per annum, at least $10,000 per day, and calling for an investigation to ascertain if the charge that the banks were making large contributions to the Democratic campaign fund as an indirect consideration for this privilege.

HOUSE.—The house spent considerable time in debate over the question as to whether members should be granted leave of absence, in order that they might take part in the campaign. The question came up on a request for leave by Mr. Grosvenor, in order that he might fill engagements to speak in Maine. His request was finally granted.

He also furnished a table to show that the expenditures of the government for the four years of Mr. Cleveland's administration exceed by $95,000,000 the expenditures for the four years of Mr. Garfield's and Mr. Arthur's administration.

In the closing portion of his speech he stated that the total appropriations for the current fiscal year, not including what are called tht "permanent appropriations," would amoune to $300,000,000; that, including the permanent appropriations, they would amount to $421,000,000 and that the estimated revenue would be $440,000,000, or only $10,000,000 more than the expenditures. Both the receipts and the expenditures of the postoffice department are included.

Mr. Holman, of Indiana, introduced a bill to suspend all laws touching the disposal of public lands except the homestead law.

Wednesday, Aug. 29.

SENATE.—In the Senate Mr. Reagan introduced a bill to place imported jute bagging on the free list, which was referred to the committee on finance. The measure, he said, was intended to break up the cotton bagging "trust," which struck at one of the great interests of the country—cotton—that had no protection and had to compete in the markets of the world with cotton from other countries.

HOUSE.—A joint resolution to provide temporarily (until Sept. 15) for the expenses of the government covered by appropriations in the sundry civil and army appropriation bills was passed by the House.

The house in committee of the whole resumed consideration of the bill to provide for the printing of government securities in the highest style of art, and to be done by hand instead of steam presses. After some discussion, the clause in the bill requiring the chief of the bureau of engraving and printing, and his assistants to be either practical engravers or practical printers, was stricken out. Mr. Burns, of Missouri, supported the bill on the ground that work done by steam presses could be more easily counterfeited than that done by hand presses, and the bill as amended, was reported to the house, and passed.

The subcommittee of the House committee on foreign affairs completed their work of perfecting the Wilson bill, giving the President additional power under the retaliation act. The completed bill will be submitted to the full committee, and members of the committee say the bill will likely be reported to the House tomorrow and acted upon without delay.

Thursday, August 30.

SENATE.—Mr. Cullom addressed the Senate on the retaliation message. He spoke of the United States being destined to dominate the American continent, and expressed the opinion that in the not far distant future the Canadian provinces would become a part of the United States.

Senator Dolph, from the committee on public lands, to-day reported favorably a bill to declare a forfeiture of all lands except right of way and station grounds granted to the Northern Pacific railway company, which appertain to, and are coterminous with that part of the road's line which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of the bill.

In the speech on the fortifications bill Senator Plumb made the grave charge that under the present arrangement no gun could be accepted or even built unless the present board of army officers had approved and, indeed, originated every plan and specification. This discourages all manufacturers from taking any hand in attempting to improve our armament.

HOUSE.—The House committee on foreign affairs made quick work of the President's message and the Wilson retaliation bill—so quick, indeed, that when its author, Judge Wilson, of Minnesota, ran up stairs with an amendment in his hand, which he and Secretary Fairchild had framed, he was informed that the committee had finished its task and adjourned, having agreed to report a substitute measure. The committee meeting was presided over by Mr. Belmont.

The minority report on the investigation of the government printing office was presented by Dr. Gallinger, of New Hampshire, to-day.

Friday Aug. 31.

SENATE—Mr. Stewart asked the unanimous consent of the senate that the bill for the admission of the State of Washington be taken up at 2 o'clock Monday and continued until disposed of. Mr. Riddleberger objected. Mr. Stewart gave notice that as that bill is now the "unfinished business" he would on Monday insist upon its consideration.

Senator Allison chairman of the subcommittee of the senate committee on finance having in charge the preparation of a tariff bill, gives notice that parties who wish a hearing before the committee must make their appearance within ten days.

The senate passed the fortifications bill without a division, rejecting Mr. Hawley's amendment, and in that way destroying all hope of the adoption of the provisions now in the army bill regarding the proposed constructions of guns at Watervliet arsenal.

Senator Harris, from the committee on epidemic diseases, reported to-day a substitute for the bill prepared by the treasury department to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases from one state to another. It authorizes rules and regulations to prevent the spread from one state or territory to another of cholera, yellow fever, smallpox, or plague and to employ inspectors and other persons to carry the regulations into effect. It is made a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and imprisonment, to violate the regulations.

HOUSE—The House agreed to the conference report on the civil sundry appropriation bill. It then considered the amendments upon which an agreement had not been reached. The House insisted in its disagreement relative to the Senate amendment.

The house committee on manufactures, investigating the subject of trusts, began an inquiry in to the alleged cotton bagging trust. Anderson Gratz of St. Louis, a member of the bagging cotton tie firm of Warren, Jones & Gratz, having a large branch manufactory at Muncie, Ind., testified that there are now but eight firms in the country engaged in the manufacture of cotton bagging ties, against fifteen at this time last year. The testimony was unimportant.

Sioux Indians Changing Front.

A special telegram from Crow Creek Agency, Aug. 30, says: There is every prospect that when the commissioners are ready to take signatures there will be a break in favor of it. Many young and intelligent fellows declare openly that they will not be prevented from signing by threats or bulldozing. They say the bill is as good as they could get and that if they reject this one the next one will be much worse. They realize that the Sioux bill offers them greater school privileges than has ever before been offered to an Indian nation and they are satisfied with it.

At a council a number of speeches were made for and against the bill by the Indians, those who object being by very nature, opposed to any advancement, and who were rather be poor Indians than rich white men. Those who are opposed to anything that would in any respect raise them from their present indolent, shiftless and improvident custom.

It is noticeable that those who object, are men over 40 years of age, although not all over that age object by any means. The younger element, however, is about unanimous in favor of it. But they are making a still hunt. They have said but little in their own council in favor of the bill, but they do their work quietly and will be heard in no uncertain terms when the proper time comes. Maj. Anderson made an impressive speech to the Indians. He explained that those who are working against the ratification of the Sioux bill were doing so for an evil purpose. They were working for their ends, regardless of the welfare of the great masses of the Indians and should not be listened to for a minute. He mentioned names and spoke in decided terms and made a marked impression on the Indians. He said that what was for the benefit of all the Indians was what they should consider, and this bill was all that any one could ask for. It provided for them better by far than any other bill has ever done, and an opportunity for improving their condition such as this afforded should not be ignored.

Judge Wright then made an eloquent speech, calling upon the Indians to listen to the voice of the great father, and he asked them who had furnished them with clothing for the past 20 years? Who had built them houses, furnished them with rations, with horses, with harnesses, with schools, and everything they needed? Was it the men who were now urging them to turn their faces from the Sioux bill or was it the President? He said that since the ratification of the present treaty the government had spent $30,000,000 upon the Sioux nation and asked them if this was an evidence of friendship or enmity, that they should consider fully the cost if they refused to take advantage of this new treaty.

There is an indication of a favorable break on the part of the obstructionists, caused to a great extent by the determined stand of the young men, which is bolstering up many who were inclined to yield to the threats made.

A Murderer Caught.

Deputy Sheriff Barnes of Fargo brought from Hillsboro a man named Ruse, a desperate character, whom he arrested there. He is wanted at Kokomo, Ind., for the murder of a man named Perkins last April. After committing the murder Ruse made his escape, and officers of the law have been searching for him through Kansas, Texas and other states ever since. A short time ago they discovered a clue which led them to believe he had come to Dakota, and was working in the neighborhood of Grandin under the name of L. H. Hock. Sheriff Wright of Kokomo arrived here, and made known his mission to Sheriff Benton, who sent Deputy Barnes to assist him in his search at Grandin. They learned that a man by the name of Hock had been working there, but had recently moved to Hillsboro. With this clue they proceeded to Hillsboro, where they found the man in the employ of O. C. Sarles, who had employed him to look after horses. It was then late at night and Ruse was asleep in the barn. Knowing him to be a desperate character the officers sent a veterinary surgeon to arouse him and get him in the stable on a pretext of giving medicine to a sick horse. While the two men were in the stall Deputy Barnes and the town marshal suddenly entered and seized and handcuffed him. When he saw Sheriff Wright he immediately recognized him and confessed the murder. He is now in the Cass county jail, and will be taken back to Indiana as soon as a requisition can be secured. Ruse suspected Perkins of being criminally intimate with his wife, and last April he found them together in a wood and shot Perkins five times, killing him instantly.

Yellow Fever Excitement.

Although the noon reports from Jacksonville, shows eighteen new cases and twelve suspects, the fever has been momentarily forgotten in the wild excitement caused by Surgeon General Hamilton's order not to pass Jacksonville refugees beyond Way Cross. At a citizens' meeting the surgeon general was handled without gloves. Condemnatory resolutions were passed and sent the Florida representatives in congress, who were urged to at once place the matter before the president. There are hundreds of women and children still at Jacksonville who are offered asylums in the mountains of Georgia, but on account of this order are unable to leave. It is thought that some modification of the order will be made at once. After the official report had been sent out Thomas Ryan died at Sand Hills. The number of patients discharged is uncertain, but it is positively known that at least 115 persons are still under treatment. Two trained and experienced nurses were sent here from Savannah by the Savannah, Florida & Western Railroad company to nurse J. Stephens, the company's agent, who was reported better.

Surgeon General Hamilton of Washington has received the following telegram from J. J. Daniel, president of the Jacksonville Citizens' Auxiliary association:

In the name of our people, and humanity, I protest against the order for the detention of all refugees from our city and state at the refugee camp. It would be better for us to keep our women and children here rather than subject them to such treatment.

Dr. Hamilton sent the following reply:

Your requisition for 200 tents was approved. You are mistaken as to character of camp, which is in charge of one of the most humane officers in the service, and none in the country stands higher as to professional ability. The camp is located in one of the healthiest places in Florida pine woods on the river bluff, originally intended by the railroad as picnic grounds, and taken by Dr. Guiteras as the best place for his camp. He was some days ago directed to have some tents set apart, quarter of a mile distant from main camp, for observation of persons sick. Pollard, returned to Jacksonville, was sick on arrival at camp—evidently had fever when he left Jacksonville. With the general spread of the disease in Jacksonville it is useless to expect that persons should be allowed to mingle on outgoing trains. Special excursion trains will be provided for passengers to definite points. Murphy, in North Carolina, has opened its doors the only place so reporting itself to me. If residents wish to go to Murphy or any definite point in Western North Carolina, on their parole not to go to seaboard or quarantined towns within ten days from date of departure from Jacksonville, excursion trains will be forwarded as soon as number of trains required can be definitely ascertained.

Dr. Hamilton also sent a dispatch to Gov. Perry, informing him that the general removal of quarantine regulations would simply spread the disease and render useless existing measures of relief.

Charles Johnson, a Norwegian, was found dead in bed at Lisbon, Dak., with his skull split open, face and head badly bruised and bed saturated with blood. The night before some tramps broke into his house and demanded some alcohol, but failed to get any. It is supposed the same men made a second raid and murdered the old man. He lived alone.

S. E. Clark of Appleton, Wis., is trying to form a syndicate to purchase 116,000 acres of land in Florida. The land is sold for $1 per acre, and is claimed to be covered with pine. He has succeeded in raising half of the $116,000, nearly all the Wisconsin prominent lumbermen having an interest.

On the 31st of August, the contract with the state of Minnesota for prison labor expired and the Minnesota Thresher company commences work next day with citizen laborers. The company will be permitted to use the shops inside the prison wall for a short time and until General Manager Fogle can get shops fixed up on the outside. The sash, door and blind factory belonging to the company on the outside is about ready for use.

A twelve-year-old son of Dr. Christianson of Belmont, Dak., accidently shot himself, dying almost instantly. A sportsman happened some distance from his fowling piece when the little fellow in a playful mood hid the gun among some bushes. Upon the return of the owner the boy ran to get it, and when withdrawing it from the bushes the gun was discharged, the contents penetrating the lungs of the lad, killing him instantly.

The losses by the Michigan forest fires are now estimated at $60,000 to $75,000. The homeless people are being sheltered and fed by those who saved their homes. They will require assistance to rebuild.

A disastrous prairie fire is raging in Northern Montana, extending from Maria's river to Sweet Grass hills, fifty miles. The ranch of the Benton Cattle company has been destroyed with a large amount of hay. Unless rain comes the fire will cover immense tracts of country.

The examination of William Rose, the supposed murderer of Moses Lafkin, was concluded, the hearing occupying two days at Lamberton, Minn., no bail being accepted. Rose was bound over to await the fall term of court and lodged in jail at New Ulm.

Ellis Kahn, a German cigarmaker, sixty-one years old, of New York, is supposed to have killed his wife at her home, and then cut his own throat. He also inflicted a dangerous wound in his abdomen and cut his wrists badly, from which wounds he cannot recover. The affair is wrapped in mystery.

Charles I. De Baum, the absconding assistant cashier of the Park National bank New York, who stole $110,000, was arrested in Canada by Detective Sheldon, of Inspector Byrnes' staff, within 200 feet of the American line. Extradition papers are on the way from Washington to bring him back.

Coll and McIntyre, the horse thieves who were arrested at Cooperstown, Dakota, a few days since, had their hearing before Judge Devoy. They waived examination and were held to appear before the grand jury in $1,000 each.

Counsel McNaught, of the Northern Pacific, received a telegram at St. Paul informing him of the ratification of the contract by the Manitoba legislature, and was consequently in a very smiling mood. He had prophesied the vote as 28 to 0, and thought he made a pretty close estimate. The actual vote bring 27 to 10. No attention was paid to proposals of St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba by Greenway, who declared they were simply a bluff.

A letter has been received at the general land office from Nebraska making the inquiry whether a Chinaman who has been in this country twelve years and has declared his intention of becoming a citizen can make an original homestead entry. A reply has been prepared stating that under section 2169 of the Revised Statutes a Chinaman cannot become a citizen and therefore the entry in question cannot be made.

PALMISTRY.

From the Boston Courier.

"Pray read my hand," he said with a smile,
As they sat in the parlor bright,
"And I will read yours; it will serve to while
The moments away to-night."

She took his hand, and its lines she scanned,
Then wide she opened her eyes:
"You're in love, I see, with a girl, said she,
About my age and size.

"You've loved her long, and your love is strong,
The lines of your hand disclose;
And you'd ask her to be your wife, but I see
That you're afraid to propose.

"But you need not fear, for 'tis written here,"
The maiden fair went on,
As the palm she scanned, "to ask her hand,
For her heart is already won."

Then the youth proposed, and with cheek rose hued,
She answered, "Yes," with a smile;
And a season of osculation ensued
In regular Down East style.

LITTLE DICK

A Story of War Times.

BY MONTGOMERY M. FOLSOM.

From the Atlanta, Ga., Constitution.

Poor old Widow Loring! A hard time she had of it. Her husband, a rowdy and the bully of the settlement, had given up the ghost some years prior to the breaking out of the war, and left her with five sons and one frail daughter, to the mercies of a cold and cruel world.

"Aunt 'Mima," we were taught to call her, was a gaunt and grizzled specimen of a cracker woman, uncouth in dress, uncultured in speech, but a truer, braver heart never upheld the honest dignity of motherhood than the seared and oft grief-stricken heart of Aunt 'Mima Loring.

She had had trouble when her husband was alive. She had spent many a sleepless night when her neglectful lord was indulging in the wild orgies of the crossroads grocery's biggest carousal. Every time the owl would hoot from his perch in the great pine tree in the lonely woods her heart would leap and she would expect to hear the rough "hello!" at the gate from some drunken companion come to tell her that Ebenezer was killed or badly hurt.

Not unfrequently she would be greeted instead with a kick at the rough shutter, and a demand to open it, coupled with muttered curses, when the old man came home drunk.

It was almost a betterment to Aunt 'Mima when Ebenezer fell sick, and laid down in his bed and died, while she was near to minister to his wants. It was a partial relief to her to feel that she had the poor consolation of closing those bleared eyes when the ashen pallor of death smoothed out the scars and splotches on that bearded face, and the snowy pinion of the spirit of peace at last touched those features so long seamed and furrowed by warring passions.

Of the boys, there was young Eben, hale and hearty, the image of his father, when first Aunt 'Mima danced with him at the party after the quilting and log-rolling day, so long ago. Mack came next, a stout comely lad, very much reserved, and almost industrious. Riley was tall and slender, like his mother in form, but like his father, a wild sort of fellow in disposition. Hamp came fourth among the boys, but Betty was older than he. Hamp was a blockheaded, stupid sort of lad, fond of trapping for birds and fishing in Grand bay, as the big black swamp, back of the little plantation, was called. And then, there was Little Dick.

I need not tell you that the hog-weeds and the fennels and the blackberry briars covered the greater part of the little clearing among the swamps and barrens. Elbenezer had started out with a big heart, and had fenced in a farm of forty acres, and he had cultivated it several years in the slovenly, ranger fashion, but after he whipped the Irish ditcher, who challenged him for a fisticuff muster day, he began to feel his importance, and the neglect of the farm and the running about with shiftless and brawling companions soon proved disastrous to the farm interests.

Aunt Mima and the boys tried to cultivate the ground "an' make a crap," as they said, but their efforts were rendered abortive by the frequency with which the old man swapped horses. Sometimes he would swap for a spavined horse in plow time, and then there was nothing for it but the hoe. Poor woman! The drops of sweat with which she watered that barren soil, and the tears with which she watered her dreary life!

When the war come Eben, Mack and Riley had all grown up to manhood, and might have supported their mother handsomely, but their father's shiftless career seemed to militate against them, and they generally came out at the end of the year with scarce nubbin corn enough for bread, and the yellow cow peas, and the stringy potatoes were hardly equal to the emergency of straightening out the lean flanks of the few bundles of bone and bristle, known as "piney-woods rooters," and sometimes mistaken for hogs.

Nevertheless, by the aid of the good mother, and the scrawny looking slip of a sister, they managed to live. Then came a war. Aunt Mima and Betty spun and wove the cloth from which Eben's first uniform of gray mixed cloth was made, and the strong, sturdy fellow was not sorry that he had a chance of "Gittin' out o' henscratch o' the house," as he expressed it. Riley and Mack soon followed, and the beams of the old loom trembled as the shuttle flew back and forth turning its strokes to the rythmic drone of the busy spinning wheel. They were busy, Aunt Mima and Betty, weaving a suit for Hamp, and all too soon the call came. The hungry call for more troops. The blood curdling howl of the famished dogs of war. "More men! More men!" And when the men were torn and rent asunder, the last, most heartrending demand came, "Give us your boys! Give us your boys."

Ah, the war, the war! Not satisfied with the blood of men, the tender forms of cherished boyhood—all—all must go. Not content with the yellow grain, the tender stalk, while yet in the milk, must be cut down. The flower of the south was plucked and trampled under the iron heel of relentless war, and now the gaunt, bloody hand was extended to cull the half blown bud, the hope of the land!

Four boys gone marching away to die for a cause, the justness of which the poor widow was unable to argue. What did she care for the doctrine of states rights? How could the perpetuation or abolition of slavery affect her? Her four boys were gone marching away, marching away. Not with plumes waving and victorious banners floating in the breeze. No, not triumphant and flushed with hope. They had gone marching away into the jaws of grim death, to fill the breach in the lines by the Potomac's crimsoned flood. Marching away with flopping cloth hats and mixed gray uniforms of homespun, and ill-fitting shoes of red leather, your boys had gone, marching away, marching away.

Eben was killed in the wilderness, Riley died in prison, Hamp died of exhaustion and the hardships of the northern climate, while following Jeb. Stuart in his wild rides over mountain and valley.

Ah, you that are thrilled with stirring emotions when you read how that knightly commander, bearded and booted, rode forward down into battle witn a song on his lips—

"When the dew is on the blossom."

Little think ye how many brave boyish hearts swelled up into their throats at the thought of widowed mothers among the barrens.

Mack came home. He was brought on the cars to the nearest station, and then hauled in a cart to his home in the piney woods. Only the poor shattered wreck of a man came home, and she had watched four stout lads go marching away.

"I haint got but two now, an' Mack, poor feller, I'm afeared he'll never see the blackberry blossoms ag'in. He was ter'bly wounded at the start an' them hospitle nusses thest in a manner made it wuss. Then here's Little Dick, God sen' they won't want my baby boy."

But they did. They wanted the baby boy. The hungry war dogs must snap and snarl over the weakly frame of Little Dick, too.

How well I remember the weakly looking lad! Five feet, scant at that, slender and boyish. Two great hollow eyes set in a pinched, pale face, the unattractiveness of which was heightened by a thin, scattered head of sun-scorched hair. A little whitish, fuzzy down on cheek and chin, where the beard should have appeared had the surroundings given more encouragement. Colorless complexion, save the sallow cast of sunburn, and a few blue veins up under the brim of his flopped hat. The ill-fitting clothes hung about his person, and the boys said that he used to have to drag his musket when out of breath on a long march.

Poor Aunt Mima! She left the bedside where the body of her emaciated boy lay in inert and indifferent prostration between life and death, the manly tones of voice dwindled down to a querrelous treble, and the animated look changed to the vacant nerveless stare of hopelessness. She left this sorrowful scene to enfold in a fond embrace the puny form of her baby boy. Great tears chased one another down the bosom of the ill-fitting jacket, and kisses rained on the sun-burned cheek until the lips, parched with grief, were no longer able to drop the holy dew of a mother's love on the pale cheek of her baby boy. Betty wept, and prayed, and hugged Little Dick to her bosom—that bosom on which his baby locks had oft been pillowed.

She it was who first taught the baby to walk, and then to talk. She had said "Lony, now fur titter, Dick," and Dick had tried his spindle legs, and found out the secret of erect locomotion. She had said, "Mammy, say mammy, fur titter, Little Dick," and Little Dick had croaked out a sort of gurgle that was interpreted as good English language by the fond sister.

"Good-bye Little Dick. Oh, my precious little buddy! Oh——"

Dick was gone. Two big tears plowed each a furrow down the sunbrowned cheek and hung trembling on the fuzzy chin like rain drops on the hairy calyx of a wild thistle. Dick was gone. Marching in straggling ranks with gray bearded men, too old for service, and other beardless boys too young to bear arms. The "State Troops!" What a satire on the pomp and glory of war, to call these weak kneed old men, and these weak armed boys, troops. But the hungry howl of the fierce dogs of war comes sweeping across the hills and valleys and echoes from crag to crag in the mountains.

Times were hard in Georgia. They were desperate in the piney woods. Hungry, hollow-eyed women went from house to house asking aid. A few slaveholders had corn and they gave it out in small quantities to the most needy. Sometimes bands of desperate women attacked a barn or commissary and carried off the contents. Rob the most docile animal of her young, slay her mate and then starve her, and see if the numbed faculties do not gradually, but surely, concentrate into the one wild instinct of self-preservation.

Poor old Aunt 'Mima! She would leave Betty at home and walk many miles across the desolate pine woods to secure the cracklings from the plantation fat gourd, or a little dribble of molasses in the old brown jug where Ebenezer used to keep the "sperits."

I remember seeing the good woman once with a handful of cracklings and a skirty piece of dried beef in her apron, and that jug under her arm. She had walked five miles, starting early, to secure these, and was now on her return, and two miles yet from home. The molasses had fermented under the heat of a July sun, and the corncob stopper had been forced out, and the foaming liquid was running out.

Do you suppose she let a drop go to waste? No, she caught it on her lean finger and licked the finger greedily, and talked of Mack and Little Dick.

"I hain't got time (swipe) to stop a minit (lick) but hit's jes awastin' (swipe) an' it do look so pitiful (lick) to see it go to waste, (swipe) an' them po' chidern asufferin' (lick(fur sumkin, ye gimme a leetle speck (swipe) no taller grease to put in it (lick) to keep hit f'om aworkin'?"

And then she sat down on the door-step to rest a minute, while the jug cooled.

"No I haint hearn nothin' from Little Dick sence he got in the mountains. I don't never spec to see him no more. Five boys have I sent to the war, an' one po' lifeless creeture is all I've got left; but oh, I musn't forgit to tell ye, Mack got that ball out'n his thigh to-day, drapped out. I do b'lieve the child's agwine to git well arter all."

And then she resumed her weary tramp through the woods. Mack and Betty managed to get along somehow, and the good old mother seemed to be insensible to fatigue. So it came about that when the broken fragments of Lee's brave legions came straggling homeward, that Mack was able to hobble out on his crutches, and lean on the rickety gate and hear the news from some tired veteran homeward bound. "The last I seed uv 'im," said a great, bearded warrior, in reply to Aunt 'Mima's question, "wus in one o' them fights around Alanty. We was whipped, as wegin'ly was long then, an' broke for a fence. Little Dick got to the fence an' we hollered to 'im to throw down his musket, but he helt on to it. I reckon he wus too skeered to un'stan. Any how he jes' kep holt on to it, an' wen he clumb up on the fence, a rail give way, an' so fell backwards, and then the Yankees fired so fast that there wern't no tellin' nothing' about it afterwards, an' we lost him."

The little crop was planted, the two women worked faithfully, and Mack hobbled about on his crutches and helped them all he could. Spring was come when the war closed. Summer days had waxed and waned before many of those inmates of northern prisons found their way back to the old familiar haunts.

The harvest was not great, but Aunt 'Mima and Betty felt that the millennium had come when they were able to sit down and eat a reasonably hearty meal of bread and bacon, after the wintery sun had veiled himself behind the rifts of watry clouds that hung above the tree tops. The long, long, war was over. The shrill cry of the famished dogs of war no longer carried terror among the hearts of these simple, out of-the-world-folks, hidden away among the barrens.

Many a time and oft they conversed together, and the grieving mother mourned her dead boys.

"I can bear the loss of Eben an' Riley an' Hamp, because I've got use to it," she would say. "But my baby boy. Poor little Dick! I know the rest aire dead and gone, but I don't know wher' Dick is."

Christmas came. I never shall forget that Christmas time. I shall ever remember how the poor, fool negroes strutted and paraded, and fired the old muskets, and had a big time. "Cause you see, sah, de bottom rail's got on de top o' de fence," they would say. And the soldiers who had missed three or four Christmases entered into the enjoyment of this with renewed energy.

Christmas eve I was at Aunt Mima's house. I liked to be with them, and here Mack tell about the Shenandoah valley and Stonwall Jackson, and all his fund of adventure and perilous escape, and mighty victories and chrushing defeats.

Aunt Mima sat in the corner busy with her knitting. Betty was popping some red popcorn over the fire, and Mack sat half in the shadow, sawing away on his father's old fiddle, the only piece of personal property the old man left to his sons.

Aunt Mima had been buried in thought, and I was a little startled when she spoke so suddenly.

"Children, wouldn't you all be glad if Little Dick would come home? Hit seems to me that I'd be riconciled to all the rest of he would jes' come home. That's all I ask of the good Lord. Jes' to see my baby boy again."

"Then your wish is granted," come a voice from the door, "for your boy's come home," and in another breath Little Dick was clasped in the arms of mother and sister.

I shall not attempt to describe the scene. I will leave all that to the facile pen of the emotional novelist, who has the trick of portraying such things. I cannot for the life of me remember to this day who it was that rescued the frying pan full of popcorn from the fire. I do not know how come the fiddle bridge down, and several strands of hair broken in the bow. I know that after all was over we begun to realize that Little Dick had grown wonderfully tall. He had added nearly a half a foot to his stature and his fuzzy beard had developed into a nice brown beard. He had been in a northern prison, and in a federal hospital, and he had walked the streets of many a northern city, and he had a long, long story to tell. But he had come back. Aunt Mima seemed to have grown ten years younger. Grass grew on the graves of her other boys, and she cherished their memory, but the living presence of her baby boy strengthened and comforted her.

And now, I am going to tell you, confidentially, that this story is every word true. I could carry you to a big lumber mill on the line of a southern railroad, and I could show you the superintendent, who walks with a limp, that is Mack. I could carry you to a quiet home where a sweet-faced woman, an ancient dame and maiden lady divide the honor of ruling over the realm of the household. Children frolic about the premises. One of these women is Mrs. Loring, junior, one is Aunt 'Mima, and one is Betty. Down at the office I could point out to you a thrifty, active looking business man, the owner of the mill, and that is Little Dick.

The Boy Boss.

From the New York Sun.

Two years ago a farmer in Phelps, N. Y., died, leaving a widow, four children and an $1,800 mortgage on the farm. The eldest child, a boy of 15, set to work at once to try to carry on the farm, and, according to a local newspaper, he has succeeded remarkably well. He has plowed the fields, sowed, cultivated and reaped; he has had sole charge of a large number of cattle and horses on the farm; he has managed a retail milk business, and has himself marketed all the farm products.

Last summer he found time after his work in the fields to paint the house twice over and to build five new fences. In the Winter he not only attends to the necessary work about the farm, but teaches a country school three miles away, fells timber in the woods on Saturdays and writes excellent letters to the local newspapers. The farm is not only out of debt and in splendid condition; but the lad and his mother have enough money on hand to buy twenty more acres of land.

General Francis A. Walker, the distinguished Massachusetts educator, advocates the removal of such arithmetical tortures as compound interest, compound proportion, cube root, equation of payments and some other processes from the curriculcum of the Boston grammer school course. He advises the use only of such operations as are in practical, everyday use.

The National Pie Eaters.

We have been called a nation of pie eaters. From the humblest American citizen to the President of the United States pie occupies a prominent place in the household larder.

Who invented pie is not yet known, nor exactly how the name orignated

It is generally supposed that the word pie has its origin with the printers, but just how is lost in obscurity.

Talking about the consumption of pies, a good many of them are consumed at the capitol by our able law makers.

Just off from the rotunda is a lunch stand presided over by a soldier's widow. She is familiarly known as Jennie. Jennie is well known by all the members and Senators, and every day the stroll from their seats in the halls of legislation and visit the little stand to satisfy the inner man.

On the stand, displayed in a tempting manner will be found a variety of cakes, apples, peaches, bananas, sandwiches—beef and tongue— milk and pie.

The last named article has a strong hold on the appetite of the solons, and they'll eat pie in preference to anything else.

The Critic reporter stopped at the stand the other day to partake of a little repast, when his attention was attracted by the usual large number of Congressmen who rely on Jennie to prepare them a small lunch.

As a rule the members go to the House restaurant when hungry, but it frequently happens that they cannot spare the time, so they run over to Jennie's lunch counter.

"Jennie," asked the reporter, "what kind of pie do the members eat?"

"What kind of pie? Why, anything, so it's pie. These are grand pies; they never give you dyspepsia, nor the like. But don't you ask me any more questions, because I won't answer them; you reporters are so inquisitive, always finding out things."

"Does Congressman Vance eat pie?"

"Yes, nearly all the members eat pie. If they don't eat pie they eat something."

While the reporter was asking questions Hon. Amos J. Cummings came along and said: "What kind of pie to-day Jennie?"

"Apple, plum, pinneapple, blackberry, cocoanut, peach and custard. I keep custard pie for Mr. Vance."

"Well, give me a slice of peach and a glass of milk."

Mr. Cummings took the pie in his right hand and gracefully put it out of sight. He doesn't lose much time in masticating a slice of pie.

M. O'Donnell of Michigan does not stick to one kind of pie; he changes off. One day he'll prefer apple, the next cocoanut or blackberry, and so on. He eats his pie with a fork.

Very seldom does the Hon. Joe Cannon eat pie, but occasionally he stops by for a piece of apple pie.

Mr. Buchanan of New Jersey is one of the House pie eaters. He generally lunches on the grape pie. When the crust is rather firm he cuts the pie into little squares and washes them down with a swallow of milk.

Mr. Fitch and Amos Cummings are very fond of the German dish Zwiawil Kuchan, and Jennie keeps it for their special benefit.

Chairman Mills of the Ways and Means Committee now and then patronizes Jennie to the extent of a half of a lemon pie. He uses a fork with his pie.

Mr. Guenther, Vice-President of the P. F. O. N. Organization, is another one passionately fond of pie. He eats his pie about two o'clock in the day.

"Gif me some pie milk," he'll say.

"I don't care, so it's pie."

Mr. Boothman of Ohio, like all the Western members, is fond of the seductive pastry. He frequently gets on the outside of two slices of pineapple pie.

Mr. Funston of Kansas, represents an agricultural constituency, like huckleberry pie and Jennie always has a slice put by for him.

Mr. Burrows of Michigan eats his pie as he would a piece of cake.

Judge Barnes of Georgia is also a slave to pie.

Tim Campbell eats his pie with a knife. He is very partial to mince pie when in season.

Sunset Cox says a man's digestive organs are out of repair when he can't enjoy pie.

Mr. Baker of New York always uses a spoon when he tackles a slice of custard pie.

The New England members as a rule will eat no other kind of pie than apple.

Big Tom Reed usually eats pie in the House restaurant.

New varieties of pie are constantly making their appearance. The other day Major McClammy of North Carolina wanted some orange pie, while Major Martin inquired for grape.

"Charlie" Mason of Illinois is known in the House as the great Chicago pie eater. He eats nothing but cocoanut pie, and generally he consumes a half-one for lunch. He says that any man who doesn't like pie is worse than a liar.

Western Freedom.

The editor of a Western paper has this to say: "The dead-geranium leaf-eared spotlet, whom fate has willed shall wither and blight the weekly Dreadful around the corner, refers to the editor of this flourishing and influential journal as a pinfeather journalist and a can't-get-there dude. He also goes on to say that as a newspaper freak we are probably the finest specimen of the kind ever captured alive. Brethern of the press, this is all wrong. Let us be courteous to one another. In this work-a-day world of ours there is no influence so soothing and refining as that courtesy. The soft, low-spoken word, the gentle smile, the kindly reference—who has not felt their balm, been helped over some rough place in life's pathway by their beneficial effect? Brethern of the press, again we say let us be courteous to one another, and let the microbe pull his number five hat deep down over his eyes and ponder upon these words. Selah!"—Tid-Bits.

A canal across Italy is being planned, to connect the Adriatic and Mediterranean.

An unsuccessful weather prophet has drowned himself in the North river, near Jersey City. Some one should keep an eye on General Greely.

The mother of the present German Empress is confined in a madhouse. She wanted to become the wife of Louis Napoleon, when he was President, and would have done so but for the opposition of Queen Victoria.

A huge globe is to be exhibited next year in the Champs de Mars, Paris. It will rotate on an axis, and will be constructed on a scale of one millionth. It will be a huge thing, and will give a pretty correct idea of the world on which we live.

Robert Harding, a young English socialist, when he wants to make a speech on the street padlocks himself with a chain to an iron fence. Then the police have to spend a long time in getting him unfastened, and he can make a long speech before he is carried off.

That Jacksonville, Fla., is sadly stricken with yellow fever grows more lamentably apparent. Hundreds of families are camping out in the suburbs and the exodus for three weeks numbers 10,000 people. Hotel men and land boomers are wondering what the effect will be on the winter recreation industry.

The king of the Belgians hates tobacco, never wears gloves, and goes bareheaded as much as possible. He is fond of bathing but does not swim. Geography and languages are his favorite studies, and he has traveled in almost every Asiatic country. He a handsome man, slightly built but muscular, with b[illegible] eyes and a big brown beard touched with gray.

One of the great questions which is pressing for a solution in England is that of church disestablishment. In Wales and Scotland great agitation on the subject is being kept up. Good progress is being made. Last year in the House there was a majority of 112 against disestablishment, but recently, on a vote to disestablish the church of Scotland, the hostile majority was only 52.

Miss Juliet Corson, for some years has been considered a hopeless invalid. But she has outlived the predictions of the doctors, and is now practically her own patient. Although a great and constant sufferer, her writing has not been seriously interfered with. Since her illness assumed its hopeless state she has written several books, beside numerous articles, and is engaged upon what she expects to be the best book of her life, a book upon cookery for the sick.

Will it always be true of the great majority of men who write that they remain as poor as Job's proverbial turkey? So, in truth, Declares Robert Louis Stevenson. "If," he says in the forthcoming Scribner "you adopt an art to be your trade, weed your mind at the outset of all desire for money. What you may decently expect if you have some talent and much industry, is such an income as a clerk will earn with a tenth or perhaps a twentieth of your nervous output."

Another revolution in Hayti has occurred. The so called Republic has been in a state of chronic revolt ever since it became a Republic. The only matter for surprise is that the late president, Gen. Salomon, retained power so long. He was first elected in 1879 and was re-elected in 1886. He is hiding in a British frigate to escape the revolutionists. The condition of the Republic is deplorable. It is loaded down with debt, foreign and domestic, on which no interest has been paid for years.

An anecdote is related in connection with the little two-year-old King of Spain, which shows what a strong hold ceremonial forms still have upon the Spanish court. The baby monarch had been presented by his aunt with a swing. When he was placed in it for the first time the unwonted motion frightened him, and he burst out crying, whereupon one of the lackeys rushed forward and lifted him out. This was reported to the royal master of ceremonies, who at once dismissed the servant because he dared to touch the person of the king, a privilege confined to the nurse and personal attendants. The lackey appealed to the queen regent, representing that his action may have saved the king from injury. The queen could not venture to reinstate him, that was impossible; but she appointed him to another post in the royal household.

Doings at Washington.

The movement of standard silver dollars from the different mints and subtreasuries to Washington for storage in the large new vaults in the treasury department has begun. The shipments will be made in lots of $500,000 a day and will continue until the vault is full. As the vault has a capacity of $100,000,000 in silver dollars it will take about six months to fill it at the rate of shipment decided upon.

The Record of Casualties.

Isaac Benjamin of Wheeler, Wis., who has been working on a farm near Grandin, Dak., was run over and instantly killed by a Northern Pacific freight train eight miles west of Fargo. He was horribly mangled, his body being cut into pieces.

The Northwestern limited passenger train going west ran off the track four miles from Cedar Rapids, Ia., demolishing the locomotive, derailing the baggage car and coach and injuring Engineer George Arnold and Fireman John Hosock seriously though not fatally. The passengers escaped unhurt. A broken switch was the cause of the accident.

James Constance was killed by a fall of rock in the Gagnon mine, Montana. The rock only fell about a foot, but it weighed over 200 pounds. The mine is one of the best timbered in the district, and no blame attaches to the company. Deceased was about thirty-five, married and had no children. He had ben working in the mine since April.

Herb Ripley, an employee of the Shell Lake Lumber company, in trying to get off a moving freight train at Shell Lake, Wis., fell and was run over by the train, crushing both legs. He was taken to the Cumberland hospital where he died, not rallying enough from his injury for amputation. This is another of the many deaths caused by strong drink.

The farm house of W. G. Croskle, four miles east of Spiritwood, Dak., was burned. The furniture and building are an entire loss and uninsured. Croskel was in the harvest field driving a harvester at the time of the fire, his wife being in the garden, and a two-year-old girl was burned to death. The fire is supposed to have been occasioned in some manner by the child.

A young man by the name of Ben Alberton was accidentally killed near Rice Lake, Wis., in a very singular manner. He was at work in one of the Knapp, Stout & Co. company's haying camps, and while carrying a sharp scythe he fell, and in falling brought the scythe beneath himself in such a manner as to cut a deep gash across his abdomen, his bowels falling to the ground as he stood upon his feet. He lived but a short time after the accident.

Bad forest fires are burning near Nadeau, seventy-five miles south of Ishpeming, Mich., on the Chicago & Northwestern railway. Telegraph poles are burned and damage to standing timber will be heavy. At present none of the villages are dangerously threatened by the forest fires, but a strong wind would cause them to spread rapidly. "Bush" fires are also reported. Turin and other places are threatened. Unless it rains soon the fires will spread, as the timber is very dry.

Charles Stranberg, an employe of the Merway & Jones saw mill at West Superior Wis., was fatally injured. Stranberg's duties were to attend to the edger, and while thus engaged a board caught on top of the saw, split and was hurled against him, striking him in the left groin, entering about six inches. He was also struck in the breast by a large sliver, which entered six inches. He was taken to Jenson's boarding house and Dr. Connors was summoned, but he could do nothing except render the unfortunate man temporary relief. Stranberg died a few hours after the accident.

A lamp exploded in the Western Union telegraph office at Livingston, Montana. The office was in the Northern Pacific railroad depot, a two-story frame building in which was also the train dispatcher's, division superintendent's and ticket offices of the Northern Pacific company. In two hours the building was leveled to the ground by fire started by the burning oil which was thrown over the office. A few trunks belonging to Park tourists were saved but nothing else. The loss is about $10,000, as it was one of the finest small stations on the road. It is reported that the company intend to rebuild, and that the new depot will be a larger and finer building than the other, to accommodate the heavy travel to the National Park, this being the transferring point.

The forest fires in Michigan are very bad. Twenty houses were burned at Nadeau, Balteau and Mumford. Stores, coal kilns and freight cars were burned, but the railroad bridges were saved by engines. Telegraph poles and wires are burned down. People from the burning villages are removing to Power and Stephenson. One family of seven persons are missing from Mumford. They are supposed to be burned. Farmers working in the clearing lost their buildings, crops and everything but their lives. Smoke covers everything, and it is impossible to estimate losses. The fires are burning on both sides of the railway track for a hundred miles, with occasional breaks. Several hundred people are houseless. There is little prospect of rain, which alone can check the flames.

Archibald C. Paddock, a leading and respected citizen of Ridgfield Conn., and a New York dentist, accidentally shot and killed his eighteen-year-old son Harry, and then, in a fit of temporary insanity, killed himself. It had been the habit for father and son to practice shooting at a target in a lot at the rear of their home. The boy had been back of the target, and, suddenly and unexpectedly stepping forward towards his father, received the contents of a shot gun aimed at the target, and was instantly killed. The father, overwhelmed with grief, rushed to his son and knelt at his side on the grass, and then with the same weapon with which he had killed his son ended his life. His domestic affairs were harmonious, and he idolized the son he accidently killed.

Criminal Doings.

Thomas O'Brien was arrested at West Superior for appropriating $280 from the till of Ole Henderson's saloon. Bail was fixed at $500, in default of which the man was placed in the lock-up.

At Sioux Falls, Dak., a stranger went to a police officer of the city and requested to be put in the calaboose as some persons unknown wanted to kill him. After considerable parley his request was granted. Later the officers picked up a drunken man. When they arrived at the calaboose with the latter they found the stranger dead, hanging by his neck. He used his suspenders to accomplish the deed.

The coroner's inquest at Huron, Dakota, over the body of Hattie Wilson found that she came to her death by a revolver shot fired by John Flaherty, who premeditately and with malice aforethought killed her. Several witnesses swore to hearing him say he would kill her if she did not go with him. The funeral was attended by the Methodist minister and the expense was borne by her late companions. Flaherty is in jail and out of danger. He expresses no penitence for his deed.

Valentine Graff, a burly 200-pound Bavarian, tried to murder his wife in East Boston by jumping upon her, and then, thinking her a corpse, he threw himself into a harbor, being chased to the edge of the warf by a big crowd of men and boys. He was rescued by means of a lasso and locked up. Graff is a dissipated fellow and has not lived with his wife for two years. He forced his way into the house in which she has been living and ordered her to go and live with him. Her refusal angered him and he then tried to kill her.

News has been received at Billings, Montana, of the shooting of Tom Barber, one of the men employed on the round-up by the Crown outfit of Northern Wyoming. The affair took place at Curly Rogers' ranch at the head of Sage creek, Wyoming, about one hundred miles south of Billings. The trouble arose from a drunken row among cowboys, which was thought to have been settled, when Jim Gayman, a cowboy, with whom the victim had previously quarreled, shot him in the back three times as he was passing the window, with probably fatal effect.

While a dance was in progress at Sugar Loaf near Winona, Minn., a young man by the name of Charley Tate took a team belonging to a farmer, and decamped. After some search the sheriff was notified, and the young man was found driving it toward Winona. When arrested he claimed that he was drunk at the time of taking the team, his assertion being partly substantiated by the fact that he was nearly drunk then. The case may prove serious, but as yet no one has appeared against him, and he may escape.

Richardson, Dakota, was the scene of a serious shooting scrape. The hotel there is carried on by Burt Oleson, and trouble has been brewing for some time between himself and boarders. Hugh Thompson, a boarder, in carrying out a threat made by another boarder to clean out the hotel, jumped upon the breakfast table, and he was joined by other boarders who began breaking dishes and making a general wreck of the room. They were also in the act of striking Mrs. Oleson, when her husband appeared and opened a revolver. One shot took effect in Thompson's left breast and passed through the lung, and Dr. Stickney, of Dickinson says his chances of life are very slim.

Columbus Carter, an evictor in the employ of a railroad company, was assassinated, while returning home from work on his farm near Noran, Kansas. The events leading up to the killing cover a period of several years, during which there has been an organization of men here called "leaguers," banded together to resist any efforts to deprive them of lands which they considered rightfully theirs, these lands having been granted to a railroad company by the government, and by the leaguers claimed by reason of non-fulfillment of contract to have reverted back to the government. Columbus Carter was selected to throw these people out of their houses, and then hold the property against all efforts put forth by the "leaguers" to regain their possession. While passing a corn field, several men in ambush, supposed to be "leaguers" fired on him, killing him instantly.

Foreign Cullings.

It is reported in Canada that Hon. J. S. D. Thompson, minister of justice, has been knighted for his services in connection with the negotiations for the recent fisheries treaty.

At Stonewall, forty miles west of Trinidad, the sheriff's posse, sent to keep the peace, was met by the armed settlers in numbers estimated at 200 to 500 men. The settlers remanded the arms of the posse, which was refused. The posse took up quarters in the Booler hotel, a large frame building. The settlers endeavored to force an entrance when the posse opened fire. R. D. Russell, one of the oldest settlers, fell dead and two or three settlers were wounded. The building was soon riddled with balls. The deputies escaped from the building at night. Two doctors were on the grounds. The settlers, it is claimed, do not want to injure anyone but are detemined to hold out to the last. The settlers are determined and will demand what they consider their rights.

Personal Gossip.

E. Melville, a traveling advertising agent from Indiana, lies at the Samaritan hospital at Aberdeen, Dakota, at the point of death from injuries received at the hands of a saloonkeeper who threw him from his saloon recently. Melville has been unconscious most of the time since receiving the injuries. His left arm was pounded black and his face and head badly cut. He calls incessantly for his wife who is now with him. Morland, the saloonkeeper, who is said to have injured him, it about town and claims that Melville was injured by falling from the door of the saloon while drunk. A witness of the affair cannot be found, but arrests will probably be made.

Miscellaneous News Items.

Mrs. Henrietta Buzzleman, who arrived in Chippewa Falls, Wis., a few days ago from Pittsburg, Pa., in search of a husband who deserted her in 1874, has established her claim as the wife of Buzzleman and he has been ordered to pay $20 per month alimony. He is well off, and is the husband of four wives.

From reliable information received from Fort Custer it is learned that the recent movements of Indians from Pine Ridge agency, Dakota, to Tongue River, Montana, with avowed hostile intents, according to Associated Press reports, amounts to very little. There is not the slightest trouble anticipated, and the movements of the Indians have absolutely nothing to do with the land councils of the Sioux. This information is from reliable official and private sources, and sets at rest the apprehensions caused by the sensational dispatches that have been sent predicting an Indian outbreak or serious trouble, or that th move was the result of the efforts of the land commissioners to force them to sign the treaty throwing open the Sioux reservation.

As the city sexton of Beloit, Wis., was going the rounds of the city cemetery, he discovered a grave in the potter's field which had evidently been tampered with. The coffin had rotted nearly away, but it is evident that the object was not grave robbery. The desecration of the grave has probably something to do with the rumor that has existed for many years. The story is that about thirty years ago a colony of emigrants came to Beloit, where their leader was taken sick and died of cholera. He was buried at once, his clothes not even being removed. Soon afterward it was reported that he had a large amount of gold in his belt. The story has from time to time been revived. The officials are investigating the case.

The report of the arrest and confinement of John Grass, the Sioux Indian is confirmed. The arrest is made on the account of his intimidating Indians who were desirous of signing the treaty and the confinement of this obstreperous red will have much to do toward making the work of the commissioners a success, inasmuch as he is the leader of the opposition and has even been down into Cheyenne agency trying to work up a revolt. McChesney says his Indians are not bitterly opposed to the measure and the success the commissioners meet with a Crow Creek will probably influence their action. McChesney also says his advices from Crow Creek are very favorable, and that very likely every Indian at that agency will sign, in which event there will be no trouble in securing Cheyenne.

The Deadly Yellow Fever.

Jackson, Florida, special: The morning's list of 21 new cases, with 16 others reported up to noon, has again sent the people panic-stricken in every direction. The trains are filled with refugees en route to the North. The hot, murky and rainy weather of the past week is now having its effect, and it is thought the number of cases will increase daily. The disease also seems to be assuming a violent type, and the people are greatly alarmed. The gravity of the situation is now acknowledged by the most hopeful, as September (always a bad month) is approaching, and it is thought that the new cases will then run up to big figures daily. At the meeting attention was also drawn to the fact that Jack Pollard, who had been taken sick at Boulogne, was turned back to Jacksonville without assistance, which act resulted in his death.

There is no longer a shadow of doubt that we have on our hands a regular epidemic. Thirty-four new cases were reported to the board of health for the 24 hours ending at 6 o'clock this evening. Among the cases are Mrs. Judge McLean and two children, Miss Lead, telephone operator; Mrs. Hopkins, stamp clerk at the postoffice, and J. H. Stephens, local agent of the Savannah, Florida & Western railroad, who has stood at his post, and is chairman of the railroad relief.

Several cases of fever have appeared in the county jail. With few exceptions the ministers of the city are nobly at their post of duty. They are nearly all on relief committees for different wards. All hope of ending the epidemic before frost appears is abandoned, and the citizens here have resolved to calmly and courageously confront the situation and do their duty nobly.

The New York republican state convention met at Saratoga and unanimously nominated the following ticket:

For governor, Warner Miller of Herkimer; for lieutenant governor, S. V. R. Gruger of New York; for judge of the court of appeals, William Rumsey of Steuben county; for electors at large, W. H. Seward and J. S. T. Stranahan.

Upon being presented, amid cheers, to the convention, ex-Senator Miller, after accepting the nomination and thanking the delegates for it, said he accepted only because he felt that the Republicans of this state were then and now a unit for the coming contest. He congratulated his colleagues that the coming campaign was to be one of the principles, and the party was to be congratulated that the Chicago convention had given a platform of broadest Americanism, and one which distinctly announced the doctrine of protection.

Another Ticket in the Field.

A conference of the farm and labor party of Minnesota met in St. Paul, and nominated the following ticket:

For Governor, Ignatius Donnelly of Dakota County.

For Lieut. Governor, James McGaughy of Hennepin County.

For Attorney Gen., Judge William Welch of Hennepin County.

For State Treasurer, W. G. Jebb of Meeker County.

For Secretary of State, J. P. Schonbeck of Nicollet County.

There were about seventy-five delegates, including Miss Eva McDonald of Minneapolis, and of these fifty-six represented St. Paul and Minneapolis.

THE RESOLUTIONS.

The following platform was adopted:

We recognize only two parties, labor and capital, and the only issue at stake is: Shall the people keep the fruits of their own industry or shall capital enslave the money by its exactions?

In view of these facts, we demand of the nation:

First—That the money needed for exchanges be issued direct to the people without the intervention of banks.

Second—That while we are opposed to reducing the labor of the United States to the level of the impoverished workmen of Europe, we are, nevertheless, in favor of a thorough revision of the present tariff and a reduction of its rates whenever the same tend to enrich capital, and we favor placing on the free list all such articles as are made the basis of trusts which rob and impoverish the people.

Third—The forfeiture of all unearned land grants, and that land monopoly shall be abolished by just and appropriate legislation; and we are opposed to alien and non-resident ownership of American soil: and we believe further that the government should restore nature's bounties that are stored within the bowels of the earth for the use of the human family to the purpose for which they were created.

Fourth—That transportation of commodities and passengers by railroads shall be controlled by national and state legislatures in the interest of the people.

Fifth—That the interstate commerce law shall be so changed as to effectually prevent discrimination in favor of corporations, individuals and localities, and extortion by railroad sleeping car, express and other companies, acting as common carriers, between the states; and we insist on the government establishing and operating a system of telegraphy in connection with the postoffice department.

From the state we demand:

First—The adoption of a system of voting embodying the principle of the Australian law, which abolishes the caucus system and secures to each voter an opportunity to cast a free and untrammeled ballot.

Second—That the right vote is inherent in citizenship without regard to sex.

Third—The reduction of freight and passenger rates on railroads to a sum sufficient to pay only the operating and maintaining expenses, when economically administered, and a fair rate of interest on the actual cost of the roads, thus saving to the producers of the state several millions, now wrung from them to pay interest on the fictitious stock.

Fourth—The enactment of a law allowing the mortgagor to deduct from the amount due the mortgagee, the amount of all taxes paid upon that part of the assessed valuation of the estate taxed, represented by the mortgage.

Fifth—The enactment of a factory inspection law for the protection of the health and safety of employes in mines, factories, workshops and places of business.

Sixth—the enactment of a law defining the liability of employers for injuries sustained by employes in cases where proper safeguards have not been used, in occupations dangerous to life, limb or health.

Seventh—That eight hours shall constitute a day's work in all towns and cities on state and municipal work, and all such work shall be done by the day and not by contract.

Eighth—The enactment of a law regulating the employment of detectives and peace officers, and forbidding the employment of secret and private detectives by other than the state of municipal governments.

Ninth—The enactment of a law to enforce the payment of weekly wages in lawful money by the employers to labor in cities and by railroad companies and other corporations and at the hands of congress.

Tenth—Whereas, Any rate of interest above the average increase of wealth of the nation is robbery, therefore we demand a reduction of interest in this state to a reasonable rate.

A War Impending in Africa.

The German papers commencing on the Zanzibar affair and the latter reports concerning the white pasha, state that the world must be prepared to hear, in a very short time, of some of the most remarkable events that have ever taken place in Africa. A desperate struggle will break out, and blood will flow on the shores of the Nile, but the result will be a blessing to mankind. The contest between the Semitic Arab and the Indo Germanic race has reached a crisis in the hottest zone on earth. Germany is not at all anxious that Lieut. Wissman should take part in a Nile expedition, but on the contrary is most anxious to see either the British or Egyptian government send a force northward from Wady-Halfa to co-operate with the white pasha in his advance on Khartoum. If such an expedition were sucessful Germany would reap a considerable part of the reward as a great impetus would be given to German trade in Africa. Correspondents at Suakim continue to assert that there can be no doubt as to the presence of a white pasha in Bahr-El-Ghazel. During the past few days many more pilgrims and refugees have arrived from that neighborhood and they are unanimous in asserting that an armed force under a white pasha is at Darfour and that the natives are in friendly communication with the leader. Premier Crispis' interviews with Prince Bismarck and Count Kalnocky surpass in importance the interviews between the czar and Emperor William. The league against France has been very materially strengthened and there is now no doubt that Prince Bismarck is encouraging Italy to the adoption and pursuit of an aggressive policy. Italy is, of course, a mere cat's-paw in the hand of Germany, a fact which Premier Crispi cannot fail to realize, but the advantages offered to her by her allies are too alluring to be ignored, and she will doubtless have very little hesitation in bringing about the conflict Germany desires but dares not precipitate herself.

Fanny Eloped With a Coachman.

Pretty Fanny Boyington ran away from home in Chicago and married her father's coachman. Gossip's tongue has been busy in the charming suburb of Highland Park for the past few days and all because the pretty daughter of wealthy parents chose to disregard the wishes of others and wedded the man of her choice. There was nothing against Richard Carter except that he had been the family coachman. A few years ago Richard Carter came to America from England. His father belonged to the middle classes, and he has given his children a good education. With pluck and brains for capital young Carter sought to make his way in a newer country. He found it hard to obtain a situation, and finally his little stock of money was exhausted, and he was in a big city without funds. He had met a son of Dr. Boyington, who told him to go into the country and become family coachman. He was engaged, and soon gained the confidence of all, and his intelligence soon attracted notice. After the captivating stranger had been at Highland Park for ten months the parents discovered the intimacy between the daughter and the young coachman. The young Englishman was ordered to pack up his possessions and leave the premises. The daughters tears produced no effect. Carter determined to seek employment in some business where he would have a chance to rise. After filling various positions, Carter finally secured employment at the stock yards. During all these years the two kept up a constant correspondence and even obtained stolen interviews. They concluded that it was useless to try to win the consent of the family, and that the only way to do would be to seek some Greta Green and defy parental orders. A week ago Miss Boyington remained in her room all day and packed up every article of clothing she possessed. One morning she made her appearance as usual, but complained of having a headache, which furnished an excuse for her soon to retire again to her room. By a preconcerted arrangement she met her lover and the two went to Kenosha and were married. Then came a letter saying she had married the man of her choice and was happy. Mr. and Mrs. Carter took up their residence on Indiana avenue, in Chicago, and Mrs Carter does not regret the course she took. Mrs. Boyington visited her daughter after the receipt of the letter and a reconciliation took place, and. "Dick," the former coachman, has become an accepted son-in-law.

The Colorado Riot.

The managers of the Maxwell land grant in Colorado swore out warrants for the arrest of sixteen men who participated in the trouble at Stonewall, on the charge of riot. Writs of ejectment against a hundred others were also secured, and the United States marshal proceeded to serve them. It is feared that the serving of these papers will cause another outbreak, and perhaps more bloodshed.

The trouble at the Maxwell land grant has been brewing ever since the supreme court of the United States confirmed the title to the grant. The grant was originally made by the Mexican government to Beaubian and Hiranda, two Mexicans, who were given two square leagues of 90,000 acres of land, providing that they would cultivate the same. The boundaries of the grant now contain 1,750,000 acres. The manner in which the grant grew to its present proportions is one of the causes of the trouble. The settlers living within the boundaries of the grant charged that the original property was enlarged by fraudulent means. The highest tribunal in the land department has held, however, there was no fraud, and refused to set aside the patent granted by congress. Hundreds of settlers have improved homes and lived there so many years that they considered themselves rightfully in possession and look upon the threatened ejectment as an outrage. Soon after the decision of the court the grant people proposed to purchase the settlers' improvements and stock at the market price, after which they were to vacate, or they would sell them the land at reasonable figures. Many settlers accepted the proposition and sold out or purchased land at a price ranging from $1.50 to $10 an acre. The grant company claim to treat the settlers justly, but charges have been made that in many instances settlers have been made to pay an exorbitant price for premises upon which they have been living for many years. The settlers are now up in arms, being led to it by the incendiary talk of evil disposed persons. They are under the impression that they are fighting for their homes and families.

The Crow Creek Pow-Wow.

The first council with the Indians at the Crow Creek agency has taken place. The Indians had previously selected their spokesmen, all of whom are chiefs, the orators being as follows: Head Chief White Ghost, Chief Drifting Goose, Chief Bull Ghost. The younger and more intelligent element, however, object to this arrangement and insist that each one should be permitted to express his own whishes in the matter; that the interest of one Indian on the reservation is equal to another, and that it would be impossible for any one or half-dozen men to express the wishes of the entire tribe. There will be a strong objection raised to this plan. The Indians held a big council on the prairie near the agency, when speeches for and against were delivered. Certain chiefs who are opposed to the bill are attempting to intimidate those favorable by threats of violence as at Standing Rock, but it does not appear as though their bulldozing and intimidations will have the overawing effect that it had up the river. The younger and more progressive element is rather independent and assert that they should be allowed to do as they see fit, and are not influenced to any great extent by the action of the chiefs who are opposed. One of the most serious obstructions which is being met, and which will be met at other agencies, lies in the fact that those who are opposed decidedly to the ratification of the bill are daily and hourly making their objections known, and work incessantly to carry their point, while those who would sign are simply willing and do not exert themselves to any extent. It is believed however, that the commissioners will present the matter in such a manner that they will assert their rights regardless of the interference of others.

Pauper Emmigration.

The congressional immigration committee commenced its investigation at Boston. Mr. Wrightington, superintendent of indoor poor, testified that the increase of lunacy in Massachusetts was due to immigration. Fifty-seven paupers have stopped during the year at Boston, fully 250 paupers, assisted here by the Luke society, had been sent back. Trouble had been caused by mission Jews, the worst class of emigrants. Emigrants of the present time were more intelligent than formerly. The present surfeit of laborers compels good men to become paupers, and unrestricted immigration is the cause Indiscriminate emigration is more an evil than benefit. The present law is not sufficient. There should be inspectors across the water. One way of preventing immigration of convicts would be to compel every alient to make oath that for six months or a year he had not been confined in any institution. The witness did not think it wise to place the business in the hands of federal officers, states supervision proving more efficient. Out of 47,000 emigrants who came to this part last year 1,000 were under contract, and witness favored a tax of $10 per head. This might stop immigration to some extent, but the time has arrived when emigration has ceased to be of value to this country. About 40 per cent went to the interior. Within a few years a change of feeling has taken place, and some of the strongest opponents of indiscriminate immigration were children of immigrants.

A Wicked Sea Captain.

Twelve sailors from the English bark Gyfie, who arrived in New York on the steamer Persian Monarch, appeared before the British consul and through Boatswain Bergquest charged that in their opinion and belief Capt. Tait, of the Gyfie, made a futile attempt to cast the bark away in the hope of robbing the insurance companies. The Gyfie sailed from Quebec on July 3, loaded with timber bound to Greenock, Scotland. The vessel sprung a leak and returned to St. Johns, N. F. After being repaired she again resumed her voyage. She sprang a leak again on the night of Aug. 19, but by means of the pumps the men easily kept the water from gaining any headway. On the morning of the 20th the pumps gave out altogether, and the men swear the pumps, which were new, had been tampered with. John Brown, the steward, swears that on the 20th he saw the captain and mate go down into the hold and the mate boring holes with an auger. When the Persian Monarch came to the Gyfie's assistance all hands with the exception of Second Mate Robinson went on board. The latter refused to leave the vessel, believing he could keep her afloat. Capt. Tait and his first mate, seeing the determination of Robinson not to leave the vessel, returned to the Gyfie. but the rest of the crew refused to accompan them.

Some Bad Recruits.

A batch of sixteen recruits was recently sent from Fort Keogh to Capt. Harris at the Mammoth Hot Springs in Montana. They have turned out to be about as tough a gang as were ever together. Six of them are now in the guard house for quite serious offenses. Three have deserted within the past few days. One was shipped back to Fort Custer to be court martialed for some serious military offense. One of them got drunk and attempted to run the hotel at the Springs refusing to obey the officer and was only forced to the camp at the muzzle of a six-shooter. To cap the climax, one of them went down to Gardiner to see the remains of a lady, Mrs. Metcalf, who died there. While in the room he stole a satchel, a gold watch and some money. The things were missed by parties in the house of mourning, who instructed a search. The fellow was found, but had hid his ill-gotten goods. A few determined men took him out, adjusted a noose about his neck, and hung him up until he was forced to confess the whereabouts of the goods. It took several severe jerks to make him tell all, but he finally did. He was then turned over to Capt. Harris for military discipline, more dead than alive. Regrets are frequently expressed that he was not hung outright.

At Brown's Gulch, Montana, two boys of Daniel Morgan had been playing in the barn by themselves. The mother was sick and no one else was at home. She heard cries from the children, and on hurrying out to the barn found that the whole interior was in a blaze. The older of the two boys, aged four years, was standing in a buggy on the floor and the fire was all around him. On seeing his mother, he stretched out his hands toward her, uttered a cry of pain and fell into the flames. The other little fellow was but two years old. The supposition is that they were playing with matches upon the hay, and in some way set it on fire.

Republican Ammunition.

"Uncle Abe's" First Speech.

Abraham Lincoln's first political speech, when a candidate for the Illinois legislature in 1832, was as follows: "Gentlemen, fellow-citizens, I presume you know who I am. I am humble Abraham Lincoln. I have been solicited by many friends to become a candidate for the legislature. My politics can be briefly stated. I am in favor of the internal improvement system and a high protective tariff. These are my sentiments and political principles. If elected I shall be thankful; if not, it will be all the same."

Sensible Temperance Men.

Hugh R. Crawford, a strong temperance man of New York, was appealed to for aid by the third party managers. They received this scorcher in reply: "I would consider it a shame and a disgrace to aid the unloyal free trade Democratic party by voting with the Prohibitionists. I have given my limited means to the cause of temperance, but I do not propose to aid and abet the promulgation of all kinds of crime by assisting the Democratic party and the whiskey ring of our State, as led by Gov Hill and its National exponent, President Cleveland, by throwing away my vote on Fisk and Brooks."

Republican Converts.

Otho Dowders of Albany, Ind., a hard worker in Democratic ranks since 1860, has experienced a change of heart, and is making speeches for Harrison.

John D. Lytel of Union City, Ind., an old soldier who voted for Cleveland in 1883, says he will vote for Harrison this year, and he has three sons who will cast their first ballots the same way.

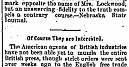
Henry Melchers owns a shingle mill at East Saginaw, Mich., and says: "The thirty men in my employ all voted for Cleveland four years ago, but Harrison, Morton, and protection will get their votes this year."

Albert Leonard, a leading Pennsylvania Prohibitionist, is out for Harrison and Morton. He says that as a "Democratic Aid Society" he can't indorse the prohibition movement any longer.

William Heffernan of Washington, Ind., law partner of Congressman John H. O'Neall, has withdrawn from the Democratic party and is speaking for Harrison. It is said that Cabel & Kaufman, wealthy mine owners at Washington employing 300 men, have renounced their Democratic faith.

About How It Stands.

With object and profuse apologies to the baking powder companies, the Journal would offer the following diagram showing the relative chances for election of the various presidential candidates:



It would be a pleasure to place the long mark opposite the name of Mrs. Lockwood, but an unswerving fidelity to the truth compels a contrary course.—Nebraska State Journal.

Of Course They are Interested.

The American agents of British industries have not been able yet to muzzle the entire British press, though strict orders were sent over weeks ago to the English free trade newspapers to be silent on American politics. A recent issue of The London Sunday Times contains a long editorial on American affairs, supplementing their correspondence from this side of the water. It sees the effect of Cleveland's policy as clearly as does its greater namesake, "The Thunderer." The following extract shows the drift of the article:

"The electioneering campaign in America ought to be most interesting to the English people for historical, political, philosophical and economic reasons. * * * The main question at issue is English free trade against the Continental system of protection. The republic is on trial. Good, conservative government under Cleveland is opposed by the rule or ruin party of Blaine, whose friends nominated Harrison, and who would certainly be secretary of state under a Harrison administration. Thus the American people are directly involved in the contest through their pockets, which will be affected by the tariff, and their future; which would be seriously influenced by the restoration to power of such a firebrand as Blaine, with his home rule sympathies and anti-Canadian policy. The American election is infinitely more important to Englishmen than their own internal politics just at this juncture, and they should observe every phase of the campaign closely and understandingly. It is from this point of view that the copious dispatches to The Sunday Times are cabled. The result of the American election will help to decide many important issues in Great Britian."—New York Dispatch.

Democratic Hostility to Pensioners.

John M. Hoffman of Lake View wants to know why he can't get his pension under a Democratic Administration.

"I enlisted in Company H, First Illinois Artillery," he said, "in 1861, and served until 1865. I was a prisoner in Andersonville 208 days. I went into the army as sound as a dollar, and I came out a cripple for life. Andersonville was the cause of it. I have almost entirely lost the use of my right side, and cannot see out of my right eye. I still have the marks of the scurvy about me. In 1866 I applied for a pension and was allowed $4 a month. As I was almost wholly disabled I did not think that a large one, and in 1879 I applied for an increase. The little that I had was then stopped. I served under Gen. Logan and he knew me, so I applied to him to help me, and in 1883 he got me a pension of $12 a month. He told me then that I ought to have more, and advised me to apply for an increase in about two years. So about three years ago I did so. My pension was immediately cut off again."

"Was any reason given for it?"

"Yes; they said that I was blind and disabled when I enlisted. I was sound as a dollar. They don't take blind men into the army."

"Were your proofs all right?"

Certainly. I had my discharge and all the necessary documents, and my superior officers all certified to my case. That's how I got my first pension. Now, what I want to know is: On what theory Gen. Black, who is not disabled, can get $100 a month, and I, who am disabled, can get nothing? And I want to warn every Union soldier to take pains to see what ballot he casts in November. Cleveland has shown pretty often what he thinks of the soldiers, and as long as the Pension Commissioner gets his $100 he doesn't seem to think any one else was in the war. There is no flaw in the record of my service. I can prove it from beginning to end, and have done so, but it does no good."

Cleveland's Weakness.

President Cleveland has given two open proofs of the extremity to which his campaign is reduced—the delay in his letter of acceptance and his sudden change of base on the fisheries question. The general public disapproval of Free Trade has made the preparation of his letter a task which a man neither undecided nor dilatory has put off long past the latest date in the past. The complete change of front on the most important issue in the foreign affairs of his administration is one which no president would have taken unless he felt the pressing need of creating a diversion in his favor.

Whether he has succeded it is yet too early to say, but the confession of weakness involved is already plain. Step by step Mr. Cleveland has surrendered to the demands of politics. The first surrender was on civil service reform, first in appointments and next in the free presence of public officers at conventions. Their assessment is steadily in progress, as we show in another column. His next concession was in letting pass the River and Harbor bill. The President who had gained no small share of his reputation both at Albany and at Washington by the zeal with which he had vetoed assaults on the Treasury, large and small, permitted the largest River and Harbor bill on record to become a law without his assent. The misdirected vigilance which had been applied to pension bills upon the principle that it was better that nine deserving persons should fail of their pensions than that one person without merit should go on the rolls slept when confronted with a bill whose needless extravagances were larger than all the savings of all the President's pension vetoes put together.—Philadelphia Press.

DOINGS IN MINNESOTA.

The city attorney of Winona decided that applicants for liquor licenses must put down the $1,000 in one payment.

F. W. Vicery, a plasterer from Pelican Rapids, while at work on a building at Fergus Falls, fell from a scaffolding and broke his collar bone. He was otherwise injured.

J. Swan, a young farmer living near Zumbrota, was frightfully goared by a vicious bull. His injuries are such that it is hardly believed that he can recover.

Sheriff Paulsrud of Polk county came down to Fergus Falls with four prisoners. All the Polk county prisoners are brought to the same place for safe keeping, Polk county having no jail.

Frank Freeman of Roscoe was severely injured by falling from a horse on which he was riding. The animal's fore legs slipped and the rider was precipitated over his head. He will recover.

The warehouse of Paul Seeger, at Windom, containing about $1,000 worth of wagons was burned one night just at the close of a political speaking. Cause unknown. It was insured in the St. Paul for $1,000.

An effort is being made, and it is hoped it will succeed, to secure a free delivery of mails in Faribault. The business of the Faribault post-office, exclusive of the money order business, for the year ending June 30, 1888, was $10,278.54.

The clothing store of John R. Conklin of St. Cloud was burglarized, about $100 worth of goods being stolen. The entrance was gained through the back door, which was forced. There was no clue to the burglars.

Considerable disappointment exists at Brainerd over a slip in the arrangements to have the city and county purchase the fair grounds. The city's $1,000 that was going into it failed on account of Mayor Huestead's refusal to sign the order for the appropriation.

A large new frame barn belonging to William A. Loomis, on the West side of Wabasha, was consumed by fire. A valuable horse was burned to death, and the carriage, harness and other equipments were destroyed. It is supposed that the building was fired by tramps.

The youngest daughter of William Hancock, a young lady about seventeen years of age, while cooking breakfast, at Fulda, accidentally set her clothes on fire, and before they could be extinguished she was burned in a most frightful manner. She lived about six hours.

The burglar, William Conners, who was arrested at Le Sueur about three weeks ago since for burglarizing several residences in this city on July 4, and who proved to be at the head of a desperate gang of thieves, escaped from the county jail and no clue to his whereabouts has been obtained.

Over fifty residents and property holders of Winona have signed a petition asking that the directors of Woodlawn cemetery take acton to prevent the running of the Southwestern railroad through it. This cemetery is one of the most beautiful in the state, and the proposed right of way passing through it arouses considerable opposition.

Fire broke out in C. H. Klamer's woolen factory at Faribault. Before the flames could be extinguished some $2,500 damage was done. The fire is believed to have originated from some defect in the furnace. It spread to the room where the looms are located in an incredible short time, but as soon as the hose could be laid the entire building was flooded and the damage is mostly the result of the water. No insurance.

A party of section men, together with a number of toughs from town, secured a keg of beer, and proceeded to make the night hideous in the vicinity of the Milwaukee depot at Pipestone. The debauch broke up about midnight in a drunken row, in which several were implicated. A German, named Anthony Ohitz, stabbed Charles Hamlin, a well borer, in the abdomen, inflicting an ugly wound about two inches in length. The peritoneum was punctured, but the intestines are not ruptured and the patient will recover. Ohitz is in custody and will probably be held to the grand jury.

Helsingfors Letter, London Daily News.

The following singular case is troubling the heads of the Finnish lawyers at present: A man died a week or two ago in Pielisjavi, in the interior of the country, who was said to have led a bad and ungodly life. He had always been known to be well off, but nobody know how he had gained his possessions. There were many strange stories afloat, but one which was credited more than all the rest was to the effect that Huolarinen, as was his name, had in his early days been on an intimate footing with "Wihtahausu" (the "evil one"), with whom he had had several transactions of a commercial character. When Hoularinen's will was opened it was found that he had bequeathed all his landed property and possessions to the devil. The family naturally protested against the will, and the question now arises how this ticklish matter is to be settled. Everybody seems anxious not to offend any of the parties concerned. There can be no doubt that the devil is thus a landowner, by legal right, in Finland.

BENSON'S CONCLUSION.

BY ANGELE CRIPPEN-DAVIS.

From the New York Voice.

James Erastus Benson, was a disciple of culture. It was his theory that the highest order of emotion and affection, was only to be found associated with cultivation. He believed the superior forms of heroism, self-sacrifice and love, were impossible with the "rude, unlettered masses," as he expressed it. They might indeed exist, but the manifestations of them would be inferior in kind and minor in degree.

Naturally, he had been born in Boston. Providence would have committed a great error to have located him anywhere else. Indeed, those who knew Mr. Benson best believed he would have declined opening his eyes in another spot. He was slightly pessimistic, and decidedly dyspeptic. (There is a popular belief that the latter includes the former.) And one day his physician told him there was also some bronchial affection that the climate of his native New England aggravated, and strongly advised him to go south for the winter.

It was late January when he found himself in a hotel in southern Georgia. This hotel was a huge, rambling affair built of frame with verandas running round about it. The house was chiefly filled with women and children. It was a kind of sanitarium built in the midst of pine woods,

> "Whose balsamic perfumes carry healing > on their wings."

He walked out on the veranda. It was February and an early spring. Some one had come in from the woods with branches of yellow jessamine now in bloom. A child held some branches in its hand. He leaned over and inhaled the spicy fragrance of the blossoms. The child ran away shyly. He looked after her half-inclined to call her back. He thought he would like to have her talk to him, yet he did not know what to say. He had never known any children. While he was standing there a stout, red-faced man came up to him in a way that Mr. Benson would have considered odiously familiar in Boston; here he rather liked it.

"Good-morning, good-morning, sir," said the stranger. "Isn't your name Benson?"

He admitted that it was in as cordial a way as his natural stiffness would permit.

"Well, my name is Hatch, Henry Hatch, formerly of Amherst, Mass. I came from there over forty years ago, when I was a boy. I used to know some folks of your name up there."

Then he sat sociably down on the upper step leading to the veranda and began a conversation, in which Mr. Benson, to his surprise, found himself joining with great ease.

The voluble Hatch soon proved, to his own satisfaction at least, that the Benson family and his own were old acquaintances.

At the end of half an hour Benson found himself pledged to go the next day with his new acquaintance on a little trip up the Ocmulgee river, "to see the aborigines," as Hatch put it.

The following afternoon, with an alacrity at which he could not but feel half ashamed, Mr. Benson equipped himself for the journey. He even waited his companion's coming with an impatience that sat strangely on one so studiously placid.

When Hatch arrived, he surveyed the various articles of luggage with an indulgent smile.

"I don't see what you want to tote that umbrella for," he remarked, at the same time indicating the article in question with outstretched finger.

"I never travel without my umbrella," replied Benson somewhat stiffly.

"All right, suit yourself," said Hatch, with the manner of one who kindly consents to forgive little idiosyncrasies on the part of his friends.

They were to travel by rail to——, and then take the boat up the river. The first part of the journey occupied but a few hours. It was nearly sunset when they reached the little station. It was like the general run of country stations in the south—a long wooden building with a group of loafers on the platform, the track, with its glistening steel rails, running between the stretch of inevitable pine trees.

To Mr. Benson's utter consternation, he found they would be obliged to walk a trestle over the river, the boat being moored to the opposite bank. Mr. Hatch kindly relieved him of some of his luggage, allowing him to retain his umbrella.

The Bostonian's pocket's were stuffed with various small articles that could not be crowded into the valise, though he had considered them necessary to his comfort. Mr. Hatch said he was reminded of pictures of the donkeys in Italy, traveling with loaded panniers, but Mr. Benson did not seem pleased when his attention was called to the resemblance.

Before starting to cross the testle, he endeavored to induct the umbrella into an already overflowing shawl strap. The umbrella refused to be coerced. He fought with it valiantly, but to no purpose; it was a Scotch gingham umbrella, with the firmness of will "braw Scotchmen" are supposed to possess.

It fairly bristled with offensive points. It struck him in the eye; it poked and prodded him till the drops of agony beaded his brow. He almost made an inflammatory remark as he gave up the struggle, and carried the triumphant umbrella in his hand.

What a walk he had over that narrow plank that was laid across the trestle work with water blinking wickedly at him from below, and the umbrella doing its best to trip him up! Finally he shut his eyes and walked by faith.

Once over, they went down the inclined plane that led to the steamer.

There it lay, a new, brightly painted little boat. The captain was a big, red-faced, brawny man, who had a habit of ornamenting his conversation with picturesque expletives.

Mr. Benson experienced a shock of no mean order when he found this same captain looked on him as a being to be regarded with contempt, and pity for having been born a "yankee."

The encounter with the umbrella and the trestle work walk had left Benson rather limp, and he retired soon after supper. The boat did not leave the landing till the next morning, and Mr. Benson was up in time to eat an early breakfast.

He found "the powers that be" on that boat were the cook and a red Irish setter. The dog lay in state, with all mankind to step over him, or spent himself in marks of derision and wrath of low degree that might be visible at the several landings by the way.

So they journeyed, past cypress swamps, where the hoary trees had waded out in the water beyond the shore. There they stood, gnarled and knotty, clothed in mantles of gray moss that swayed mournfully in the wind. Sometimes there was a group of evergreen trees, bright, vividly green. Then a dash of glowing scarlet, where a "black jack" oak stood in its autumnal foliage.

Everywhere was the yellow jassamine,

> "The darling of the springtime."

In one place they saw it covering a grove of low-lying scrub, making it a mass of dewy, perfumed bells, that loaded the whole air with the rich, delicious odor, over which the wild bees hovered,

> "Droning lazily on heavy wing."

Golden and purple butterflies fluttered above it, while, most beautiful of all, a ruby-throated humming bird dashed in and out among the blooming fragrance, like a living jewel.

It was nearly twilight when the boat stopped at "Ryless Ferry." They ran close in to the shore, under a venerable cypress, a veritable King Lear among trees. He dropped his mossy locks over the guards so close that they came against the cabin windows. A solemn old owl sat on a blasted limb near the top, waiting for his love, the night. The negro deck-hands went on shore and built a pine-wood fire and grouped themselves around it.

What a hush came with the night; a dark, mysterious silence brooding along the shores! It was as though some dumb spirit was waiting for the spell of silence to be broken. Then what a cry would rise—a cry of regret, a cry of dispair, for something that could never be. The songs of the negroes rose with that wild, wailing, mournful cadence peculiar to the melodies of the races that have been long in bondage, as a protest that has gone up to high heaven through all the ages.

> "When the gineral roll is called," quavers an old gray headed negro,

> "I'll be dar, I'll be dar," chant the others in a kind of refrain. The flames shoot up, making eerie shadows among the ghosts of cypress trees standing in their shrouds. It is all so wierd, so unreal, so uncanny, that Mr. Benson feels his nerves shaken. He goes to his cabin and to bed. How long he had been asleep he did not know. He was awakened by hearing a woman scream. A late moon had risen, and was sending a stream of light through the window.

He heard voices, and then footsteps. Dressing hastily, he went out on the guards. The moon was just above the horizon, the daylight was not far off. The fire the deck hands had built on shore had gone out, save a few smouldering embers. The owl was flitted to a tree further up the bank, where his "te-whitt, to-whoo! whoo! whoo" was echoed by another in the distance. On the bank was a group made up of several men and two women. One of the latter was struggling with the men and seemed to be trying to throw herself into the water. The other was talking to her in a soft, drawling voice. It took him but a second to reach the spot.

Some one stirred the fire and threw on some branches. It bazed up in a column of flame. The women were brought to the fire and seated on the logs. The deck hands led her who hade caused the excitement.

"Der now! Sit down an' have yo' sef," said one of the negroes, pushing her into a sitting. "What yo' mean, carryin' on an' rarin' up, like yo' done let yo' senses? Hit aint any way fo' any ooman to do, black or white."

The woman's slat sun bonnet had fallen off her head, the long tangled black hair fell in snaky locks about her neck. Her face was so sallow as to be almost orange color. Her eyes were very black, and sunk deep into her head. About the muscles of the mouth was the weak, wavering, uncertain look that confirmed "snuff dippers" always have.

The other woman had taken off her bonnet and laid it in her lap. Her light hair was so grey that it showed in streaks even in the fire light. She had faded blue eyes, rather a pleasant face, with a weak chin and a vague uncertain look. Both women wore faded lavender calico dresses, and strings of blue glass beads about their lank, collarless necks. The other men walked off, with not very subdued remarks concerning the uselessness of "poor white trash."

The cook came up grumbling a few minutes later, and handed the woman who had tried to drown herself a plug of tobacco. She fell to chewing and mumbling it like a hungry dog with a bone. Her companion watched her an instant, then turning to Benson asked in the soft, sweet voice, common to southern women, 'Ain't yo' a preacher man?"

Do you mean a minister?" asked he. "If you do, let me say, madam, that I am not."

She sighed again, and held her feet toward the fire to warm them. "You look like a scholard, any way," she resumed, "an' we all is ignorant. We never learned anything out'n books."

"Jim could read' she added, with evident pride. "He could read print like anything. I've seed him read out'n the New Testament, like he was a preacher; hardly had to skip any of the long words. It didn't help him any, though, ef he was a scholard," she said with a sigh.

"Who is Jim?" asked Mr. Benson.

"I'm coming to that terrectly. I reckon you'll be obliged to let me tell my story like I want to. I'm mighty sorry you'ns isn't a preacher, bekase I'm mightily tore up in my mind about Mary Lizzy over thar," at the same time indicating the woman with the tobacco.

"What about her?" asked Benson.

"She's plum tierstracted to drown herself. 'Pears like I'll fly out my mind when I think she mough do it when I wasn't watching.

"I'm ginerally watchin', but if I was asleep now an' she'd do it an' I didn't know it—"

The woman left her sentence unfinished save by a long-drawn sigh.

"You could not be blamed," said he.

"Thet there aint the pint. That's what I wanted to ax yo' when I thought yo' was a preacher man. I recken yo' can tell me any way. Do yo' really reckon her soul would go down to everlastin' torment, ef she'd kill herself."

The woman bent forward to hear his answer. The wind sighed in the branches overhead, and swung the grey moss mournfully.

Mary Lizy had shut her eyes, and sat dozing.

"I—I—am sure—I—don't quite know, my good woman,—I—I—would really be obliged to think over it awhile," said Mr. Benson hesitatingly.

The woman drew another long sigh, and was silent for a moment. The owl flew back to the tree over head, and seemed to be mocking them with his hoots.

"Thet's it thet's jest it, said she, in her soft voice with it's half plaintive drawl. "Hit ain't me I keer fur, kase he'd know it wasn't my fault. But I reckon 'twould hurt him mightily. Yes, 'twould hurt him in his grave. Thar ain't nobody knows the dead can't see what's gwine on up hyar on the yearth.

She drew her hand across her eyes, and her voice broke a little as she continued:

"'Pears like I never could keer for nobody but Jim. An'—an'—I like to feel he knows what I'm doin' fur his sake.

"Who was Jim?" asked Benson.

"He was the man I 'lowed to marry oncet. He was mighty fond of me, he was. He was the crack shot of the settlement, Jim was. Ef a wild turkey or a deer was raffled, Jim was the one to kerry it off. Jim he'd got our house finished, two rooms an' a patch of ground cleared fur garden truck, an' my weddin' frock was made. Hit was white muslin with a blue posy sprigged over it.

"I never could bar to see thet thar frock. I laid it away out'n my sight. Hit got mightly yallow a-layin' by, but I reckon I'll be laid out in it when I'm dead."

Here she paused again and gazed into the fire.

Mr. Benson asked:

"Did Jim die?"

"No, not terreckly. We'd done been married ef mother hadn't took sick. She'd had a misery in her head all spring, an' she was sick mightily. Sometimes we'd think she was plum gone. We sont for Mary Lizy to come an' help us. Thet thar is her," nodding her head toward the other, now fast asleep and snoring audibly.

"She is my cousin, Mary Lizy is. Mother kep' a lingerin' along an' I nussin' her, an' I didn't have much time fur Jim. Bimeby hit all kim out; him and Mary Lizy had got to makin' love. 'Peared like I'd die when I found hit out. I didn't feel mad at Jim; he couldn't help it. I went down to the river bank whar Jim was. Hit was a bright day, an' the sun was shinin' on the water, powerful. I kain't ever see the sun on the water, 'thout'n feelin' the same way as I did thet day.

"Sez I, 'Jim, I've kim to give yo' up to her.' Sez I, 'Jim, our Heav'nly Father knows I ain't nauthin' agin yo'.' And he busted out crying like a woman.

"Well, we talked it over. Jim, he wanted me to marry him any way. But, Lord! I couldn't do thet thar. 'Peared like my heart would break to hyar him talk. But I hilt on to what I thought was right.

"Bime by he left me. The sun was gettin' low. I was settin' on the river bank. I watched him goin' up the path through the bushes. I knowed he was goin' to Mary Lizy. 'Peared like I kind 'o lost my senses then. 'Peared like I done fo'got whar I was. When I kim to myself 'twas late night. The stars was shinin' an' the owls was hootin' same as thet thar one in the tree."

Mr. Benson felt an unaccountable huskiness in his throat.

Why should this story, told by an ignorant, unlettered woman affect him in such a manner? He leaned toward her and said:

"Well, go on."

"Thar ain't much mo' to tell. They war married an' they kep' house in the place Jim'd fixed fur me. Mary Lizy was a well-lookin' gal. Yo' wouldn't reckon so now, but she was. But she was no 'count. She use'n to dip snuff like we all's do, but she dipped pow'ful, an' she chewed, an' she smoked constant. She tuk to likin' whisky mightily, too. Hit onsettled her nerves. Her baby died, an' thet was a blessin'. Jim said so. Five years ago come this spring, he died. I was thar thet night. He took hold my hand. Sez he: 'I ain't seen a happy minit,' sez he; an' I'm sorry.' Then I seen the death-shadders creeping up his face, but I couldn't cry. 'Peared like somethin' choked me; but I couldn't cry. Mary Lizy had been gwin on curius for some days, an' thet thar night she tried to drown herself. Said she would, first er last; an' Jim he hilt close to my hand. Sez he: "Don't let he do thet thar. She's out'n her head, she is, but I reckon her soul would be done lost ef she killed herself. Don't let her go to torment. His eyes looked wild while he was talkin', but he calmed down when I promised ter watch her.

"He died befo' day-break—'peared like I was glad and sorry both.

"Thet's all. I'm jest watchin' Mary Lizy. She's gettin' wuss. Twouldn't be so hard if she war sick in bed; but I reckon it don't matter ef I kin keep up with her. Sometimes when I'm asleep I see Jim. He ain't a dream—hit's him—his sperrit—he knows all 'bout it."

Then her voice fell to a lower key, as she added: "I kain't help thinkin' 'twill be different in the next world. Hit ain't the same as this hyar yearth. I feel like God Almighty will let me an' Jim keer fur each other, up thar."

While she had been talking, the dawn had crept noiselessly over the earth. It showed the gray river sweeping along under the grayer sky; the dreary winds swaying the moss like funeral wreaths; the cypress trees standing to their knees in the water; the last waning moonbeams stealing across the hill tops.

Colorless, devoid of light, of everything that can make life worth living, was this life, passed in this dreary wilderness; passed in heroic self-sacrifice, whose extent she herself did not comprehend!

But the man who listened to her, his eyes moist with unusual tears, felt that his fine-spun theories of differences in human nature were swept away as though they had been cobwebs.

Takes Time to Explode.

If one particle of a mass of dynamite is exploded the explosion of the rest of the mass is ordinarily supposed to be instantaneous, but it is not quite so. If a lot of dynamite was housed in a continuous train of four miles it would take a second for it all to explode. Even this is scarcely any appreciable length of time, but if a continuous train of dynamite were poured over the ground between San Francisco and New York City it would take a quarter of an hour for the explosion to reach from one point to the other. A man, therefore, might sit on the end of the train of powder in New York City and be in perfect safety for fifteen minutes after the San Francisco end of the train had begun to explode.—San Francisco Call.

Should an Actor Feel with His Characters?

On the mooted question whether an actor is to feel with the characters he personates and experience at every performance, again and again, the emotion he expresses, or whether he is to remain calm and master of himself, M. Coquelin is most convincing. He is fully in accord with Diderot, in whose "Paradoxe sur le Comedein" the case is argued at length. To move others, the actor must keep himself unmoved. "I am persuaded," he says, "the a man can be a great actor only on the condition that he governs himself absolutely, and that he is able to express at will, sentiments that he does not feel, that by his very nature he never could feel." Real emotion makes the actor stutter and sob, and deprives him of the physical force and mental clearness which his work demands. 'The Paradoxe' of Diderot' he said to me once, "is not a paradox at all; it is the absolute truth." Perhaps M. Coquelin pushes the theory to extremes in refusing to allow an actor to avail himself of a natural advantage, like the gift of shedding tears at will. I remember once hearing him summarily judge a certain actress: "She weeps on the stage! for me, that is enough—she is a mediocre artist."

I happened to quote this once to Mr. Edwin Booth, and I received from him a strange confirmation of M. Coquelin's opinion. Mr. Booth told me that sometimes when he had been acting in the "Fool's Revenge," he had felt a singular sympathy with the character he was performing. On one occasion in particular the pathos of the poor jester's hard fate appealed to him more powerfully than it had been wont to do; he began to identify himself with the twisted and tortured Bertuccio; the tears rose to his eyes and streamed down his face; his voice was broken with honest emotion; he felt the part as never before; and it seemed to him that he had never played it so well. And yet, when the play was over and he left the theatre, his daughter, his surest critic, who had seen the performance from a stage-box, asked him what had been the matter, as she had never seen him act the part so badly. —Brander Matthews in Scribner's Magazine.

What's a Bishop?

Father Carroll, now minister at St. Francis Xavier's Church in New York, was once stationed at the mission among the colored Catholics on the Maryland peninsula. He tells some amusing stories of these interesting people. For example, he was once preparing a class of colored children for confirmation by Archbishop Gibbons, and was anxious to have them appear well. He was with them in a field adjoining the church, and was explaining to them that it was the bishop alone who could administer the sacrament.

I was at a loss for a moment to show them, by a familiar figure, the relative difference between a priest and a bishop, when I heard the "honk! honk!" of a flock of wild geese flying over our heads, and called the children's attention to the leader who headed the flight.

"This," I said, "my dear children, will give you an idea of what a bishop is—the leader of his flock."

We got along after that first-rate and in a day or two, when the Archbishop arrived, I related with pride how much progress my little charges had made, and begged his Grace to question them himself in the catechism. He promised to do so, and soon the hour of the ceremony was at hand.

After giving them some kindly words of encouragement and advice, the bishop, before going into the church, began asking them a few questions, and finally he asked, "What is a bishop?" There was a pause for an instant, and then an ebony midget shot up his hand, and said, "I know! I know!"

"That's well, my child," said Archbishop Gibbons. "Now tell us what is a bishop."

"He," answered the ardent youth, with the zest that betokened the confidence of superior wisdom, "is the old gander what shows the rest of the geese how to fly!"

The face of the Archbishop, in his effort to retain his episcopal dignity, was a sight, and I was so overcome by the mortification of this unexpected denouement that I had to abandon my charge for a while to regain my composure. It was long before I heard the last of my boasted class.—The Churchman.

The Slang of Shakespeare.

From the Pittsburgh Dispatch.

The power of Shakespeare over the public is shown by the extent to which his phrases, and even his slang, have become incorporated into our language. Among these, are "bag and baggage," "dead as a door-nail," "hit or miss," "love is blind," "selling for a song," "wide world," "fast and loose," "unconsidered trifles," "westward ho," "familiarity breeds contempt," "patching up excuses," "misery makes stange bedfellows," "to boot," (in a trade), "long and short of it," "comb your head with a three-legged stool," "dancing attendance," "getting even," (revenge), "birds of a feather," "that's flat," "Greek to me," (unintelligible), "packing a jury," "mother wit," "killed with kindness," "mum" (for silence), "ill wind that blows no good," "wild goose chase," "scarecrow," "luggage," "row of pins," (as a mark of value), "viva voce," "give and take," "sold" (in the way of a joke), "your cake is dough." The girl who playfully calls some youth a "milksop" is also unconsciously quoting Shakespeare, and even "loggerhead" is of the same origin. "Extempore" is first found in Shakespeare, and so are "almanacs." Shakespeare is the first author that speaks of "the man in the moon," or mentions the potato, or uses the term "eyesore" for annoyance.

Farm and Household.

Make Farm Life Interesting.

The Pennsylvania Farmer gives a sure recipe for making farm-life interesting and for stopping the grumbling of the boys. It is to awaken an interest in the remarkable things to be found in nature on a farm.

Have one of the boys explain why grass is dark green when it grows rapidly. Tell him that clover is not grass, then have him find out what it is. Give him the books to find out these things. Give him something to think and talk about connected with the intensely interesting operations of nature going on around him, and the furrows will be shorter, the hot days cooler, the commands to horses and cows more pleasant but just as impressive; his face will be drawn in handsomer lines, and his thoughts purer ideals.

The Bottle of Oil.

Once upon a time there lived an old gentleman in a large house. He had servants and everything he wanted, but he was not happy, and when things did not go as he wished he was cross. At last his servants left him. Quite out of temper, he went to a neighbor with the story of his distress.

"It seems to me," said the neighbor, "it would be well for you to oil yourself a little."

"To oil myself?"

"Yes; and I will explain. Some time ago one of the doors in my house creaked. Nobody, therefore, liked to go in or out by it. One day I oiled its hinges; it has been constantly used by everybody since."

"Then you think I am like your creaking door," cried the old gentleman. "How do you want me to oil myself?"

"That's an easy matter," said the neighbor. "Go home and engage a servant; and when he does right praise him. If on the contrary, he does something amiss, do not be cross; oil your voice and words with the oil of love."

The old gentleman went home, and no harsh or ugly word was heard in his house afterward. Every family should have a bottle of this oil, for every family is likely to have a creaking hinge in the shape of a fretful disposition, a harsh tone. A little oil of kindness will remedy the trouble.

Cold Water Before Breakfast.

A thin, tall man got up early the other morning at the Fifth Avenue Hotel and coming downstairs ordered two glasses of water at the liquid refreshment counter. The trained bartender smiled, but handed out two large glasses full of pure cold water. The man smacked his lips and said it was a healthy drink before breakfast, and one that he recommended.

"You look thin, sir?"

"Yes, I do, but if I had not drunk cold water before breakfast I might have been in my grave long ago. I am a physician or rather was one before I retired, and have made a study of liquids. Water, drunk freely before meals, has a very beneficial result, for it washes away the mucous secreted during the intervals of repose. The membrane thus cleansed is in much better condition to receive food and convert it into soluble compounds. In the morning the accumulation of mucous is specially marked when the gastric walls are covered with a thick, tenacious layer. Now, food entering the stomach at this time will become covered with this tenacious coating, which for a time protects it from the action of gastric ferments and so retards digestion. Your man with a tubular contracted stomach, with its puckered mucous lining and viscid contents, a normal condition in the morning, before breakfast, is not suitable to receive food. A glass of water washes out the stomach, gives tone, and prepares the alimentary canal for the morning meal."

The Farm Garden.

Most gardners laugh at our advice, but we are now talking to farmers who have a small garden. If your garden is a little pent up affair, with a fence around it in which your work is mostly done by hand, we urge that the whole system be changed. A farmer cannot afford to cultivate a garden that way. He must, to make the garden profitable, do most of the work with a horse. It is better to have two or three rows along the edge of the cornfield devoted to the smaller garden truck than to have a little patch with beds in it that requirhes hand labor entirely to tend it. It does not matter if carrots, lettuce, salsify, parsnips, and peppers grow in one row forty rods long, if they are only grown. The reason that so few farm houses are supplied with vegetables is due to the unfortunate method of gardening pursued. There are a number of farmers' gardens we see each summer upon which a large portion of the contents is put in every spring and the seeds sown, but after this no attention is given to it, and weeds of enormus growth are the leading crop every season. There is one farmer of our acquaintance who has half a dozen rows across a large field given up to the garden and in these he grows everything needed in the family in the way of small fruit and vegetables. The horse and cultivator do most of the work, and the aggregate expense of caring for each row is not much more than if it were planted to potatoes. In sowing seeds a great many people make the mistake of planting too deep. Nearly all of the smaller garden seeds if covered with a light sprinkling of fine soil and pressed down with the foot are in good shape to grow. We prefer the pressure of the foot to any rolling that can be done.

Sick Headache

Is one of the most distressing affections; and people who are its victims deserve sympathy. But the great success Hood's Sarsaparilla has had in curing sick headache make it seem almost foolish to allow the trouble to continue. By its toning and invigorating effect upon the digestive organs, Hood's Sarsaparilla readily gives relief when headache arises from indigestion; and in neuralgic conditions by building up the debilitated system, Hood's Sarsaparilla removes the cause and hence overcomes the difficulty.

TALMAGE'S SERMON.

Dr. Talmage Discourses to the Canadians on the Camp Grounds at Grimsby.

Grimsby, Can., Aug. 26. The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., of Brooklyn, preached on the camp ground, this place, to-day. All Canada was represented in the immense throngs assembled. Dr. Talmage has preached at Grimsby many summers. This closes his summer absence. He has preached, lectured and visited in 13 states of the Union this summer, his audiences numbering 10,000 and 15,000 people. The subject of his sermon here to-day was "Great Results May Depend on Small Events." Dr. Talmage took for his text: "Through a window, in a basket, was I let down by the wall." II Cor., ii., 33. He said:

Damascus is a city of white and glistening architecture, sometimes called "the eye of the East," sometimes called "a pearl surrounded by emeralds;" at one time distinguished for swords of the best material called Damascus blades, and upholstery of richest fabric called damasks. A horseman by the name of Paul, riding toward this city, had been thrown from the Saddle. The horse had dropped under a flash from the sky, which at the same time was so bright it blinded the rider for many days, and I think so permanently injured his eyesight that this defect of vision became the thorn in the flesh he afterwards speaks of. He started for Damascus to butcher Christians, but after that hard fall from his horse he was a changed man, and preached Christ in Damascus till the city was shaken to its foundation.

The mayor gives authority for his arrest, and the popular cry is "Kill him! Kill him!" The city is surrounded by a high wall, and the gates are watched by the police lest the Cicilian preacher escape. Many of the houses are built on the wall, and their balconies projected clear over and hovered above the gardens outside. It was customary to lower baskets out of these balconies and pull up fruits and flowers from the gardens. To this day visitors at the monastery of Mount Sinai are lifted and let down in baskets. Detectives prowled around from house to house looking for Paul, but his friends hid him now in one place, now in another. He is no coward as 50 incidents of his life demonstrate. But he feels his work is not done yet, and so he evades assassination. "Is that preacher here?" the foaming mob shout at one house door. "Is that fanatic here?" the police shout at another house door. Sometimes on the street incognito he passes through a crowd of clenched fists and sometimes he secretes himself on the house top. At last the infuriate populace get on sure track of him. They have positive evidence that he is in the house of one of the Christians, the balcony of whose home reaches over the wall. "Here he is! Here he is!" The vociferation and blasphemy and howling of the pursuers are at the front door. They break in. "Fetch out that Gospelizer, and let us hang his head on the city gate. Where is he?" The emergency was terrible. Providentially there was a good stout basket in the house. Paul's friends fasten a rope to the basket. Paul steps into it. The basket is lifted to the edge of the balcony on the wall, and then while Paul holds on to the rope with both hands his friends lower away carefully and cautiously, slowly but surely, further down and further down, until the basket strikes the earth and the apostle steps out, and alone starts on that famous missionary tour, the story of which has astonished earth and Heaven. Appropriate entry in Paul's diary of travels: "Through a window, in a basket, was I let down by the wall."

Observe, first, on what slender tenure great results hang. The ropemaker who twisted that cord fastened to that lowering basket never knew how much would depend on the strength of it. How if it had been broken and the apostle's life had been dashed out? What would have become of the Christian Church? All that magnificent missionary work in Pamphilia, Cappadocia, Galatia, Macedonia would never have been accomplished. All his writings that make up so indispensible and enchanting a part of the New Testament would never have been written: The story of the resurrection would never have been so gloriously told as he told it. That example of heroic and triumphant endurance of Philippi, in the Mediterranean euroclydon, under flagellation and at his beheading would not have kindled the courage of 10,000 mortydoms. But that rope holding that basket, how much depended on it! So again and again great results have hung on what seemed slender circumstances.

Did ever ship of many thousand tons crossing the sea have such important passenger as had once a boat of leaves, from taffrail to stern only three or four feet, the vessel made waterproof by a coat of bitumen and floating on the Nile with the infant lawgiver of the Jews on board. What if some crocodile should crunch it? What if some of the cattle wading in for a drink should sink it? Vessels of war sometimes carry 40 guns looking through the port-holes, ready to open battle. But that tiny craft on the Nile seems to be armed with all the guns of thunder that bombarded Sinai at the law-giving. On how fragile craft sailed how much of historical importance!

The parsonage at Epworth, England, is on fire in the night, and the father rushed through the hallway for the rescue of his children. Seven children are out and safe on the ground, but one remains in the consuming building. That one wakes, and, finding his bed on fire and the building crumbling, comes to the window, and two peasants make a ladder of their bodies, one peasant standing on the shoulder of the other, and down the human ladder the boy descends—John Wesley. If you would know how much depended on that ladder of peasants ask the millions of Methodists on both sides of the sea. Ask their mission stations all around the world. Ask their hundreds of thousands already ascended to join their founder, who would have perished but for the living stairs of peasants' shoulders.

An English ship stopped at Pitcairn island, and right in the midst of surrounding cannibalism and squalor, the passengers discovered a Christian colony of churches and schools and beautiful homes and highest style of religion and civilization. For 50 years no missionary and no Christian influence had landed there. Why this oasis of light amid a desert of heathendom? Sixty years before a ship had met with disaster, and one of the sailors, unable to save anything else, went to his trunk and took out a Bible which his mother had placed there, and swam ashore, the Bible held in his teeth. The book was read on all sides until the rough and vicious population were evangelized, and a church was started, and an enlightened commonwealth established, and the world's history has no more brilliant page than that which tells of the transformation of a nation by one book. It did not seem of much importance whether the sailor continued to hold the book in his teeth or let it fall in the breakers, but upon what small circumstances depended what mighty results!

Practical inference: There are no insignificances in our lives. The minutest thing is part of a multitude. Infinity is made up of infinitesimals. Great things an aggregation of small things. Bethlehem manger pulling on a star in the Eastern sky. One book in a drenched sailor's mouth the evangelization of a multitude. One boat of papyrus on the Nile freighted with events for all ages. The fate of Christendom in a basket let down from a window on the wall. What you do, do well. If you make a rope make it strong and true, for you know not how much may depend on your workmanship. If you fashion a boat let it be waterproof, for you know not who may sail in it. If you put a Bible in the trunk of your boy as he goes from home, let it be heard in your prayers, for it may have a mission as far-reaching as the book which the sailor carried in his teeth to the Pitcairn beach. The plainest man's life is an island between two eternities—eternity past rippling against his shoulders, eternity to come touching his brow. The casual, the accidental, that which merely happens so, are parts of a great plan, and the rope that lets the fugitive apostle from the Damascus wall is the cable that holds to its mooring the ship of the Church in the north-east storm of the centuries.

Again notice unrecognized and unrecorded services. Who spun the rope? Who tied it to the basket? Who steadied the illustrious preacher as he stepped into it? Who relaxed not a muscle of the arm or dismissed an anxious look from his face until the basket touched the ground and discharged its magnificent cargo? Not one of their names has come to us, but there was no work that day in Damascus or in all the earth compared with the importance of their work. What if they had in the agitation tied a knot that could slip? What if the sound of a mob at the door had led them to say: "Paul must take care of himself, and we will take care of ourselves." No, no! They held the rope, and in doing so did more for the Christian church than any thousand of us will ever accomplish. But God knows and has made eternal record of their undertaking. And they know. How exultant they must have felt when they read his letters to the Romans, to the Corinthians, to the Galatians, to the Ephesians, to the Philipians, to the Colossians, to the Thessalonians, to Timothy, to Titus, Philemon, to the Hebrews, and when they heard how he walked out of prison with the earthquake unlocking the door for him, and took command of the Alexandrian corn-ship when the sailors were nearly scared to death, and preached a sermon that nearly shook Felix off his judgment-seat. I hear the men and women who help him down through the window and over the wall talking in private over the matter, and saying: "How glad I am that we effected that rescue! In coming times others may get glory of Paul's work, but no one shall rob us of the satisfaction of knowing that we held the rope."

There are said to be about 60,000 ministers of religion in this country. About 50,000, I warrant, came from early homes which had to struggle for the necessaries of life. The sons of rich bankers and merchants generally become bankers and merchants. The most of those who become ministers are the sons of those who had terrific struggle to get their everyday bread. The collegiate and theological education of that son took every luxury from the parental table for eight years. The other children were more scantily appareled. The son at college every little while got a bundle from home. In it were the socks that mother had knit, sitting up late at night, her sight not as good as once it was.

And there also were some delicacies from the sister's hand for the voracious appetite of a hungry student. The father swung the heavy cradle through the wheat, the sweat rolling from his chin bedewing every step of the way, then sitting down under the cherry tree at noon thinking to himself: "I am fearfully tired, but it will pay if I can see that boy through college, and if I can know that he will be preaching the gospel after I am dead. The younger children want to know why they can't have this and that as others do, and the mother says: "Be patient, my children, until your brother graduates and then you shall have more luxuries, but we must see that boy through." The years go by, and the son has been ordained and is preaching the glorious gospel, and a great revival comes, and souls by scores and hundreds accept the gospel from the lips of that young preacher, and father and mother, quite old now, are visiting the son at the village parsonage, and at the close of a Sabbath of mighty blessing, father mother retire to their room, the son lighting the way and asking them if he could do anything to make them more comfortable, saying if they want anything in the night just to knock on the wall. And then all alone father and mother talk over the gracious influences of the day, and say:

"Well, it was worth all we went through to educate that boy. It was a hard pull, but we held on till the work was done. The world may not know it, but, mother, we held the rope, didn't we?" And the voice, tremulous with joyful emotion, responds: "Yes, father, we held the rope, I feel my work is done. Now, Lord, lettest Thou thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation." "Pshaw!" says the father, "I never felt so much like living in my life as now. I want to see what that fellow is going on to do, he has begun so well."

Something occurs to me quite personal. I was the youngest of a large family of children. My parents were neither rich nor poor; four of the sons wanted collegiate education, and four obtained it, but not without great home struggle. We never heard the old people say once that they were denying themselves to affect this, but I remember now that my parents always looked tired. I don't think that they ever got rested until they lay down in the Sommerville cemetery. My mother would sit down in the evening, and say: "Well, I don't know what makes me feel so tired!" Father would fall immediately to sleep, seated by the evening stand, overcome with the day's fatigues. One of the four brothers, after preaching the gospel for about fifty years entered upon his heavenly rest. Another of the four is now on the other side of the earth, a missionary of the cross. Two of us are in this land in the holy ministry, and I think all of us are willing to acknowledge our obligation to the old folks at home. About 21 years ago the one, and about 24 the other, put down the burdens of this life, but they still hold the rope.

O, men and women here assembled, you brag sometimes how you have fought your way in the world, but I think there have been helpful influence that you have never fully acknowledged. Has there not been some influence in your early or present home that the world cannot see? Does there not reach to you from among the Canadian hills, or western prairie, or from southern plantation, or from English or Scottish or Irish home a cord of influence that has kept you right when you would have gone astray, and which, after you had made a crooked track, recalled you? The rope may be as long as thirty years or five hundred miles long or three thousand miles long, but hands that went out of mortal sight long ago still hold the rope. You want a very swift horse, and you need to rowel him with sharpest spurs, and let the reins lie loose upon the neck, and to give a shout to a racer, if you are going to ride out of reach of your mother's prayers. Why, a ship crossing the Atlantic in seven days can't sail away from that! A sailor finds them on the lookout as he takes his place, and finds them on the mast as he climbs the ratlines to disentangle a rope in the tempest, and finds them swinging on the hammock when he turns in. Why not be frank and acknowledge it—the most of us would long ago have been dashed to pieces had not gracious hands steadily and lovingly and mightily held the rope.

But there must come a time when we shall find out who these Damascenes were who lowered Paul in the basket, and greet them and all those who have rendered to God and the world unrecognized and unrecorded services. That is going to be one of the glad excitements of heaven—the hunting up and picking out of those who did good on earth and got no credit for it. Here the church has been going on 19 centuries and this is probably the first sermon ever recognizing the services of the people in that Damascus balcony. Charles G. Finney said to a dying Christian: "Give my love to St. Paul when you meet him." When you and I meet him, as we will, I shall ask him to introduce me to those people who got him out of the Damascene peril.

We go into long sermons to prove that we will be able to recognize people in heaven, when there is one reason we fail to present, and that is better than all—God will introduce us. We shall have them all pointed out. You would not be guilty of the impoliteness of having friends in your parlor not introduced, and celestial politeness will demand that we be made acquainted with all the heavenly household. What rehearsal of old times and recital of stirring reminiscences. If others fail to give introduction, God will take us through, and before our 24 hours in heaven—if it were calculated by earthly time-pieces—have passed, we shall meet and talk with mere heavenly celebrities than in our entire mortal state we met with earthly celebrities. Many who made great noise of usefulness will sit on the last seat by the front door of the heavenly temple, while right up within arm's reach of the heavenly throne will be many who, though they could not preach themselves or do great exploits for God, nevertheless held the rope.

Come, let us go right up and accost those on this circle of heavenly thrones. Surely, they must have killed in battle a million men. Surely, they must have been buried with all the cathedrals sounding a dirge and all the towers of all the cities tolling the national grief. Who art thou, mighty one of heaven? "I lived by choice the unmarried daughter in an humble home that I might take care of my parents in their old age, and I endured without complaints all their querulousness and administered to all their wants for 20 years."

Let us pass on round the circle of thrones. Who art thou, mighty one of heaven? "I was for 30 years a Christian invalid, and suffered all the while, occasionally writing a note of sympathy for those worse off than I, and was general confident of all those who had trouble, and once in a while I was strong enough to make a garment for that poor family in the back lane." Pass on to another throne. Who are thou mighty one of heaven? "I was the mother who raised a whole family of children for God and they are out in the world Christian merchants, Christian mechanics, Christian wives, and I have had full reward of all my toil." Let us pass on in the circle of thrones. "I had a Sabbath school class, and they were always on my heart, and they all entered the kingdom of God, and I am waiting for their arrival."

But who art thou, the mighty one of heaven on this other throne? In time of bitter persecution I owned a house in Damascus, a house on the wall. A man who preached Christ was hounded from street to street, and I hid from the assassins, and when I found them braking in my house and I could no longer keep him safely, I adviced him to flee for his life, and a basket was let down over the wall with the maltreated man in it, and I was one who helped hold the rope." And I said: "Is that all?" and he answered, "That is all." And while I was lost in amazement I heard a strong voice that sounded as though it might once have been hoarse from many exposures and triumphant as though it might have belonged to one of the martyrs, and it said: "Not many mighty, not many noble are called, but God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty, and base things of the world and things which are despised hath God chosen, yea and things which are not to bring to naught things which are, that no flesh should glory in His presence." And I looked to see from whence the voice came, and lo! it was the very one who had said: "Through a window, in a basket, was I let down by the wall."

Henceforth think of nothing as insignificant. A little thing may decide your all. A Cunarder put out from England for New York. It was well equipped, but in putting up a stove in the pilot box a nail was driven too near the compass. The ship's officer deceived by that distracted compass, put the ship 200 miles off her right course, and suddenly the man on the lookout cried, "Land ho!" and the ship was halted within a few yards of her demolition on Nantucket shoals. A sixpenny nail came near wrecking a Cunarder. Small ropes hold mighty destinies.

A minister seated in Boston at his table, lacking a word puts his hand behind his head and tilts back his chair to think, and the ceiling falls and crushes the table and would have crushed him. A minister in Jamaica at night, by the light of an insect called the candle-fly, is kept from stepping over a precipice a hundred feet. F. W. Robertson, the celebrated English clergyman, said that he entered the ministry from a train of circumstances started by the barking of a dog. Had the wind blown one way on a certain day, the Spanish inquisition would have been established in England, but it blew the other way, and that dropped the accursed institution with 75,000 tons of shipping to the bottom of the sea, or flung the splintered logs on the rocks.

Nothing unimportant in your life or mine. Three noughts placed on the right side of the figure one make a thousand, and six noughts on the right side of the figure one, a million, and our nothingness placed on the right side may be augmentation illimitable. All the ages of time and eternity were affected by the basket let down from a Damascus balcony.

A Curious Bear.

N. Y. Sun Waterloo, N. Y. Special.

Andrew McKinney and Will Sullivan live in Jayville, a small settlement in the Adirondacks, thirty miles north of Carthage. Both are engaged in lumbering and bark peeling, and left their camp in the woods to come out to Harrisville, some twelve or fifteen miles away. They were driving slowly, about five miles from Jayville, when their horses began to snort and plunge, and a bear of enormous proportions came out of the brush and took a position in the road not more than five rods ahead of them. The brute did not seem to be the least concerned, but reared up on his haunches, disputing the right of way. The men had all they could do to manage the affrighted horses, and came to the conclusion that either the bear must be induced to move out of the way or they must turn round and go back. They had no firearms. McKinney declares that he saw a grin on the animals face while they discussed the situation. They finally concluded to turn the team about and let the bear chase them back over the road provided he did not take kindly to being bombarded with stones, which were plenty in the road. When everything was ready for a speedy retreat, McKinney held the horses while Sullivan, who was the strongest, opened the fusilade. The bear sat still and seemed to watch the proceedings with renewed interest. He didn't even wink as the missiles hizzed past him, and when one struck him on the shoulder he did not wince, but he struck at the next one with his paw in a way that showed some bad blood. Finally Sullivan got in a two-pound stone on the brute's head, and it seemed to make him weary of the fun. He dropped down on all fours and Sullivan made for the wagon. Bruin, however, showed no disposition to follow, but simply moved out into the brush about two rods from the road where he stopped and sat up to watch for further developments. The men turned their horses about and drove by unmolested. Both of them have encountered bears in the North Woods before, but they join in the assertion that they never saw one with as little fight in him and such ungovernable curiosity as this one.

The Affectation of Mourning.

From the Forum.

There are certain aspects of "Christian burial,' which have grown so discordant with our more intelligent forms of social life that they have become even ludicrous, and can, therefore, be most wholesomely treated with the caustic of ridicule. The most conspicuous of these is covered and described by the comprehensive name of "mourning." I have heard a brilliant society belle sorrowing bitterly over the fact that, just as her most impressive costumes were prepared for a season's campaign, the demise of a distant relative made it necessary for her to "go into mourning"—a fact which had but the one compensating circumstance, that "black was becoming to her."

In all the large cities stores may be found where the mortuary expert can determine to a shade the style of dress that constitutes "full mourning," and where the length of the veil is solemnly regarded as expressive of what Mr. Mould termed "filial affection." There is "mourning jewelry," "mourning visiting cards," "mourning stationery," "mourning etiquette;" and I know of one gentleman who carried his loyalty to these "modes and shows of grief" to the extent of having the blue ribbons that adorned his nightgown replaced with black! But the ghastly humor reaches its climax in the contemplation of "half-mourning," or "second mourning." This symbolizes sorrow vanishing through the ministration of the milliner and the mantua maker! It is an interesting but certainly not an edifying sight to see a blooming young widow pass through those various stages of grief which rigid etiquette demands from the midnight gloom of costly crape, through the subdued twilight of "second mourning," back to the full daylight of gorgeous color.

The commissioners canvassed the matter carefully and asked legal advice from Judge Tripp before deciding. The fight on local option will be red hot. A prohibition club will be organized for work, while brewers and liquor dealers are arranging to make a warm contest.

A Tiny Traveler.

Among the passengers who arrived on the overland train the other day was a little girl 9 years old. Her appearance was very attractive and would invite more than a passing glance from the least observing. A large, wide-awake straw hat shaded a high, white forehead, over which fell dark, glossy hair, which hung in wavy ringlets to her shoulders. Two large, black eyes, a straight nose, cherry lips, and sun burned cheeks made up a face of exquisite loveliness. Her dress was covered with a gingham apron, on which was pinned a card bearing the inscription: "Maud Steele, Crescent City, Cal." The little tot had traveled from Cedar Falls, Minn., where her parents had formerly lived. Her mother had died when Maud was quite young and her father was accidentally killed some months ago. The people of Cedar Falls, learning that she had an aunt living in Crescent City, Del Norte county, Cal., made up a purse for her, and, placing her in charge of the conductor of the train, started her out on her long journey. She was transferred from one conductor to another and from train to train, until she arrived under the protecting wing of Transfer Agent Kent, who will send her to her aunt. The little orphan said that she enjoyed the trip and that every one she met was very kind to her.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Military Stratagem.

Evidently the commander of soldiers, like the school-teacher, needs to deal occasionally in artifice. Authority will not always answer in enforcing submission. A Russian officer gives the following account of an incident which happened during the Tekke campaign, while he and his soldiers lay encamped before the enemy, who might, at any moment, attack them. Some of the officers had gone to the tent of a comrade to drink tea, and after tea they had a second course, consisting of cognac and wine. Soon the camp rang with songs.

I despatched my orderly with a request that the officers cease singing; but he presently returned, saying that they anxiously desired permission to continue.

What could be done? To remonstrate further with them might, in their present condition, result in unpleasantness. As I meditated, the subaltern on duty came up and said to me, in a whisper:

"Your Honor, let one of the sentinels fire!"

"What do you mean?"

"I mean fire along the line, as though at the enemy," he explained, with a smile.

I guessed at his meaning, and was highly delighted with it; only an alarm could sober the carousing officers.

"See to it," I said. "Be prudent; don't babble!"

I went to my tent, and lay down on my bed, that I might not seem to be expecting anything. Five minutes later, from some place far away in the line of sentinels, rang out a loud discharge, It was echoed by another near by, followed by a third and fourth. Shouts were heard, "Ala-arm!"

The drummer sprang out of a neighboring tent, and beat the alarm. The songs ceased in a instant. Cries and exclamations rang out.

"Where's my cap?"

"Where's my sword?"

"There it is yonder!" Give it here!"

"We must run down there as soon as possible!"

The shots became more frequent. The drummer continued to beat with increasing vigor. The garrison rushed from their tents, and took their places along the earthworks. Soon everything quieted down. I made the rounds of the fortifications, and found the officers at their posts.

For a quarter of an hour we stood thus, in expectation of an attack; then I dismissed the company to their places, and the camp returned to silence.

The United States Supreme Court.

New York Graphic.

The opening of the Supreme Court is one of the stage accessories to official life at Washington. Any one who has ever been present will never forget the scene. The room is a stuffy one at best and is rather an owlish-looking place. One placid-faced negro sits at the door with a string in his hand to help him open it without trouble. Another but a white-haired son of Africa sits inside to aid him. Neither one of them would demean himself by pulling the string for any one less than a Senator or a member of the House. Ordinary citizens must push their way inside unaided. No one must carry a newspaper openly within the sacred precincts, for the rule is absolute that no reading of journals is allowed in the court, Nor must any notes of the proceedings be taken—the official reporter is to do all that.

Once inside suppose the clock over the door is striking noon. If it is striking at all that is the hour one hears, for it never sounds save to call the court together. Behind the long curtains that hang in the rear of the bench the Judges are formed, dressed in their silken robes. The grave faced old crier stands at one end of the court and then looks sternly around to note if all are in proper state to receive their honors. Then, with an elevated chin and a loud voice, he announces, "The Honorable the Chief Justice and the Associated Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States!" The audience rises, the curtain parts, the Judges step forward and, bowing low, stand an instant facing those present, who return the salutation. "Oyez' oyez," says the modulated voice of the crier; "all persons having any business with the Honorable the Supreme Court of the United States are admonished to draw near' for the court is now in session." And, with a quick, sharp glance around to see that no unregenerate citizen has yet dared to be seated, the official adds, impressively, "God save the United States and this honorable court." The business has begun.

We went to spend a day in the country, and had a fine treat of fried chicken for dinner. Then we took a walk with children, who led the way to the chicken coop.

"Papa did; but they are going to die anyway, 'cause they had the pip."

"What became of them?" (This with a heavy heart and squeamish stomach.)

"We fried 'em for dinner," answered the child, sorrowfully.

Shocking Accident.

So read the headlines of many a newspaper column, and we peruse with palpating interest the details of the catastrophy, and are deeply impressed by the sacrifice of human lives involved. Yet thousand of men and women are falling victims every year to that terrible disease, consumption (scrofula of the lungs), and they and their friends are satisfied to believe the malady incurable. Now, there could be no greater mistake. No earthly power, of course, can restore a lung that is entirely wasted, but Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will rapidly and surely arrest the ravages of consumption, if taken in time. Do not, therefore, despair, until you have tried this wonderful remedy.

The President and Col. Lamont have returned to Washington.

Genteel Quacks.

"Yes, it pays," said a big, fat physician, with a name which is known throughout the medical world. "I have a practice worth $40,000 a year." "Women?" "Yes, you've guessed it first time. They pay $10 every time they come into my office. When one gets on my list I tell you she stays"? and Dr. H—— laughed long and loud. This is quackery—gilt-edged, genteel quackery—to keep suffering woman paying tribute year in and year out, and doing them no good. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Perscription cures the peculiar weaknesses and diseases of women. It does not lie to them nor rob them.

If you "go for" the caterpillars and canker worms now it will save much trouble later.

John Farrell, of New York threw a bucketful of boiling water on an old woman who was sitting on the curbstones in front of his saloon. When William Booney tried to assist the screaming woman the irascible saloonkeeper fractured his skull with a blow from a beer bottle. Farrell was locked up to await the result of the injuries of his two victims, who were sent to a hospital.

However much the third party advocates try to make light of it, the fact remains that upon the prohibitionists this fall will rest the responsibility for the complexion of the government for the next four years. No one knows this fact better than the democrats, and they are doing everything in their power to encourage prohibitionists to vote with the third party. They would not be so anxious about this if the third party vote did not hurt the republican party.

Usually when any one has occasion to differ with the editor of THE JOURNAL, the custom has been to pitch into our bulls, and cows, and hogs, and our farm stock and home, and it is very refreshing when we come across a man like Mr. Childs who, when he has a point of difference with us, states it like a man, and does not stick his nose into our pig pen to stir up the animals, because he don't happen to agree with us on political questions. We believe it was Puhler, of Ada, who first challenged our Holstein bull to mortal combat, and since then every unprincipled shyster in the country has had a whack at him, and still the old fellow is just as healthy, thrifty and good-natured as though not a puppy in the country had barked at him. This is characteristic of the breed. No matter what the provocation, they are of such a mild and genial temperament that it is very hard to make them cross. This is one reason why we recommend them so highly to farmers, because in this new country blackguards and ne'er-do-we'els are bound to exist, who have no other business except to rouse the animals and cause the farmers trouble, and the Jerseys, Shorthorns, Herefords, and even Jim Hill's hornless will not stand such rackets as our Holstein has had to take, without getting too cross to handle. With all the prodding that our bull has received from brainless noodles he is still just as mild as a kitten. That is the nature of the breed. No matter how meanly you talk about them they do not resent. That is a valuable trait which few breeds possess. As we think ours has had about all of the abuse one bull ought to stand, we have concluded to offer him for sale, buy another, and give the old bull a well-deserved rest. We will sell him cheap and guarantee him all right. The patience with which he has borne up under the abuses our political opponents have given him proves him to be a more intelligent animal than any of his traducers.

The Journal's Nut Cracked.

Editor Times.

In your last issue I made an offer to crack THE JOURNAL'S nut for Prohibitionists. I did so not because of any particular skill I possess in that direction, but because of the sophistry of his argument, and the ease I thought this could be made apparent. When the domain of conscience is invaded by those who argue against the third party, we consider ourselves impregnable and cannot be routed from our position.

"The Republican party contains five times as many temperance men as the Prohibition party." Well the truth of that assertion depends on your definition of "temperance men."

If by "temperance men" you mean men who only drink moderately, and claim to be temperance men on that ground, we concede the truth of your statement. We are not a moderate drinkers party, and if as I mistrust you intend to include in your count all who assert themselves temperance men, we assent to your proposition so far.

Your next assertion, Bro. Cooke, we will pause to examine. You say "the Republican party has given the country all the effective prohibition it has to-day." Well, let us see about that. The Republican party has given us prohibitory enactments in nine States, and the Democratic party has done the same in twelve States. The Republican party has repealed prohibition in ten States, and the Democratic party has done the same in five States. Now will you please figure it out and tell us the balance credit to which the Republican party is entitled for the effective prohibition the country has to-day. I make the Republican credit balance minus eight, as between the two parties. I sympathize with you Bro. Cooke, but you see the facts do not justify your premises in this respect.

You say again that "the Republican party has never refused to take up this question whenever a majority of the people were ready to support it, the Republican party has even yielded to prohibition sentiment and submitted the question, before a majority of the people were ready to support it." All that means simply this: That the Republican party has not been the open and avowed champion of the saloon, in defiance of prohibition sentiment. That when this sentiment became so strong that it dare not refuse to act, it has responded to the pressure just so far as it was deemed necessary to prevent an exodus from its ranks, and no further. How much credit is it entitled to for this? You say again "the Republican party has enacted prohibitory laws in opposition to both the Democratic and the Third party prohibitionists."

By prohibitory laws you undoubtedly mean license laws. As you Republicans persist in calling license "prohibition," a term which we invariably denounce, and defy you to substantiate. Again you say "the Republican party has always supported measures looking to the restriction of the saloons." If by this you mean it has always endeavored to so far restrain the saloon that it should not become obnoxious to the temperance element in the party beyond its power of endurance, and so alienate its votes, I grant you your statement. And then you ask "with these facts before them how can any temperance man consistently weaken this party when by so doing it would give the control of the country to the party which is acknowledged and professes to be the friend and champion of the liquor ring and saloons?"

Now let me make an assertion or two and see if I can keep as near the facts as you have. I assert first that if the liquor element in the Republican party was transferred to the Democratic party, you would not have the ghost of a chance for ever getting into power as a party. I assert again that if the Prohibitionists, that is, those who believe in and desire the absolute prohibition of the traffic, were transferred to the Third party, you would not have the ghost of a chance of success.

And again if the men in both parties who actually and honestly consider the liquor question to be one of paramount importance, and that the traffic ought to be prohibited, would each and every one cast his vote in that direction, the Third party would be given the opportunity to accomplish the work. But party deification and party perpetuation is the warp and woof of both the Democratic and the Republican parties alike. And just as long as good men, and christian men will listen to the voice of party rather than the voice of God, and just so long as the fear of failure of the party to which we have heretofore been attached controls our votes, just so long must this triangular fight be carried on. We are in the field to stay till the triumphant end.

We have enlisted not for "three years or during the war" but for life or during the war. Bro. Cooke when you ask how a man can "consistently" vote as he prays and roll that out at us as a nut for us to crack, we think it is easily demonstrated.

He has not been a very close student of the record of God's dealings with his people, and of the principles of action which are given for our guidance, who has not learned that we are responsible for our own acts first and always. We are only responsible for our neighbor's actions so far as we have influenced him in the wrong direction or have failed to influence him in the right direction, when we might have done so.

To this extent we are responsible for our neighbor's actions. Now suppose for a moment that the Republican party will, if in the control of the government, give us more of your so-called restriction than the Democratic party. And that the conscientious action of the good and true in voting with the only party which is struggling to put down the liquor traffic, should so weaken it as to result in its failure, what of it?

We must or should determine our action by the principle of right and wrong for ourselves. It is not the question with me, how will A, B and C vote, but what is my duty regardless of success or failure. It will furnish us no excuse for a wrong act or for a failure to do a right act in the judgment day, that we thought so many of our neighbors were going the other way that we had no chance of success. We are accountable too, not only for our action as in harmony with our best judgment, but we are accountable for our judgment also, to the extent of our submitting its guidance to the proper control.

If we allow our judgments to be guided by party dictation rather than the Divine will, we make a great mistake.

In a word we are responsible for right action, and not for the results of our action. And he who overlooks this fact makes a sad mistake indeed. Christian men who are clinging to the "grand old party," are you sure you are being guided in such action by God's Holy Spirit and the teaching of Him whose example you are trying to follow?

Lay aside all prejudices, and look at the question dispassionately, and determine which of the two parties have the best claim to your support, and in which can you do the most good and set the best example for your sons to follow. A. M. CHILDS.

We publish the above article from the chairman of the Third Party central committee so that our readers may see what that party has to say for itself and so that we may not be accused of suppressing anything he did say. If Mr. Childs had extended the same courtesy the false construction he puts upon our utterances would be too apparent to need a reply. One point will illustrate for all. He assumes that by "temperance men" we mean "moderate drinkers," then goes on to draw his own conclusions from that false basis. We might, by mentioning the names of certain men settle that question which he alone raised, but it is not necessary as Mr. Childs himself daily has association and close business relations with the kind of men we mean, and we will throw his "moderate drinkers" out of the question entirely. "In the domain of conscience," Mr. Childs your party, as a party is not so "impregnable" as your party leaders valiantly boast of, otherwise all prohibitionists would belong to the Third party and right well you know that, not more than one-fifth of the prohibitionists of the United States are Third Party men, because their consciences will not allow them to vote for evil that good may come sometime in the dim future. Your greatest error in "cracking THE JOURNAL'S nut" is that you assume to speak for all prohibitionists, while you only show the Third Party view. From a moral standpoint, Mr. Childs, here is a humble consistent christian man, a man whose honesty is proverbial, who is mentally, morally and every way your peer, a man who has become just as thoroughly disgusted with the evils of the liquor traffic as you have, as strong a prohibitionist as you are or could be only that he cannot bring himself to the point of stultifying his conscience by casting a half a vote for the liquor interests, as he would certainly do by voting the Third Party ticket. Now, who gives you the right to assume that that man is wrong while you, and the few leaders of the Third Party alone are right? This man knows that a majority of the Republican party favors his views. That it is the only party in which he has any chance to accomplish his purpose, and that his influence, and that of every prohibitionist is needed in that party to prevent the liquor interests acquiring even more absolute control than now. Why does this man think so? Because the Democratic party has always declared emphatically against sumptuary legislation, and the Republican party is coming to his standpoint just as fast as it is possible, and the Third party is so far behind in the race that at the very best it would take many years to ever place them in position to accomplish anything. Moreover, in their zeal to accomplish a Third party victory they are losing sight of the main idea, suiting everything in the scramble for power. Simply because they mistook the sentiment of the people, they have adopted the free trade plank of democracy—hoping to gain votes by it. For the same reason they have put in a woman's suffrage plank, and are doing all that they condemn in the Republican party to cause "the exodus from Republican ranks" to go to the Third party. This man cannot support your Third party because your platform is too narrow for the needs of this American people, you have made it more with a view to winning a hollow party victory than to supply the needs of a great people. "We are only responsible for our neighbor's actions," etc. Is a half vote for the liquor interests the right kind of an example to set for him? Is not a half vote just as sinful as a whole, and if we cast a half vote for the liquor interests knowingly, are we not held accountable for that influence? In the next paragraph "Now suppose for a moment," etc., "what of it?" What of it? Why, the success of the liquor traffic, obtained by the efforts of those who profess to be trying to suppress it, that is all and that is the reason why so many prohibitionists cannot vote with the Third party. "If we allow our judgment" etc. True enough. The Third party in this fight has lost sight of their main issue at stake in the effort to down the Republican party, and by their own words stand condemned. "We are responsible for right action." True, but any action that contributes to the success of the liquor traffic, even tho' it be (as you vainly hope) for a short time—a few years, is not a "right action," by any means. But a few of your leaders assume that it is right to commit a present evil in the hope that in the future good may come from it, but the Bible does not teach any such doctrine, and we cannot see how any man who professes to be led by its teachings can be misled for long. We subscribe to your last paragraph heartily and commend it to our readers. The only question for you to decide which of the two great parties now before the people is it best for you to have in power—for all that prohibitionists can do at this time is to decide which party shall be in power for the next four years, and the fearful responsibility rests upon the prohibition vote. The liquor interests desire the perpetuation of the power of the Democratic party, and for that reason they put big money into the campaign to help that party. They also desire every prohibitionist to vote for the Third party. Why is this? Because they know their interests are safe so long as that party remains in power and they are satisfied to take care of the present, leaving the future to care for itself. Dare you take the responsibility to knowingly vote as they want you to? How can you deliberately cast even a half a ballot for the "unholy traffic" and then humbly ask God's blessing upon an action you feel and know to be wrong? This certainly is a serious question and one that should not be hastily decided. The vain desire for Third party success should not be allowed to blind you to the great responsibility resting upon you. If you cannot obtain all the good you wish just now have you a moral right to say that the liquor interests shall have full swing for even four years yet? The Republican party offers the country some relief—the Democratic party declares against all sumptuary legislation and the prohibitionist must decide the question. Dare you take the responsibility of deciding in favor of the liquor interests? We have before us the words of the kind of a temperance man to whom we alluded when we said that the Republican party contains five times as many temperance men as the Third party does. They are the words of the Hon. S. N. Fellows, president of the Iowa State Temperance Alliance, in which he gives twenty good reasons why he cannot support the Third party. We commend them to the earnest attention of every prohibitionist whose only object is to do right in this matter as in all others. Mr. Fellows says:

1. Its confessed immediate aim is "to smash the old political parties."
2. It seeks political success rather than success of prohibition.
3. It has lowered its standard for the sake of political success.
4. It deprecates the work of prohibitionists, outside of said party.
5. It seems to rejoice in any failure or defeat of those not in said party.
6. It seeks to break down prohibition in States where it has been secured by non-partisan methods.
7. Only one in forty of prohibitionists adhere to said party.
8. It strives more earnestly to promote prohibition party success than prohibition sentiment.
9. It manifests less opposition to the rum power than to the old political parties.
10. Its methods are such as to secure the co-operation and support of those engaged in the liquor traffic.
11. Its members assume to be the only true prohibitionists.
12. It aims to reform parties rather than the people.
13. It divides the ranks of the prohibitionists.
14. It exhalts the political at the expense of the moral phases of prohibition.
15. It therefore weakens the support of the pulpit.
16. It retards the growth of prohibition sentiment.
17. Its methods compel distrust of the sincerity of its leaders.
18. Its methods strenthen opposition to the principle of prohibition.
19. It is impossible to successfully build a national political party on a single moral issue.
20. A vote for the national prohibition party, though not so intended, is, therefore, in its intimate influence, a vote for the liquor traffic.

Breckenridge Mercury: We hear of Prohibitionists who thank the Lord that they will never vote the Republican ticket again. Well the Republicans can get along quite as well without these kickers, for that's all they are. They will tire of their own party and next election you will see them training with the bandanna party where they belong.

East Grand Forks Courier: Tuesday afternoon Dave Morrow, a prosperous farmer living seven miles from the city lost his house and its contents by fire. Morrow was cutting wheat when he saw the flames from a window. At once he jumped from the binder and ran to the house, which he reached just in time to help to save his wife and children. As the mother rushed from the door the flames followed her closely. The cause of the fire is unknown. It burned with fierce rapidity. While Morrow was at the house the horses attached to the binder ran away, smashing the machine beyond repairs. The loss will be $1,400, with an insurance of $300. Fortunately for Morrow, this morning before going to the field, he took $400 from the house and put it in his pocket. The money had been stored away in the house for two months, and Mr. Morrow cannot understand what induced him to put it in his pocket.

Battle Lake Review: The St. Cloud Times thinks the Review is inconsistent, when, claiming to be the only recognized Farmers Alliance organ in the country, it supports Hon. S. G. Comstock for congress. We take altogether a different view of the case. Some of the members of the Farmers Alliance in this country, who four years ago designated the Review as the Alliance organ, met in convention some time ago and elected the editor of this paper one of the delegates to attend the Congressional convention at St. Cloud. He went down there and, with the other members of the Otter Tail delegation, worked for the home candidate, Hon. E. E. Corliss. Mr. Corliss was beaten, and the nomination of Mr. Comstock was made unanimous, and as the Review editor is a Republican he stands by the action of the convention. There are bolters from that convention, and they are to be found among the members of the Alliance, but they cannot take the Review with them. It has never yet bolted a ticket that was fairly nominated by a majority of the delegates of any Republican convention, and, so long as it claims to be a Republican organ, it never will. And further, we consider those men who attended the St. Cloud convention and are now opposing Mr. Comstock, clean out mugwumps, too treacherous to be counted on by the Republicans in the future. Let them go into other camps, where they belong. Comstock does not need their assistance, neither does the Republican party in the State or Fifth District. The Times may rest assured that the candidate's majority in this county will be satisfactory.

To Practical Temperance Men.

MR. EDITOR: I receive so many letters asking substantially "How can a vote for the Republican National ticket this year help the temperance cause?" that I venture to ask Republican editors to publish the following reply:

Everybody knows that either the Republican or Democratic nominees will be elected, and that therefore votes cast for other candidates cannot possibly affect the approaching election. It is, of course, true that the man who votes for Clinton Fisk or Belva Lockwood stands up to be counted, but it is equally true that, in the vital matter of deciding who is to rule over us, he counts as a mere cipher in a column of ciphers. His actions say, "I have no interest in the result of this struggle. Between Harrison and Cleveland I have no choice, and am entirely willing that the worst one shall succeed. I am aware it is possible I might prevent this, but I utterly refuse to make the slightest effort in that direction."

And no fairly well-informed and honest supporter of Fisk or Lockwood will pretend that this refusal is based on a belief that there is, from a temperance standpoint, no difference between the two tickets, for General Harrison is an active Christian and life-long total abstainer, and an outspoken opponent of the liquor power, whose nomination was opposed on the ground that it would ensure the hostility of the entire saloon fraternity, while Mr. Cleveland is—"Grover Cleveland." Moreover, Gen. Harrison is the nominee of a party that has always contained within its ranks a large majority of the temperance men of the country, and has been growing increasingly hostile to the saloon every year, until now, after defying the liquor league, by heading its ticket with a pronounced temperance man, and choosing for second place one who more than a year ago publicly announced "I heartily sympathize" with the anti-saloon Republican movement, and has, in its national platform committed itself unreservedly in favor of "all wise and well directed efforts for the promotion of temperance;" while Mr. Cleveland is the nominee of a party that has for a generation been dominated by and grows constantly more subservient to the liquor power.

The character, convictions and sympathies of the 100,000 Federal officers and employees, and the influence they exert upon living political issues are largely affected by and dependent upon "the administration," and this is especially the case when the president and his party are in substantial accord. There can, therefore, be no doubt that, under existing circumstances, the election of such a man as Gen. Harrison, would be followed by a decided improvement in the general attitude and tone of this large and very influential class of men upon the saloon question. Again, if the Republican party finds that "doing right does not [illegible] defeat," it will at once become [illegible] aggressive in its warfare against [illegible] saloon. But if, on the contrary, [illegible] Democratic party wins, because of [illegible] professed friends of temperance labored unceasingly to diminish Gen. Harrison's vote, instead of increasing it, then the saloon power will be strengthened and emboldened, and its enemies will be correspondingly weakened, discouraged and embittered against each other. For it must not be forgotten that the supporters of Mr. Fisk and Mrs. Lockwood are not content with merely putting their own votes in cipher columns but strive to induce others to do the same thing—and, knowingly, and intentionally work mainly among Republicans.

The foregoing propositions are so undeniably true that all half-way sensible and honest Third party men I know admit that, if the Republican and Democratic parties are to continue in existence, the cause of temperance will be promoted by Republican success; but they believe—or think they believe—that the Republican party is such a puny or decrepit thing that it can easily be annihilated, and that the quickest way to destroy the saloon is to protect it until the Republican party shall have been destroyed, and a new one resurrected from its grave. It is the old, old story of men so hypnotized by party zeal that they are oblivious to everything except what blinded our designing leaders authorize, or of the discouraged traveler who leaves the beaten highway to follow a will-o-the-wisp he thinks is leading him to shelter close at hand, but suddenly finds himself plunged into an impassable morass.

To hear these zealots talk in their hop-skip-and-jump fashion one would think that the wiping out of existence of a party 6,000,000 strong by one about a twentieth as large is a mere pastime for them, but a proper statement of the case will show that there is an element of doubt, in fact several doubts. Here are a few of them: "If we can defeat the Republican party this year, by drawing from its ranks enough zealous temperance men to enable the saloon party to triumph; and if the Republican party becomes so cowed that it refuses even to kick and straightway gives up the ghost; and if its members prove to be devoid of human nature, and conclude to kiss the hand that smote them; and if woman suffrage does not prove to be "an old man of the mountain on our shoulders; and if a majority of the people suddenly become indifferent to the tariff, currency, immigration, labor, land and other questions, about which they now care more than they do for anything else; or if we are able to make the supporters of both sides of other questions believe we favor their views; and if enough of these antagonistic elements can be welded together under our leadership to constitute a majority party, we will surely win. And then, and in that case, if our legislators are uniformly wise, and our officers zealous and efficient; and if no new set of misguided enthusiasts, rejected office seekers, cranks and marplots are led by our success to follow our example, and break our party to pieces, in order to use its fragments in the building of another, before we shall have done our perfect work, we will wipe the saloons from the face of the earth—as soon as we can, and everything will be lovely—with us on top."

Let me add another idea. So long as you weaken the Republican party sufficiently to keep the saloon party in power, you perpetuate the evils that flow from the dram-selling business, and every day of every year unsaved victims pass into eternity new ones taking their places. And if, in spite of your predictions, the Republican party declines to die, and the Prohibition-Woman-Suffrage party remains "powerful for evil, but powerless for good," will not your hearts ache when you remember that the dreadful consequences of your mistakes have been and are being borne mainly by the innocent and suffering who had no control in the matter? This is not "merely a game of politics for pastime." The stakes are the bodies, minds and souls of men, women and children—multitudes of whom are absolutely helpless, and, this being the case, is it not best to secure each campaign the certain tangible good that is then attainable rather than to risk everything upon guesses as to future possibilities?

The Live Stock Business.

Western Rural and American Stockman.

It used to be a sayin when we were boys, that a man's team was a picture of himself, and there is a great deal of truth in it. Did anybody ever see a slouchy, sleepy looking man with a splendid team? We never did. A man like that will always have a slouchy team; and we may look all over the country, and we shall find that the breeders of good stock are sharp, enterprising people. There are two things on a farm that awaken the best mental traits in a man. One is horticulture and the other is good stock. Our plan for keeping the boy on the farm is to interest him in one or both of these industries. In the description of our Western trip we have spoken of the high intelligence of the people of Dakota and Montana. Indeed, they are a polished people all along the route; and as might naturally be expected their stock was universally good. We did not see a poor animal, we believe, on the whole trip. It will pay farmers to invest in thorough-bred stock if only to interest the boys. There is something inspiring about good cattle and horses, and as breeding is a science, such stock, by awakening an interest, incites study. Growing wheat is not an exciting occupation.

There is not much farming about sowing and reaping wheat. It is the soil that grows wheat. If the soil is good and the season favorable, almost anybody can get a crop of wheat in, and harvest it and market it. But thought is necessary in breeding, and every improvement that a man makes in his stock is evidence of the improvement of his own mind. Breeding is an elevating and developing business. It broadens men, and it is only a broad man and a man of intellect that can keep up a herd. Try breeding improved stock as a means of keeping the boys on the farm.

D. 1888 and the said interest is still unpaid and due, and whereas, it was stipulated and agreed by and between the parties to said mortgage that if default should be made in any of the conditions or covenants therein contained on the part of the mortgagors to be kept and performed, that then and from thenceforth it shall be lawful for said mortgagee or its assigns to consider the whole sum thereby secured as immediately due and payable without notice to said mortgagors or any other party, and whereas The American Freehold Land Mortgage Company of London (Limited) mortgagee, has exercised its option to consider and declare and does hereby declare the whole sum of money secured by said mortgage to be due and payable, and whereas, there is now due and claimed to be due upon said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of three thousand four hundred eight and 40-100 dollars, and no proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise to recover the same or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained and therewith recorded and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the lands therein described which sale will be made by the Sheriff of Polk County, at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in said county and state on the 13th day of October A. D. 1888, at 10 o'clock in the forenoon of that day at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash, to pay the sum due on said mortgage together with taxes, if any, on said premises and seventy-five dollars attorneys fees therein stipulated to be paid in case of foreclosure and the disbursements allowed by law, subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

To Anti-Saloon Republicacans.

Important Assistance that Every Republican can Render by Prompt Action.

The Anti-Saloon Republican National Committee has removed its headquarters to No. 1 Broadway, New York City, and desires to hear from temperance republicans in every part of the country in reference to all matters of interest in their respective localities. It is especially anxious to know who are willing to do something to help the cause of temperance and republicanism. All such will oblige by writing at once, giving a short statment of the condition of sentiment in their respective localities, with suggestions as to what should be done to improve matters. Mere common scolds and pessimistic grumblers will oblige by not trespassing on our time.

ALBERT GRIFFIN,
Ch'n Anti-Saloon Rep. Nat'l Com.
No. 1 Broadway, N. Y. City. [16-tf]

Duluth Evening Herald.

The Democratic papers in Minnesota are wrathy because Ignatius Donnelly has consented to become a candidate for governor when he knows that he has no chance of being elected. They accuse him of working in the interests of the Republicans, and acting in bad faith with the men who nominated him. These Democratic papers, however, have nothing of the kind to say about Hugh Harrison, the prohibition candidate for governer. That is a horse of another color. They know that it is next to impossible to make a Prohibitionist out of a Democrat, so they encourage Mr. Harrison's candidacy, knowing that all the votes he gets will come from the Republican ranks. With Ignatius Donnelly it is different. His strength will weaken the Democrats, and for that reason they abuse him for becoming a candidate.

Dakota and Montana.

The Northwestern Farmer and Breeder, of Fargo, comes to us this month with a Montana department. It gives an illustrated sketch of Great Falls, Montana, the present western terminus of the St. P. M. & M. R. R. The range interests of western Dakota and eastern Montana are almost identical, and The Farmer and Breeder promises to give more attention in future numbers to the live stock interests of both territories, while the general farmer is to be given a full share of attention. Mr. W. M. Corbett, late associate editor of The Farmer, St. Paul, acknowledged to be one of the best agriultural writers in the west, has been added to the editoral staff of the Fargo Farmer, and this assures eaven a better paper than ever, to the readers of this excellent farm journal.

Minnesota Anti-Saloon Republicanism.

Minneapolis Evening Journal.

Hon. Albert Griffin, the chairman of the Anti-Saloon Republican National committee, was on the platform at the Republican meeting last night. It was expected that he would speak, and he would have done so if he had not been ill. He will speak in this city Saturday evening, and will also speak, under the auspices of the Republican State League, at other places in the State during a short stay in Minnesota. Whenever he has anything to say he will say it against the saloon. He is engaged in fighting the saloon. That is his business.

Mr. Griffin is a prohibitionist. He comes from the prohibition State of Kansas, where, as a Republican, he has done valiant service in the cause of prohibition. If he could have his way about it there would not be a saloon in the country. There is no man in the country whom the saloon hates as it hates Albert Griffin; there is no movement in politics that it fears as it fears the movement which he leads. There is no other man whom it has such reason to hate and no other movement which it has such reason to fear.

Now, whatever Mr. Griffin says in this State the Republican party says. Whatever he does here against the saloon the Republican party endorses, for, knowing fully what his aims and purposes are and how unalterably opposed he is to the saloon, it chooses to send him out through the State to speak to the people in the name of the Republican party. He will declare for high license, for local option, for prohibition—for any practical means to restrict and ultimately abolish the saloon.

The people of Minnesota have started out on a plan to destroy the saloon. There is no doubt about that. They are too intelligent to tolerate it much longer. But they know well enough that they cannot strangle the demon of rum by pouncing upon him unfettered and with the full use of all his powers. They must first hedge him in within narrow and restricted limits. Common sense dictates this curse and they have adopted it. They are building around this enemy of society the strong walls of legal restriction and are drawing closer and pilling them higher by the aid of a constantly growing public sentiment. They have already seriously crippled his power for evil. After awhile, when they are sure that they will be able to succeed, they will pounce upon the saloon and utterly destroy it. The man who has not read that ultimate result in the signs of the times has not read them welll.

That is the program of the people in Minnesota. Mr. Griffin has come here at the instance of the republican managers to do what he can in support of that program. Have the democratic managers asked any one to do nything of this kind in their behalf? Have they ever said anything in Minnesota against the saloon or done anything to restrict or destroy its power in this state? They do not even claim to to have done so. And yet there are people who claim that there is no difference between the old parties on the saloon question—who pretend to believe that the republican is no more of an anti-saloon party than the democratic. They may be honest; if they are they are very stupid,

Mr. Stickney's Address.

St. Paul Dispatch.

The address delivered before the chamber of commerce this morning by Mr. A. B. Stickney president of the Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City Railroad, will repay the careful examination of our readers.

The agricultural interests of Minnesota have, during the past decade, been passing through the experience which has fallen to the lot of the farmers of every State of the Union which have attained to a position of general development. The virgin soil of our new States has been tested year after year, to the very verge of barrenness, and the penalty which is no more or less than a manifestation of the eternal law of cause and effect has been invariably paid. That penalty has not been understood, and farmers, in their search for its cause, have to often deluded themselves with the belief that that cause was to be found in the operation of natural agencies which were beyond their control.

Mr. Stickney's words may help to draw the attention of our agricultural population to the grievous responsibility they assume in choosing to ignore the natural demand for rotation of crops, and for the restoration to the soil of its natural fruitfulness. Fools and demagogues have gone through this State, in former years, seeking to cast discredit upon appeals to the intelligence of our farmers similar to that now made by Mr. Stickney, simply because the origin of those appeals did not commend itself to them.

The approach of the State Fair gives to the address of Mr. Stickney special timeliness and significance. The policy which he seeks to have inaugurated, and which other thoughtful men, situated exactly as he is, have heretofore advocated, should be brought in its wisdom to the very doors and hearthstones of our farmers. Bad crops are not to be explained away by the slip-shod pretence of "bad years." Crops will be bad so long as farmers ignore the simplest law of nature, and continue to fly in the face of all human experience.

No single cereal can continue to do duty as the mainstay of a State's prosperity, especially when conditions of soil and climate appeal for the production of others as valuable from the commercial standpoint. If our wheat growers are engaged in the up-hill work of making a living, while paying high rates of interest on heavy mortgages, they must be willing to assume the biggest share of the responsibility themselves. No confiscation of railroad property will bring them prosperity, any more than will the free importation of foreign manufactured products. They must heed the lesson of experience and expend judgment and self-denial, as well as labor, on the farms which they till, before they can hope to have others come to share with them a lot which they themselves have helped to make much harder than it ought to be.

A Bread Famine.

New York, Aug. 30—A London Times special says: It now seems a fact that the old world needs from seventy to eighty million bushels of wheat more then the harvest of the year will produce. To put it in another way, countries which always buy wheat must this year buy 370,000,000 bushels while countries that raise more than they consume will have about 395,000,000 to sell. The annual international grain market in Vienna, Monday gave the estimates of the yield of the world which varied little from those given. The real state of the French harvest seems much worse than reported at Vienna, and the same is even more obviously true of England. Yesterday's terrific storm ended whatever chances remained of decent crops in Great Britain. The English must now import at least 170,000,000 bushels. France, next to the United States, the greatest wheat producer in the world, has one of the worst crops ever reaped. A week ago it was estimated she would need to import 68,000,000 bushels. Now a shortage is put at 80 to 90 millions. What makes the matter worse is that very little if any of this can be made good by Algiers, which grass hoppers have decimated. Germany, Italy, and the Netherlands must buy more wheat than usual. It is understood here that the United States and London are counted on to supply about one hundred and three million, Russia eighty million and India thirtyfive million bushels, but in these latter countries there is much more uncertainty that in the former. From Russia, for instance, there are all sorts of reports, latterly quite unfavorable and from India it is even more difficult to get the truth. Trained experts here believe the above figures as tolerable correct. In any case, if these crops turn out larger then are here estimated the daily increasing evidence of the bad quality, and light weight of the crop in western Europe will quite balance the gain. With such a huge defficiency in the world is most equal to the entire wheat crop in a good year in such a country as Germany. It is evident somebody must cut down the consumption. Bread will be a fierce competitor for possession of the grain markets on the continent, which has been showing almost a steady rise during the past ten days with few fluctuations as result upon the declines in America. As a rule prices are higher and advance sharper in Paris then elsewhere. Yesterday London and some English provincial markets distanced other spurts by a sudden advance from 6 to 9 cents per bushel upon last week's prices. This panic is palpably due to storms. The wheat in England is still a curiously parochial affair, dependent upon all sorts of local conditions and influences. Liverpool generally follows New York and San Francisco, but London, more concerned in Baltic trade, is not so easily moved by American quotations. Provincial markets, like Leeds, Roochester and Newcastle-on-Tyne, think most of local crops and demands; hence prices for the past week have been much affected by capricious weather, a right day frightening the buyers, and a heavy rain stiffening the sellers.

Yesterday's storm, however, so knocked out what remained of English crops that this can no longer be the case.

Already we catch a glimpse of what a wheat shortage means by the discovery that bread has gone up a penny on a quarter loaf in many parts of London since Monday. Northern workhouse authorities have their hands full with many Irish laborers accustomed to come to England for harvest. This year they find no work, have no means to get home, and what adds to the sinister aspect and outlook is the bad nature of the potato crop in many parts of England and all along the west coast of Ireland. This alone would have made a bad winter here which combined with dear bread makes a gloomy enough outlook.

Indiana and Wisconsin appear to be the only states in which the yield be above the average. In Ohio the crop is reported not over ten per cent of the average in the finer quality. In Illinois the quality is satisfactory. In Kansas the loss is fully one third. The Times also prints many colonial crop reports from all parts of the United States. In an editorial the summary says that the United States will be in a position to furnish the world.

The United States is to be congratulated on the amount of wheat harvested. If we cannot feed the world, it is pleasant to know that we can feed ourselves.

The Grading of Wheat.

Hillsboro Banner: That the frost has injured many Dakota wheat fields is an undisputed fact, but it should be remembered at the same time that the damage in Traill county is almost imperceptible. Elevator men may look wise and declare in the fullness of their sorrow that there is not a bushel of No 1 hard wheat in North Dakota, but the fact remains and one which they will be glad to acknowledge about next May that frost has not spoilt the grade on a bushel of wheat in Traill county. One of these same wise men was shown a sample of 1887 crop the other day and to pass judgment upon it. He pulled out a magnifying glass, scrutinized the sample carefully and declared with a sigh that it was awfully frostbitten. It is simply nonsensical hysteria to be influenced by the mournful twaddle of these wheat brokers who don't know frosted wheat when they see it. The experts in this matter are the buyers who have seen the grain threshed from frozen crops and handled it in their houses. What do they say? The Banner knows that one of the sharpest and shrewdest M. & N. agents in North Dakota has examined field after field in this vicinity and pronounced every one untouched. Shrunken wheat there was—coming from rust—but the green kernel and the kernel with its shell puckered and bleached is entirely absent. These are the two unfailing signs of the frosted article, the skin of the kernel nearly matured is puckered and bleached while those not so ripe remain green and refuse to mature. The facts today show that our greatest damage comes from rust. C. W. Sutton has a field of 350 acres entirely ruined by rust and which he will burn. L. H. Larson has a field of 180 acre's which he will burn. The straw on these pieces was heavy and the stalks rusted badly. That is where the shrunken grain—which by no means is an indiction of frost—comes from. Of course it is perfectly legitimate to knock off a grade on grain considerbly shrunked, but it is untruthful and unfair to say such grain is frosted.

To Anti-Saloon Republicacans.

Important Assistance that Every Republican can Render by Prompt Action,

The Anti-Saloon Republican National Committee has removed its headquarters to No. 1 Broadway, New York City, and desires to hear from temperance republicans in every part of the country in reference to all matters of interest in their respective localities. It is especially anxious to know who are willing to do something to help the cause of temperance and republicanism. All such will oblige by writing at once, giving a short statment of the condition of sentiment in their respective localities, with suggestions as to what should be done to improve matters. Mere common scolds and pessimistic grumblers will oblige by not trespassing on our time.

ALBERT GRIFFIN,
Ch'n Anti-Saloon Rep. Nat'l Com.

Duluth Evening Herald.

The Democratic papers in Minnesota are wrathy because Ignatius Donnelly has consented to become a candidate for governor when he knows that he has no chance of being elected. They accuse him of working in the interests of the Republicans, and acting in bad faith with the men who nominated him. These Democratic papers, however, have nothing of the kind to say about Hugh Harrison, the prohibition candidate for governer. That is a horse of another color. They know that it is next to impossible to make a Prohibitionist out of a Democrat, so they encourage Mr. Harrison's candidacy, knowing that all the votes he gets will come from the Republican ranks. With Ignatius Donnelly it is different. His strength will weaken the Democrats, and for that reason they abuse him for becoming a candidate.

Dakota and Montana.

The Northwestern Farmer and Breeder, of Fargo, comes to us this month with a Montana department. It gives an illustrated sketch of Great Falls, Montana, the present western terminus of the St. P. M. & M. R. R. The range interests of western Dakota and eastern Montana are almost identical, and The Farmer and Breeder promises to give more attention in future numbers to the live stock interests of both territories, while the general farmer is to be given a full share of attention. Mr. W. M. Corbett, late associate editor of The Farmer, St. Paul, acknowledged to be one of the best agricultural writers in the west, has been added to the editoral staff of the Fargo Farmer, and this assures caven a better paper than ever, to the readers of this excellent farm journal.

Minnesota Anti-Saloon Republicanism.

Minneapolis Evening Journal.

Hon. Albert Griffin, the chairman of the Anti-Saloon Republican National committee, was on the platform at the Republican meeting last night. It was expected that he would speak, and he would have done so if he had not been ill. He will speak in this city Saturday evening, and will also speak, under the auspices of the Republican State League, at other places in the State during a short stay in Minnesota. Whenever he has anything to say he will say it against the saloon. He is engaged in fighting the saloon. That is his business.

Mr. Griffin is a prohibitionist. He comes from the prohibition State of Kansas, where, as a Republican, he has done valiant service in the cause of prohibition. If he could have his way about it there would not be a saloon in the country. There is no man in the country whom the saloon hates as it hates Albert Griffin; there is no movement in politics that it fears as it fears the movement which he leads. There is no other man whom it has such reason to hate and no other movement which it has such reason to fear.

Now, whatever Mr. Griffin says in this State the Republican party says. Whatever he does here against the saloon the Republican party endorses, for, knowing fully what his aims and purposes are and how unalterably opposed he is to the saloon, it chooses to send him out through the State to speak to the people in the name of the Republican party. He will declare for high license, for local option, for prohibition—for any practical means to restrict and ultimately abolish the saloon.

The people of Minnesota have started out on a plan to destroy the saloon. There is no doubt about that. They are too intelligent to tolerate it much longer. But they know well enough that they cannot strangle the demon of rum by pouncing upon him unfettered and with the full use of all his powers. They must first hedge him in within narrow and restricted limits. Common sense dictates this curse and they have adopted it. They are building around this enemy of society the strong walls of legal restriction and are drawing closer and pilling them higher by the aid of a constantly growing public sentiment. They have already seriously crippled his power for evil. After awhile, when they are sure that they will be able to succeed, they will pounce upon the saloon and utterly destroy it. The man who has not read that ultimate result in the signs of the times has not read them welll.

That is the program of the people in Minnesota. Mr. Griffin has come here at the instance of the republican managers to do what he can in support of that program. Have the democratic managers asked any one to do nnything of this kind in their behalf? Have they ever said anything in Minnesota against the saloon or done anything to restrict or destroy its power in this state? They do not even claim to to have done so. And yet there are people who claim that there is no difference between the old parties on the saloon question—who pretend to believe that the republican is no more of an anti-saloon party than the democratic. They may be honest; if they are they are very stupid,

Mr. Stickney's Address.

St. Paul Dispatch.

The address delivered before the chamber of commerce this morning by Mr. A. B. Stickney president of the Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City Railroad, will repay the careful examination of our readers.

The agricultural interests of Minnesota have, during the past decade, been passing through the experience which has fallen to the lot of the farmers of every State of the Union which have attained to a position of general development. The virgin soil of our new States has been tested year after year, to the very verge of barrenness, and the penalty which is no more or less than a manifestation of the eternal law of cause and effect has been invariably paid. That penalty has not been understood, and farmers, in their search for its cause, have to often deluded themselves with the belief that that cause was to be found in the operation of natural agencies which were beyond their control.

Mr. Stickney's words may help to draw the attention of our agricultural population to the grievous responsibility they assume in choosing to ignore the natural demand for rotation of crops, and for the restoration to the soil of its natural fruitfulness. Fools and demagogues have gone through this State, in former years, seeking to cast discredit upon appeals to the intelligence of our farmers similar to that now made by Mr. Stickney, simply because the origin of those appeals did not commend itself to them.

The approach of the State Fair gives to the address of Mr. Stickney special timeliness and significance. The policy which he seeks to have inaugurated, and which other thoughtful men, situated exactly as he is, have heretofore advocated, should be brought in its wisdom to the very doors and hearthstones of our farmers. Bad crops are not to be explained away by the slip-shod pretence of "bad years." Crops will be bad so long as farmers ignore the simplest law of nature, and continue to fly in the face of all human experience.

No single cereal can continue to do duty as the mainstay of a State's prosperity, especially when conditions of soil and climate appeal for the production of others as valuable from the commercial standpoint. If our wheat growers are engaged in the up-hill work of making a living, while paying high rates of interest on heavy mortgages, they must be willing to assume the biggest share of the responsibility themselves. No confiscation of railroad property will bring them prosperity, any more than will the free importation of foreign manufactured products. They must heed the lesson of experience and expend judgment and self-denial, as well as labor, on the farms which they till, before they can hope to have others come to share with them a lot which they themselves have helped to make much harder than it ought to be.

A Bread Famine.

New York, Aug. 30—A London Times special says: It now seems a fact that the old world needs from seventy to eighty million bushels of wheat more then the harvest of the year will produce. To put it in another way, countries which always buy wheat must this year buy 370,000,000 bushels while countries that raise more than they consume will have about 395,000,000 to sell. The annual international grain market in Vienna, Monday gave the estimates of the yield of the world which varied little from those given. The real state of the French harvest seems much worse than reported at Vienna, and the same is even more obviously true of England. Yesterday's terrific storm ended whatever chances remained of decent crops in Great Britain. The English must now import at least 170,000,000 bushels. France, next to the United States, the greatest wheat producer in the world, has one of the worst crops ever reaped. A week ago it was estimated she would need to import 68,000,000 bushels. Now a shortage is put at 80 to 90 millions. What makes the matter worse is that very little if any of this can be made good by Algiers, which grass hoppers have decimated. Germany, Italy, and the Netherlands must buy more wheat than usual. It is understood here that the United States and London are counted on to supply about one hundred and three million, Russia eighty million and India thirtyfive million bushels, but in these latter countries there is much more uncertainty that in the former. From Russia, for instance, there are all sorts of reports, latterly quite unfavorable and from India it is even more difficult to get the truth. Trained experts here believe the above figures as tolerable correct. In any case, if these crops turn out larger then are here estimated the daily increasing evidence of the bad quality, and light weight of the crop in western Europe will quite balance the gain. With such a huge defficiency in the world is most equal to the entire wheat crop in a good year in such a country as Germany. It is evident somebody must cut down the consumption. Bread will be a fierce competitor for possession of the grain markets on the continent, which has been showing almost a steady rise during the past ten days with few fluctuations as result upon the declines in America. As a rule prices are higher and advance sharper in Paris then elsewhere. Yesterday London and some English provincial markets distanced other spurts by a sudden advance from 6 to 9 cents per bushel upon last week's prices. This panic is palpably due to storms. The wheat in England is still a curiously parochial affair, dependent upon all sorts of local conditions and influences. Liverpool generally follows New York and San Francisco, but London, more concerned in Baltic trade, is not so easily moved by American quotations. Provincial markets, like Leeds, Rochester and Newcastle-on-Tyne, think most of local crops and demands; hence prices for the past week have been much affected by capricious weather, a right day frightening the buyers, and a heavy rain stiffening the sellers.

Yesterday's storm, however, so knocked out what remained of English crops that this can no longer be the case.

Already we catch a glimpse of what a wheat shortage means by the discovery that bread has gone up a penny on a quarter loaf in many parts of London since Monday. Northern workhouse authorities have their hands full with many Irish laborers accustomed to come to England for harvest. This year they find no work, have no means to get home, and what adds to the sinister aspect and outlook is the bad nature of the potato crop in many parts of England and all along the west coast of Ireland. This alone would have made a bad winter here which combined with dear bread makes a gloomy enough outlook.

Indiana and Wisconsin appear to be the only states in which the yield be above the average. In Ohio the crop is reported not over ten per cent of the average in the finer quality. In Illinois the quality is satisfactory. In Kansas the loss is fully one third. The Times also prints many colonial crop reports from all parts of the United States. In an editorial the summary says that the United States will be in a position to furnish the world.

The United States is to be congratulated on the amount of wheat harvested, If we cannot feed the world, it is pleasant to know that we can feed ourselves.

The Grading of Wheat.

Hillsboro Banner: That the frost has injured many Dakota wheat fields is an undisputed fact, but it seould be remembered at the same time that the damage in Traill county is almost imperceptible. Elevator men may look wise and declare in the fullness of their sorrow that there is not a bushel of No 1 hard wheat in North Dakota, but the fact remains and one which they will be glad to acknowledge about next May that frost has not spoilt the grade on a bushel of wheat in Traill county. One of these same wise men was shown a sample of 1887 crop the other day and to pass judgment upon it. He pulled out a magnifying glass, scrutinized the sample carefully and declared with a sigh that it was awfully frostbitten. It is simply nonsensical hysteria to be influenced by the mournful twaddle of these wheat brokers who don't know frosted wheat when they see it. The experts in this matter are the buyers who have seen the grain threshed from frozen crops and handled it in their houses. What do they say? The Banner knows that one of the sharpest and shrewdest M. & N. agents in North Dakota has examined field after field in this vicinity and pronounced every one untouched. Shrunken wheat there was—coming from rust—but the green kernel and the kernel with its shell puckered and bleached is entirely absent. On Saturday Mr. and Mrs. Henry Berthiaume were called upon to give up their little four weeks old daughter. The little one died at 7 p. m.

Frank Montague has been under the weather for a weak back but is all O. K. again. Threatens to go to Montana for a visit to friends to see if that will tone him up.

Henry Lewis came up from Minneapolis last week for a few days visit with his family and friends in the city, returning this week. Henry is doing well down there.

We were pleased to see Fred Fox about the streets again on Saturday. Fred has had a hard siege, is as thin as a rail but says he feels all right and is rapidly putting on flesh.

The commissioners are building a new vault to hold the taxes to be collected or the papers given in security for the same—doubtful which. It will be same size as the other.

The Gazette says that M. P. Daragan Sr., of Red Lake Falls died on Friday. Mr. Daragan was father of Mrs. J. M. Boyle, of Red Lake Falls, Mrs. Jos. Laurence and Mrs. M. C. Malone of this city.

All those who stack their wheat this year will hit it for two reasons. The wheat will be greatly benefitted and grade better and the millers (as usual) are endeavoring to gobble up all the early wheat at a low price—for this year.

Before the nomination the Globe said the machine was hard at work in the interests of McGill and that "boodle" was as hard at work for Merriam. After the nomination the Globe said: "The full power of the machine was brought to bear to nominate Merriam." Consistency, thou art a jewel.

On Saturday last Mr. E. C. Carruth was united for life to Miss Emma McKenzie, by Rev. O. H. Elmar, at the residence of the bride's parents. The happy couple took the evening train for St. Paul where they will visit awhile before assuming the sober duties of a married life. THE JOURNAL adds its blessing.

Rev. O. H. Elmer preached an interesting discourse on the power of the press as a teacher of morality, on Sunday last. The Rev. gentleman showed what influence the press had had in the dissemination of christianity. The Bible, he said, is now printed in 250 different languages, and by the means of the press is furnished so cheaply that no family need be without a copy—if they are too poor to buy, it will be given them. The existence of many religious newspapers is also a power for good, and the secular paper should be—in very many cases is. He reasoned that in the case of christianity history was not liable to repeat itself unless you can wipe out of existence the press and this cannot be done. A large audience listened to the discourse.

Walter Lee, Ole Hanson, Barney Feran and Henry Lewis were out on the war-path for chickens on Saturday. To have seen them when they went one would have thought they were going for elephants as they seemed to be loaded for bear; They did not look like that when they came back—on the contrary quite the reverse. We happened to see them one at a time and in reply to the query "how many chickens?" one said 33, another 23 another, 14, at that moment Henry entered bending under the weight of—01 innocent looking chicken, which looked as though it might have died of a broken heart and was ashamed of its lonliness. Hank declares he chased the bird all over the prairie before it would surrender, but "it had to come off!" The other birds were luckier.

Thomas Moore was down from Badger on Friday and dropped in to see THE JOURNAL and report on crops and general news of his neighborhood. He says some loss has been suffered by blight, but farmers are in hopes to make up in price what they lose in quantity. He says that Harry Atiix store and dwelling combined took fire on Thursday and was burned to the ground together with all of its contents. Mrs. A. was alone in the house at the time, Harry being out in the field. As soon as she discovered the fire she summoned Harry, but by the time he arrived it was too late to do anything. There was insurance upon the stock in favor of parties Harry was owing for goods. Harry estimates his loss at $900. This must be a severe blow to him coming at this time and his many friends here extend their sympathy.

Hurrah for Merriam!

It is reported that D. H. Bates has 150 acres of wheat too badly injured to cut.

C. A. Lindblad was in the city on Friday from Lindsay. He reports crops in very fair condition up there—possibly a two-thirds yield.

Capt. Donaldson and Capt. Vanstrum, of Kittson County, returned from State Convention on Saturday. They are well satisfied with the result.

The Moorhead News gives a vivid pen picture of a social entertainment given at the residence of Rev. C. F. Bronson in honor of Miss Johanna Anderson, a young lady who is soon to leave for missionary work in Burmah. The sociable was attended by a large number of Moorhead people. It is voted that Mr. and Mrs. Bronson are most excellent entertainers.

The democrats say they are bound to win the fight this fall if they have to endorse the whole republican ticket to do it! What a glorous victory that would be to be sure. This is a sure sign of their totally demoralized condition. Where is that boasted majority we've heard so much about? They "don't got it" and they know it all too well.

We have only one note and mortgage we make a loan the day applied for, charge no bonus, and make interest payable at our office in Crookston.

The Andrews Opera Company presented the opera: "Birds of a Feather," on Wednesday evening to a good house. Our people were well pleased with the Andrews themselves and one or two others but there were some who were not so good. The costumes were new—once, but how long ago it would puzzle one more skilled in dress than we are to tell.

THE JOURNAL was the recipient of a lovely double bouquet of flowers, on Friday, with this legend appended: "With the compliments of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Clark." Our better half "to onct" insisted that unto her belonged the honors but she kindly allows us to gaze upon their fresh beauty as we pass by. Our thanks are heartily extended to the kind donors for their elegant gift.

P. J. Russel went to Grand Forks on Saturday to pass the Sabbath musing on the banks of the romantic ruby—or something like that. If it had been ordinary business that called him there he would no doubt have chosen some day when he could have returned the next, but as he chose Saturday his business must have been of that nature that the quiet of Sabbath best subserves. They do say that—however we promised not to give THAT away.

Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Peterson have settled down to housekeeping in their cosy little residence all the same like old people. On the evening of the marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Sands had a few intimate friends in to meet them, and at an early hour they started for their new home. Here they were met by a large number of friends who were bound to greet them anyhow. After hearty congratulations all round the gay party remained to enjoy the hospitality of the newly married pair until the wee sma' hours of morning. Mr. and Mrs. Peterson have the hearty congratulations of hosts of friends to which is added the best wishes of THE JOURNAL.

H. L. Melgaard, one of Merriam's forces from Marshall returned on Saturday with victory perched upon his banner.

Most of the wheat in Polk County will be in the shock this week and farmers will now speed the plow for the balance of the season.

W. F. Hitchcock commenced labor in the Carman district last Monday. In order to be thoroughly fortified he ordered THE JOURNAL mailed to his address.

W. Leman was down from Angus on Friday to attend the convention. He reports crops in that vicinity seriously injured; thinks about one-half the usual yield will be harvested.

J. B. McMahan showed us a sample wheat on Saturday, which was worse than any we have seen yet. It was shrunken and rotten, rendering it absolutely unfit for feed even. He has 250 acres of it.

D. D. Williams, our future county attorney, was in the city on Friday. He says the prospects for republican success this fall are bright in his section. He predicts a larger republican majority than ever before.

Uncle Damon Dodge represented Liberty in the convention. If there is anything your Uncle Damon really enjoys more than another it is a right down old-fashioned pow-wow of the democratic persuasion.

Geo. McManus humbly considers himself heartily endorsed by the State convention. He did hard and faithful work for "Uncle Billy" and the conventon ratified his choice by a handsome majority. He wears the honors with becoming modesty.

E. D. Childs will run two threshing crews from now on through the season so as to finish up his threshing in time to put every food of land he has under the plow. He thinks the farmer who neglects to sow all the wheat he can next year will miss it big.

The great refrain was: "It is always customary to give a man a second term," as a reason why McGill should be renominated. Well, on general principles that may be, and might have been good logic in this case, but can any one say that A. R. McGill has ever been governor of Minnesota and demonstrate it?

What's the matter with "the kids" this year anyhow? At the convention to send delegates to Chicago they played ducks and drakes with "Your Uncle Loren's" plans and now they've gone and done it again—busted the masheen higher nor a kite. "Them kids" are getting altogether too frisky and must be taken in hand!

John Mikulecky was down from Angus on Friday, exhibiting a sample of barley which he was going to send down to the fair. He had it marked for 62 bushels per acre. The heads were long and well filled and it was the finest specimen we have seen this season. John gives the usual report of his wheat—considerable damage done.

"Your Uncle Loren" heard something drap on Thursday afternoon. Joel Heatwole can now look him calmly in the eye and remark: "Uncle Loren we don't have to swallow McGill whether we want to or not!" This is not a good year for bosses in the republican party. If you must have a boss you must seek him in the democratic party.

Fred Anderson has purchased Dan McKinnon's restaurant and will refit and refurnish it throughout. Fred is an old hand at catering, having served a thorough apprenticeship in St. Paul and well knows all of the ins and outs of the business. Dan has not yet decided what he shall do but expects to engage in business in the city.

Frank Brown came near a serious accident on Friday evening. He was driving along Fletcher, near Main, when a lumber wagon came along and something frightened his pony causing him to spring upon the wagon, breaking the sulky thills and spilling Frank. The chunk, sitting in the wagon (where a man ought to have been sitting) paid no attention to Frank, in the least—did not even check his team to see whether he was hurt or not. It is possible he thought that was the way Frank always unloaded himself, but fortunately, beyond a bit of a scare Frank was not injured.

Mr. E. D. Childs did himself and Polk County proud by his actions on the committee on resolutions, fighting hard for six hours in the effort to get the sentiment of this upper country on the tariff, correctly represented and he succeeded. There was a disposition to commit the party to high tariff without revision but Mr. Childs ably combatted it and at last got a majority of the committee to realize the importance of the question. His influence on the temperance plank was also strongly felt on the right side and he made a record that THE JOURNAL for one is proud to heartily commend. The county made no mistake in that choice.

Why Not.

Grand Forks is to have a big fair next week, fully as big an affair as our own State Fair at Hamline this week and as many can not afford to attend it why not go over to Grand Forks. Fare only one cent per mile and at that rate all can afford to go. A sham battle will be held on Saturday. If you miss it you will miss a good thing.

The Lightning's Freak.

On Monday, during the storm, the Mystic Swan peacefully rode at anchor beneath the bridge. Capt. Greenhalgh impatiently trod the quarter-deck, awaiting the subsidence of the mammoth billows to permit him to heave anchor and sail away o'er the blue, taking good care not to approach too near the vast guns ranged long the larboard and the starboard, least, in event the lightning should strike the ship he might be in danger, thinking, however that he was safe being under the bridge and he finally imagined that should the bridge be struck the fluid would pay all its attention to the bridge and not skirmish around trying to hunt him up. While thinking thus he took it into his head to go ashore and seek refuge in Bivins' barn as the bridge might leak. His foot had no sooner left the gang-plank when a salute from heaven's artillery shook the ground with a deafening crash and the Capt. sat down to reflect upon the situation, enveloped in smoke. As soon as he could pull himself together again he saw that one of the bridge piles, not over 8 feet from him was shivered to atoms a brace knocked off and split and one or two piles also split. No other damage was discoverable and no one riding over the bridge would ever dream that the structure had so narrow an escape or had been struck even. The Capt, beyond a little shock is all right but it was a very narrow escape. Several were looking at the bridge when the stroke came and saw the dust and smoke fly.

Even the St. Paul Globe, that has filled the air with howls about "boodle Billy," during the canvass has to admit that he's all right. This what it says:

"He is a young man of good social standing and business capacity. Having been born with a silver spoon in his mouth, it is to his credit that he did not, as so many sons of rich parents have done, spend his portion in riotous living; but on the contrary, settled down to earnest and active business life, and has succeeded by thrift and judicious speculation in adding materially to his fortune. If Mr. Merriam's experience at the head of a successful banking institution, is any criterion by which to judge his capacity for an executive administration of State affairs, the Republicans may have gone farther and have fared worse in the selection of a candidate."

Convention Notes.

Talk about your rows. A republican convention is not a patchin'.

A. C. Wilkinson made a good nominating speech for John Paterson.

Did we understand that delegate to say in the convention of the unterrified: "You have refused your dose of castor oil this time, but if you ever do it again, look out!" Or was it "Castoria" he meant?"

The few who were nominated must feel mitey lonesome when they contemplate the many that were passed over "to the committee" (or some other man) to nominate, "if in their wisdom or discretion or something they see fit."

The only object apparent in the democratic convention was to place a ticket in the field that could be elected—without regard to party, principle or anything else. They were like the ostrich, who sticks her head in the sand and imagines her body is hiden from sight in that; while they wanted to endorse certain republicans because they know said republicans can not be beaten yet resolved not to endorse any republican (left that for their committee to do.) Well, now we will see how they come to naming winners. They were very generous—of places they knew they could not win anyhow, and they gave them out without stint.

Good Walking.

Melville Milne walked down from his school in district No. 52, 4 miles this side of Warren, on Friday evening, starting at 4 and reached home at 10 p. m., making a string 5 miles an hour. He came by wagon road he had to travel a good 30 miles. He reports having a pleasant school and enjoying it hugely. Says the damage to wheat there will about 25 per cent at least, but farmers are hoping the price will make up over other years.

Hon. H. Steenerson comes home with the laurels won at the State convention clustering thickly about him. To him was given the honor of presenting the name of W. R. Merriam to the convention, and right well did he perform that pleasing task. The St. Paul Dispatch says:

"One of the chief figures of the convention was Halvor Steenerson, of Polk County, he who made the nominating speech for the Hon. W. R. Merriam. Massive in physique, bluff and genial in manner, forceful and eloquent of speech. Mr. Steenerson is a man who would be remarked in any gathering. Possessed of a broad, comprehensive mind, disdaining quibbles or trifling, he handles all questions in a clear, lucid style, and leaves no doubt of his meaning upon the minds of his hearers. His speech in placing Mr. Merriam's name before the convention was a model of its kind. Though not a high oratorical effort, it expressed all the speaker wished to say and told the convention all it required to know. No ungenerous word or thought respecting the candidates to whom he was opposed crept into his remarks. Concise and of a refreshing manliness of tone, it did much to secure Mr. Merriam's nomination. Not alone as a speaker was Mr. Steenerson prominent. He was one of the most active on the floor of the convention, and worked with a discriminating energy which left no loophole for defeat."

JOB'S COMFORTERS.

Dr. Talmage Draws Some Valuable Conclusions from the Sorrows of Job.

East Hampton, N. Y., Sept. 2.—The Rev. Talmage, D. D., who spends a good part of his summer rest here, took for the subject of his vacation sermon of this date, "Plasters That Will Not Stick." His text was, "Miserable Comforters are Ye all," Job. chap. xvi, v. 2. Following is the sermon:

The man of Uz had a great many trials—the loss of his family, the loss of his property, the loss of his health; but the most exasperating thing that came upon him was the tantalizing talk of those who ought to have sympathized with him. Looking around upon them, and weighing what they had said, he utters the words of my text.

Why did God let sin come into the world? It was a question I often hear discussed, but never satisfactorily answered. God made the world fair and beautiful at the start. If our first parents had not sinned in Eden they might have gone out of that garden and found 50 paradises all around the earth—Europe, Asia, Africa, North and South America—so many flower gardens or orchards of fruit, redolent and luscious. I suppose that when God poured out the Gihon and the Hiddekel he poured out, at the same time, the Hudson and Susquehanna; the whole earth was very fair and beautiful to look upon. Why did it not stay so? God had the power to keep back sin and woe. Why did he not keep them back? Why not every cloud roseate and every step a joy, and every sound music, and all the ages a long jubilee of sinless women? God can make a rose as easily as He can make a thorn. Why, then, the predominance of thorns? He can make good, fair, ripe fruit as well as gnarled and sour fruit. Why so much, then, that is gnarled and sour? He can make men robust in health. Why, then, are there so many invalids? Why not have for our whole race perpetual leisure, instead of this tug and toil and tussle for a livelihood? I will tell you why God let sin come into the world—when I get on the other side of the River of Death. That is the place where such questions will be answered and such mysteries solved. He who this side that river attempts to answer the question only illustrates his own ignorance and incompetency. All I know is one great fact, and that is that a herd of woes have come upon us, trampling down everything fair and beautiful. A sword at the gate of Eden, and a sword at every gate. More people under the ground than on it. The graveyards in vast majority. The 6,000 winters have made more scars than 6,000 summers can cover up. Trouble has taken the tender heart of this world in its two rough hands and pinched it until the nations wail with the agony. If all the mounds of graveyards that have been lifted were put side by side you might step on them and on nothing else, going all around the world, and around again, and around again. These are the facts. And now I have to say that, in a world like this, the grandest occupation is that of giving condolence. This holy science of imparting comfort to the troubled we ought all of us to study. There are many of you who could look around upon some of your very best friends, who wish you well, and are very intelligent, and yet be able truthfully to say to them in your days of trouble, "Miserable comforters are ye all."

I remark, in the first place, that very voluble people are incompetent for the work of giving comfort. Bildad and Eliphaz and the gift of language, and with their words almost bothered Job's life out. Alas for these voluble people that go among the houses of the afflicted and talk, and talk, and talk, and talk! They rehearse their own sorrows, and then they tell the poor sufferers that they feel badly now, but they will feel worse after a while. Silence! Do you expect, with a thin courtplaster of words, to heal a wound deep as the soul? Step very gently around about a broken heart. Talk very softly around those whom God has bereft. Then go your way. Deep sympathy has not much to say. A firm grasp of the hand, a compassionate look, just one word that means as much as a whole dictionary, and you have given, perhaps, all the comfort that a soul needs. A man has a terrible wound in his arm. The surgeon comes and binds it up. "Now," he says, "carry that arm in a sling, and be very careful of it. Let no one touch it." But the neighbors have heard of the accident, and they come in, and they say, "Let us see it." And the bandage is pulled off, and this one and that one must feel it, and see how much it is swollen; and there is irritation, and inflammation, and exasperation, where there ought to be healing and cooling. The surgeon comes in and says, "What does all this mean? You have no business to touch those bandages. That wound will never heal unless you let it alone." So there are souls broken down in sorrow. What they most want is rest, or very careful and gentle treatment; but the neighbors have heard of the bereavement or of the loss, and they come in to sympathize, and they say, "Show us now the wound. What were his last words? Rehearse now the whole scene. How did you feel when you found you were an orphan?" Tearing off the bandages here, and pulling them off there, leaving a ghastly wound that the balm of God's grace had already begun to heal. Oh, let no loquacious people, with ever-rattling tongues go into the homes of the distressed!

Again I remark that all those persons are incompetent to give any kind of comfort who act merely as worldly philosophers. They come in and say, "Why, this is what you ought to have expected. The laws of nature must have their way;" and then they can get eloquent over something they have seen in postmortem examinations. Now, away with all human philosophy at such a time! What difference does it make to that father and mother what disease their son died of? He is dead and it makes no difference whether the trouble was in the epigastric or hypogastric region. If the philosopher be of the stoical school he will come and say: "You ought to control your feelings. You must cultivate a cooler temperament. You must have self-reliance, self-government, self-control;" an iceberg reproving a hyacinth for having a drop of dew in its eye. A violinist has his instrument, and he sweeps his fingers across the strings, now evoking strains of joy, and now strains of sadness. He can not play all the tunes on one string. The human soul is an instrument of a thousand strings, and all sorts of emotions were made to play on it. Now an anthem, now a dirge. It is no evidence of weakness when one is overcome of sorrow. Edmund Burke was found in the pasture-field with his arms around a horse's neck, caressing him, and some one said, "Why, the great man has lost his mind!" No, that horse belonged to his son who had recently died, and his great heart broke over the grief. It is no sign of weakness that men are overcome of their sorrows. Thank God for the relief of tears. Have you never been in trouble when you could not weep, and you would have given anything for a good cry? David did well when he mourned for Absalom, Abraham did well when he bemoaned Sarah; Christ did well when He wept for Lazarus; and the last man I want to see come anywhere near me when I have any kind of trouble is a worldly philosopher.

Again I remark that those persons are incompetent for the work of comfort bearing who have nothing but cant to offer. There are those who have the idea that you must groan over the distressed and afflicted. There are times in grief when one cheerful face dawning upon a man's soul is worth $1,000 to him. Do not whine over the afflicted. Take the promises of the gospel and utter them in a manly tone. Do not be afraid to smile if you feel like it. Do not drive any more hearses through that poor soul. Do not tell him the trouble was foreordained; it will not be any comfort to know it was a million years coming. If you want to find splints for a broken bone, do not take cast iron. Do not tell them it is God's justice that weighs our grief. They want now to hear of God's tender mercy. In other words, do not give them aqua fortis when they need valerian.

Again I remark that those persons are poor comforters who have never had any trouble themselves. A larkspur cannot lecture on the nature of a snowflake and those people who have always lived in the summer of prosperity cannot talk to those who are frozen in disaster. God keeps aged people in the world, I think, for this very work of sympathy. They have been through all these trials. They know all that which irritates and all that which soothes. If there are men and women here who have old people in the house, or near at hand so that they can easily reach them, I congratulate them. Some of us have had hard trials in life, and although we have many friends around us, we have wished that father and mother were still alive that we might go and tell them. Perhaps they could not say much, but it would have been such a comfort to have them around. These aged ones who have been all through the trials of life know how to give condolence. Cherish them; let them lean on your arm—these aged people. If, when you speak to them, they can not hear just what you say the first time, and you have to say it the second time, when you say it the second time, do not say it sharply. If you do you will be sorry for it on the day when you take the last look and brush back the silvery locks from the wrinkled brow, just before they screw the lid on. Blessed be God for the old people! They may not have so much strength to go around, but they are God's appointed ministers of comfort to a broken heart.

People who have not had trials themselves can not give comfort to others. They may talk very beautifully, and they may give you a great deal of poetic sentiment; but while poetry is perfume that smells sweet, it makes a very poor slave. If you have a grave in your pathway, and somebody comes and covers it all over with flowers, it is a grave yet. Those who have not had grief themselves know not the mystery of a broken heart. They know not the meaning of childlessness, and the having no one to put to bed at night, or the standing in a room where every book and picture and door is full of memories—the door mat where she sat, the cup out of which she drank—the place where she stood at the door and clapped her hands—the odd figures that she scribbled—the blocks she built into a house. Ah no, you must have trouble yourself before you can comfort trouble in others. But come all ye who have been bereft and ye who have been comforted in your sorrows, and stand around these afflicted souls, and say to them, "I had that very sorrow myself. God comforted me, and he will comfort you;" and that will go right to the spot. In other words, to comfort others, we must have faith in God, practicle experience, and good, sound common sense.

But there are three or four considerations that I will bring this morning to those who are sorrowful and distressed, and that we can always bring them, knowing that they will effect a cure. And the grat consideration is, that God sends our troubles in love. I often hear people in their troubles say, "Why, I wonder what God has against me!" They seem to think God has some grudge against them because trouble and misfortune have come. Oh no. Do you not remember that passage of Scripture, "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth?" A child comes in with a very bad splinter in its hand, and you try to extract it. It is a very painful operation. The child draws back from you, but you persist. You are going to take that splinter out, so you take the child with a gentle but firm grasp; for although there may be pain in it, the splinter must come out. And it is love that dictates it, and makes you persist. My friends, I really think that nearly all our sorrows in this world are only the hand of our Father extracting some thorn. If all these sorrows were sent by enemies, I would say, arm yourself against them; and, as in tropical climes, when a tiger comes down from the mountains and carries off a child from the village, the neighbors band together and go into the forest and hunt the monster, so I would have you, if I thought these misfortunes were sent by an enemy, go out and battle against them. But no; they come from a Father so kind, so loving, so gentle, that the prophet, speaking of His tenderness and mercy, drops the idea of father, and says, "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."

Again, I remark, there is comfort in the thought that God, by all this process, is going to make you useful. Do you know that those who accomplish most for God and heaven have all been under the harrow? Show me a man that has done anything for Christ in this day, in a public or private place, who has had no trouble and whose path has been smooth. Ah, no.

I once went through an ax factory, and I saw them take the bars of iron and thrust them into the terrible furnaces. Then besweated workmen with long tongs stirred the blaze. Then they brought out a bar of iron and put it into a crushing machine, and then they put it between jaws that bit it in twain. Then they put it on an anvil, and there were great hammers swung by machinery—each one and a half tons in weight that went thump, thump, thump. If that iron could have spoken it would have said: "Why all this beating? Why must I be pounded any more than any other iron?" The workman would have said: "We want to make axes of you—keen, sharp axes—axes with which to hue down the forest, and build the ship, and erect houses, and carry on a thousand enterprises of civilization. That's the reason we pound you." Now, God puts a soul into the furnace of trial and then it is brought and run through the crushing machine, and then it comes down on the anvil, and upon it blow after blow, blow after blow, and the soul cries out: "O, Lord! what does this mean?" God says: "I want to make something very useful out of you. You shall be something to hew with and something to build with. It is a practical process through which I am putting you." Yes, my Christian friends, we want more tools in the church of God. Not more wedges to split with; we have enough of these. Not more bores with which to drill: we have too many bores. What we really want is keen, sharp, well-tempered axes, and if there be any other way of making them than in the hot furnace, and on the hard anvil, and under the heavy hammer, I do not know what it is. Remember that if God brings any kind of chastisement upon you, it is only to make you useful. Do not sit down discouraged, and say, "I have no more reason for living. I wish I were dead." Oh, there never was so much reason for your living as now. By this ordeal you have been consecrated a priest of the Most High God. Go out and do your whole work for the Master.

Again, there is comfort in the thought that all our troubles are a revelation. Have you ever thought of it in that connection? The man who has never been through chastisement is ignorant about a thousand things in his soul he ought to know. For instance, here is a man who prides himself on his cheerfulness of character. He has no patience with anybody who is depressed in spirits. Oh, it is easy for him to be cheerful, with his fine house, his filled wardrobe, and well-strung instruments of music, and tapestried parlor, and plenty of money in the bank waiting for some permanent investment. It is easy for him to be cheerful. But suppose his fortune goes to pieces, and his house goes down under the sheriff's hammer, and the banks will not have anything to do with his paper. Suppose those people who were once elegantly entertained at his table get so shortsighted that they can not recognize him upon the street. How then? Is it so easy to be cheerful? It is easy to be cheerful in the home, after the day's work is done, and the gas is turned on, and the house is full of romping little ones. But suppose the piano is shut because the fingers that played on it will no more touch the keys, and the childish voice that asked so many questions will ask no more. Then it is so easy? When a man wakes up and finds that his resources are all gone, he begins to rebel, and he says, "God is hard; God is outrageous. He had no business to do this to me." My friends, those of us who have trouble know what a sinful and rebellious heart we have, and how much God has to put up with, and how much we need pardon. It is only in the light of a flaming furnace that we can learn our own lack of moral resources.

There is also a great deal of comfort in the fact that there will be a family reconstruction in a better place. From Scotland, or England, or Ireland, a child emigrated to this country. It is very hard parting, but he comes, after a while writing home as to what a good land it is. Another brother comes, a sister comes, and another, and after a while the mother comes, and after a while the father comes, and now they are all here, and they have a time of great congratulation and a very pleasant reunion. Well it is just so with our families; they are emigrating to a better land. Now, one goes out. Oh, how hard it is to part with him! Another goes. Oh, how hard it is to part with her! And another, and another, and we ourselves will after a while go over, and then we will be together. Oh, what a reunion! Do you believe that? "Yes," you say. You do not! You do not believe it as you do other things. If you did, and with the same emphasis, why it would take nine-tenths of the trouble off your heart. The fact is, heaven to many of us is a great fog. It is away off somewhere, filled with an uncertain and indefinite population. That is the kind of heaven that many of us dream about; but it is the most tremendous fact in all the universe—this heaven of the Gospel. Our departed friends are not afloat. The residence in which you live is not so real as the residence in which they stay. You are afloat, you do not know in the morning what will happen before night. They are housed and safe forever. Do not, therefore, pity your departed friends who have died in Christ. They do not need any of your pity. You might as well send a letter of condolence to Queen Victoria on her obscurity, or to the Rotoschilds on their poverty, as to pity those who have won the palm. Do not say of those who are parted. "Poor child!" "Poor father!" "Poor mother!" They are not poor. You are poor—you whose homes have been shattered—not they. You do not dwell much with your families in this world. All day long you are off to business. Will it not be pleasant when you can be together all the while? If you have had four children and one is gone, and anybody asks how many children you have, do not be so infidel as to say three. Say four—one in heaven. Do not think the grave is unfriendly. You go in your room and dress for some grand entertainment; and you come forth beautifully appareled; and the grave is only the place where we go to dress for the glorious resurrection, and we will come out radiant, radiant, mortality having become immortality. Oh, how much condolence there is in this thought! I expect to see my kindred in heaven; I expect to see them as certainly as I expect to go home today. Ay, I shall more certainly see them. Eight or 10 will come up from the grave-yard back of Somerville, and one will come up from the mountains back of Amoy, China; and another will come up from the sea off Cape Hatteras; and 30 will come up from Greenwood; and I shall know them better than I ever knew them here. And your friends—they may be across the sea, but the trumpet that sounds here will sound there. You will come up on just the same day. Some morning you have overslept yourself, and you open your eyes, and see that the sun is high in the heavens, and you say, "I have overslept, and I must be up and off." So you will open your eyes on the morning of the resurrection, in the full blaze of God's light, and you will say, "I must be up and away." Oh yes, you will come up, and there will be a reunion, a reconstruction of your family. I like what Halburton, I think it was—good old Mr. Halburton—said in his last moments. "I thank God that I ever lived, and that I have a father in heaven, and a mother in heaven, and brothers in heaven, and sisters in heaven, and I am now going up to see them."

I remark once more: our troubles in this world are preparative for glory. What a transition it was for Paul—from the slippery deck of a foundering ship to the calm presence of Jesus! What a transition it was for Latimer—from the stake to a throne! What a transition it was for Robert Hall—from insanity to glory! What a transition it was for Richard Baxter—from the dropsy to the "saint's everlasting rest!" And what a transition it will be for you—from a world of sorrow to a world of joy! John Holland, when he was dying said: "What means this brightness in the room? Have you lighted the candles?" "No," they replied, "we have not lighted any candles." Then said he: "Welcome heaven!" the light already beaming upon his pillow. O, ye who are persecuted in this world! your enemies will get off the track after a while, and all will speak well of you among the thrones. Ho! ye who are sick now, no medicines to take there. One breath of the eternal hills will thrill you with immortal vigor. And we who are lonesome now, there will be a thousand spirits to welcome you into their companionship. O ye bereft souls! there will be no grave digger's spade that will cleave the side of that hill, and there will be no dirge wailing from that temple. The river of God, deep as the joy of heaven will roll on between banks odorous with balm, and over depths bright with jewels, and under skies roseate with gladness, argosies with light going down the stream to the stroke of glittering oar and the song of angels! Not one sigh in the wind; not one tear mingling with the waters.

> "There shall I bathe my weary soul
> In seas of heavenly rest,
> And not a wave of trouble roll
> Across my peaceful breast."

The Monkey as a Scientist.

In the interesting little "zoo" connected with the National museum at Washington there is a fine male grivet monkey, who shares a large cage with four opossums. To human beings he shows himself anything but amiable, but he takes kindly to his strange companions, and they have been the best of friends from the first. The attention of the attendant was lately drawn to the cage by the excitement of a crowd in front of it, and on going to ascertain the cause he was surprised to see the monkey seated in the middle of the cage with one of the opossums lying quietly on her back on his lap and her head under his arm. The monkey had just discovered the marsupial pouch of the opossum, and was diligently investigating it. Had he not been a close observer it certainly would have remained unseen, for it was so tightly closed as to be perfectly invisible in its normal condition. The monkey carefully lifted the outer wall of the pouch and peered into the cavity. Then he reached in with his hand, felt about for a moment, and to the astonishment of everybody took out a tiny young opossum, about two inches long, hairless, blind, and very helpless, but alive and kicking. "Jock" held it up to the light where he could get a good view of it, scrutinized it with the air of a savant, and presently returned it to the pouch very carefully. After replacing it he looked into the pouch again, and presently drew out another for examination, which he looked at with solemn interest, smelt it, and then carefully put it back. It was thus it became known to the attendants that the old female opossum had the young ones, which had been looked for in vain.

The Expenses of Governing Us.

The growth and magnitude of the United States are brought out very strikingly in a little volume of sixty pages just issued by the Treasury Department, entitled "Receipts and Disbursements of the United States for the Fiscal Year Ending June 30, 1887." Over a million dollars a day including Sundays—that is what the statement of receipts shows. The total gross receipts for the year were $371,403,277. That is several million dollars more than the year before, and in fact is more than any year except war times. The Customs service paid $218,000,000 of it, internal revenue $118,000,000, public lands $10,000,000, miscellaneous $23,000,000. As to the other side, the grand total of expenses is set down as $267,000,000. That leaves a net profit for the year's business of over $100,000,000. Of the disbursements $45,000,000 were for salaries, $68,000,000 for ordinary expenses, $14,000,000 for public works and $137,000,000 for unusual and extraordinary expenses, meaning pensions, war claims, headstones for soldiers' graves, maintenance of soldiers' homes, &c. There are some curious points among the incidentals of the expenses. It shows for instance, the salaries of the much groaned about navy to be less than a quarter of a million a year, while those of the War Department are four times as much and those of the Treasury officials ten times as much as the navy salaries. The salaries and mileage of Congress are estimated at over $2,000,000 a year.

FLORIDIAN POSSIBILITIES.

How Swamps are Being Turned Into Gardens—Raising Cocoanuts and Pineapples—The Sugar Land of the Future.

Letter to Cleveland Leader.

I met Judge W. D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, at the Windsor Hotel at Jacksonville. He had just returned from South Florida, and he was full of the wonderful resources and possibilities of that unknown region. South Florida embraces all the lands south of the twenty-ninth parallel of latitude. It contains over 27,000 square miles, an area more than three times as large as the State of Massachusetts, and more than twenty times as large as Rhode Island. A greater part of this territory is unknown, and some of it has never been explored. It is a great place for the grazing of cattle and it contains immense swamp lands, which are only inhabited by Indians and wild beasts. The northern part of it is now being settled and the northwestern part contains much fine orange country. On the eastern part along the Atlantic ocean is the Indian river region, which is the finest orange country in the world, and the fruit of which sells at higher prices than any other. Some of the best land of this region is susceptible of drainage. Hamilton Disston, the saw millionaire of Philadelphia, has organized a company for its reclamation. If you will look at the map of Florida you will see that there are a number of lakes joined by rivers which finally pour their waters into the great lake of Okeechobee. Disston bought 4,000,000 acres of land in this region at twenty-five cents an acre, and entered into a contact with the State of Florida by which he was to have half the land which he reclaimed. He has dug wide ditches from one of these lakes to the other, until he now has a stream of water running through them off into the Gulf of Mexico. The topmost lake of this system is, I think, lake Tohopekaliga, and this is about sixty feet higher than the waters of the gulf. He has a continuous fall from the head of this lake to the gulf, and he has redeemed, it is said, such an amount of land as to give his company the right to 1,000,000 acres. The work is still going on, and a great area of valuable territory will be recovered. The lands included in the Disston purchase are the best in Florida. They will make, it is said, the best sugar lands of the United States, and this will be our great sugar country of the future.

In this region, also, cocoanuts and pineapples are grown, and the cocoanut industry is being largely cultivated in South Florida. Pineapples and cocoanuts pay very well. Ten thousand pineapples can be raised, it is said, to the acre, and an acre of ground will support fifty cocoanut trees. The cocoanut trees require little cultivation. They begin to bear at from nine to twelve years of age, and they produce from 80 to 150 nuts to the tree. Cocoanuts bring about five cents apiece to the grower, and supposing a ten-acre grove will yield 20,000 nuts it would bring in an income of $1,000 a year. There have been many cocoanut groves planted within the last two or three years in south Florida. M. Field, of Middletown, N. J., has about 330,000 trees. They are planted twenty feet apart each way on a strip of land in Dade county, near the Atlantic Ocean. Mr. Field thinks that the ground along the ocean is the best for the cocoanut. In Monroe county there are also some groves, and at Charlotte Harbor, on the Gulf of Mexico, there are trees which produce 300 and more nuts apiece annually. There are 325,000 trees now in Monroe county, of which 50,000 were set out last year. Florida grew about 100,000 dozen pineapples last year, and the day may come when it will supply to the United States the most of its tropical fruits. General Grant said that Florida was capable of supplying the tropical fruits now used in the United States and all of the $100,000,000 worth of sugar now imported, and in his opinion it afforded the best opening in the world for young men of small means and great industry. I think this is true to a certain extent. But the pioneer needs more capital to begin his life here than in the Western States. Orange growing and cocoanut growing require time before they begin to yield a profit, but when the profit does come it amply compensates the few years of waiting.

Boston Letter in the New York Tribune.

The letter, which has never been published, is as follows:

Brooklyn, Nov. 9, 1872.—My Dear Mr. Greeley: I read your card in the Tribune with sincere pleasure, and congratulate myself and the cause of journalism on your return to a field in which you have won so much reputation and where you have done such service that the history of America cannot be written without including as an important part of it your life and services.

You may think, amidst clouds of smoke and dust, that all your old friends who parted company with you in the late campaign will turn a momentary difference into a lifelong alienation. It will not be so. I speak for myself, and also from what I perceive in other men's hearts. Your mere political influence may for a time be impaired, but your own power for good in the far wider fields of industrial economy, social and civil criticism, and the general well being of society, will not be lessened, but augmented. It is true that hitherto the times called for a warrior, and such you were; yet I cannot but think with regret how much ability has been spent by you that died with the occasion, and which might have built up positive and permanent elements. But I look upon your years to come as likely to be more fruitful and irradiated with a kind and beneficient light, which will leave your name in honor far greater than if you had reached the highest office.

I beg that you will pardon my intrusion, especially when you stand in the shadow of a great domestic trouble. I hoped that a word of honest respect and sympathy might not displease you. There are thousands who would like to do as I have done, and who with me will rejoice once more to be in sympathy with you in all things beneficient and patriotic. I am, my dear Mr. Greeley, very truly yours, (signed) Henry Ward Beecher.

DAKOTA NEWS.

L. F. Beede, a farmer living nine miles south of Oriska, died in his wagon of apoplexy on his way from the field to the house.

Christ church at Yankton is now free of debt, has one of the handsomest edifices in the west and is on the hunt for a rector.

The first load of new wheat was received at Chruch's Ferry. It graded No. 1 Northern. The price paid for it was 74 cents as against 50 cents this time last year.

A small son of W. P. Stubbs fell from a load of wheat near Gary, and the wheels passed over his body. Two ribs were broken, and it is feared he is injured internally.

The Vermillion Republican has the report that one of Elk Point's fair damsels ate twenty-one ears of sweet corn for supper recently and went to camp-meeting in the evening.

The Press says it is estimated that 125 new buildings have been put up in Sioux Falls this season, and that the number will be increased to 300 by freezing-up time.

Plain Talk says, speaking of the university, that "the first thing Vermillion knows there will be no room for the accommodation of students here and applicants will leave for want of room."

Judge McConnell issued injunctions against the saloon men of Pembina, commanding them to appear before the court at Grand Forks Oct. 2 and show cause why the injunction should not be made permanent.

The demand for Sioux Falls jasper is so great that the quarrymen are away behind with their orders. Next year, the Press says, 5,000 men can be worked instead of 1,000 to 1,500 as now.

A farmer named Erick Swensen had his team and buggy stolen. Swensen lives seven miles north of Glencoe, and came to attend the Methodist Church. During services they were taken.

People living in the Hills and northwest of Andover have been fighting fire. It was started by sparks from passing locomotives igniting the wheat stubble. People had their faces and hands burned quite severely.

The first new wheat was received in the Bismarck market Friday and next day it came in freely. It grades No. 1 hard and starts at 76 cents. This price and the average yield will put the farmers on the Missouri slope on their feet.

The Rapid City Republican propounds this query to a visiting Iowa preacher: "Is it a successful method of converting sinners to tell them that they are the scum of his own state and that he is thankful he does not have to live among them?"

The county commissioners of Ward county voted to call an election for the purpose of voting on the question of removal of the county seat from Burlington to Minot. This practically settles the question, as Minot casts over half of the vote of the entire country.

The Scotland Citizen says that two years ago it would have been impossible to find a car of fat hogs in Bon Homme county, but the farmers have begun to realize the fact that what money there is to be made in farming is by raising cattle and hogs, and within two years these industries have multiplied several times.

Alexandria Herald, Farmers are beginning to thrash, and wheat is running about 20 bushels to the acre. Flax promises a very large yield. Some fields of corn are out of the way of frost now, but the majority will require good weather until September 10. The crop right through the country is the best and largest ever raised. The rain did very little damage.

Here is the sort of calaboose Sioux Falls has, as the Press sees it: "The sanitary condition of the city calaboose is simply awful. There is no known way to remedy it except to burn the building down. The place isn't fit to put the filthiest drunk in, let alone locking up an occasional man who has some semblance of respectability. It is a good place for a man to contract a disease that will stay with him all the days of his life."

The oldest citizen of Grand Forks, Fargo, Bismarck, Aberdeen and other cities in Dakota cannot remember of a time when he saw rats in Dakota. That delusion was forcibly dispelled by an army of rodents making their appearance in the freight depot of the Northern Pacific railway. How they got there, unless from the hold of some river steamer which occasionally unloads in that vicinity, is a mystery. The agent and employes of the freight depot were too many for the rats and they are now numbered with the slain.

Among the effects of a wealthy New Englander, now deceased, the Yankton Press and Dakotaian reports, was a telescope valued at $15,000. The heirs to the estate arranged with Dr. Ward, president of Yankton college, that when the college was able and willing to pay $1,500 for the instrument it would be sent to Yankton. The faculty has succeeded in raising $1,000. The arrangement is that the other $500 may be paid at the pleasure of the college, and the telescope, which is in the possession of C. M. Brown, Jamestown, N. Y., will be shipped to this city.

A prairie fire originating from locomotive sparks started northwest of Max, Edmunds county, on Wednesday evening, and, driven by a strong wind, swept north, devastating a strip of country twenty-five miles long by three to four wide. Fortunately the region was thinly settled, or even greater damage would have been done. Several barns, one or two farm-houses and a large quantity of hay and grain in stack and shock was destroyed.

CLEVELAND ACCEPTS.

Mr. Cleveland at Last gives out the long looked for Letter of Acceptance.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 9.—The following is the president's letter of acceptance:

Washington, Sept. 8, 1888.—Hon. Patrick A. Collins and Others, Committee, etc.—Gentlemen: In addressing to you my formal acceptance of the nomination to the presidency of the United States, my thoughts persistently dwell upon the impressive relation of such action to the American people, whose confidence is thus invited, and to the political party to which I belong, just entering upon a contest for continued supremacy. The world does not afford a spectacle more sublime than is furnished when millions of free and intelligent American citizens select their chief magistrate, and bid one of their number to find the highest earthly honor and the full measure of public duty in ready submission to their will. It follows that a candidate for this high office can never forget that when the turmoil and the strife which attend the selection of its incumbent shall be heard no more, there must be in the quiet calm which follows a complete and solemn self-consecration by the people's chosen president of every faculty and endeavor to the service of a confiding and generous nation of freemen. These thoughts are intensified by the light of my experience in the presidential office, which has soberly impressed me with the severe responsibilities which it imposes, while it has quickened my love for American institutions and taught me the priceless value of the trust of my countrymen. It is of the highest importance that those who administer our government should jealously protect and maintain the rights of American citizens at home and abroad, and should strive to achieve for our country her proper place among the nations of the earth; there is no people whose home interests are so great, and whose numerous objects of domestic concern deserve so much watchfulness and care. Among these are the regulation of a sound financial system suited to our needs, thus securing an efficient agency of national wealth and general prosperity; the construction and equipment of means of defense, to insure our national safety and maintain the honor beneath which such national safety reposes; the protecting of our national domain, still stretching beyond the needs of a century's expansion, and its preservation for the settler and the pioneer of our marvelous growth; a sensible and sincere recognition of the value of American labor, leading to the scrupulous care and just appreciation of the interests of our

the limitation and checking of such monopolistic tendencies and schemes as interfere with the advantages and benefits which the people may rightly claim; a generous regard and care for our surviving soldiers and sailors, and for the widows and orphans of such as have died, to the end that while the appreciation of their services and sacrifices is quickened the application of their pension funds to improper cases may be prevented; protection against a servile immigration, which injuriously competes with our laboring men in the field of toil, and adds to our population an element ignorant of our institutions and laws, impossible of assimilation with our people, and dangerous to our peace and welfare; a strict and steadfast adherence to the principles of civil service reform and a thorough execution of the laws passed for their enforcement, thus permitting to our people the advantages of business methods in the operation of their government; the guaranty to our colored citizens of all their rights of citizenship, and their just recognition and encouragement in all things pertaining to that relation; a firm, patient and humane Indian policy, so that in peaceful relations with the government the civilization of the Indian may be promoted, with resulting quiet and safety to the settlers on our frontiers, and the curtailment of public expense by the introduction of economical methods in every department of the government. The pledges contained in the platform adopted by the late convention of the national Democracy lead to the advancement of these objects and insure good government—the aspiration of every true American citizen and the motive for every patriotic action and effort. In the consciousness that much has been done in the direction of good government by the present administration, and submitting its record to the fair inspection of my countrymen, I indorse the platform thus presented, with the determination that, if I am again called to the chief magistracy, there shall be a continuance of devoted endeavor to advance the interests of the entire country. Our scale of federal taxation and its consequences largely engross at this time the attention of our citizens, and the people are soberly considering the necessity of measures of relief. Our government is the creation of the people, established to carry out their designs and accomplish their good. It was founded on justice, and was made for a free, intelligent and virtuous people. It is only useful when within their control, and only serves them well when

by their constant touch. It is a free government because it guarantees to every American citizen the unrestricted personal use and enjoyment of all the reward of his toil and of all his income, except what may be his fair contribution to necessary public expense. Therefore it is not only the right, but the duty of a free people, in the enforcement of this guaranty, to insist that such expense should be strictly limited to the actual public needs. It seems perfectly clear that when the government, this instrumentality created and maintained by the people to do their bidding, turns upon them, and, through an utter perversion of its powers, extorts from their labor and capital tribute largely in excess of public necessities, the creature has rebelled against the creator and the masters are robbed by their servants. The cost of the government must continue to be met by tariff duties collected at our custom-houses upon imported goods and by internal revenue taxes assessed upon spirituous and malt liquors, tobacco and oleomargarine. I suppose it is needless to explain that all these duties and assessments are added to the price of the articles upon which they are levied, and thus become a tax upon all those who buy these articles for use and consumption. I suppose, too, it is well understood that the effect of this tariff taxation is not limited to the consumers of imported articles, but that the duties imposed upon such articles permit a corresponding increase in price to be laid upon domestic productions of the same kind, which increase, paid by all our people as consumers of home productions and entering every American home, constitutes a form of taxation as certain and as inevitable as though the amount was annually paid into the hand of the tax gatherer. These results are inseparable from the plan we have adopted for the collection of our revenue by tariff duties. They are not mentioned to discredit the system, but by way of preface to the statement that every million of dollars collected at our custom houses for duties upon imported articles and paid into the public treasury, represent many millions more which, though never reaching the national treasury, are paid by our citizens as the increased cost of domestic productions resulting from our tariff laws. In these circumstances, and in view of this necessary effect of the operation of our plan for raising revenue, the absolute duty of limiting the rate of tariff charges to the necessities of a frugal and economical administration of the government, seems to be perfectly plain. The continuance, upon a pretext of meeting public expenditures of such a scale of

as draws from the substance of the people a sum largely in excess of public needs, is surely something which under a government based upon justice, and which finds its strength and usefulness in the faith and trust of the people, ought not to be tolerated. While the heaviest burdens incident to the necessities of the government are uncomplainingly borne, light burdens become grievous and intolerable when not justified by such necessities. Unnecessary taxation is unjust taxation. And yet this is our condition. We are annually collecting at our custom houses, and by means of our internal revenue taxation, many millions in excess of all legitimate public needs. As a consequence there now remains in the national treasury a surplus of more than one hundred and thirty millions of dollars. No better evidence could be furnished that the people are exorbitantly taxed. The extent of the superfluous burden indicated by this surplus will be better appreciated when it is suggested that such surplus alone represents taxation aggregating more than one hundred and eight thousand dollars in a community containing fifty thousand inhabitants. Taxation has always been the feature of organized government; the hardest to reconcile with the people's ideas of freedom and happiness. When presented in a direct form nothing will arouse popular discontent more quickly and profoundly than unjust and unnecessary taxation. Our farmers, mechanics, laborers, and all our citizens closely scan the slightest increase in the taxes assessed upon their lands and other property, and demand good reasons for such increase. And yet they seem to be expected, in some quarters, to regard the unnecessary volume of insidious and indirect taxation visited upon them by our present rate of tariff duties with indifference if not with favor. The surplus revenue now remaining in the treasury not only furnishes conclusive proof of unjust taxation, but its existence constitutes a separate and independent menace to the prosperity of the people. This vast accumulation of idle funds represents that much money drawn from the circulating medium of the country which is needed in the channels of trade and business. It is a great mistake to suppose that the consequences which follow the continual withdrawal and hoarding by the government of the currency of the people are not of immediate importance to the mass of our citizens, and only concerns those engaged in large financial transactions. In the restless enterprise and activity which free and ready money among the people produces, is found that opportunity for

and that impetus to business and production which bring in their train prosperity to our citizens in every station and vocation. New ventures, new investments in business and manufacture, the construction of new and important works and the enlargement of enterprises already established, depend largely upon obtaining money upon easy terms with fair security; and all these things are stimulated by an abundant volume of circulating medium. Even the harvested grain of the farmer remains without a market unless money is forthcoming for its movement and transportation to the seaboard. The first result of a scarcity of money among the people is the exaction of severe terms for its use. Increasing distrust and timidity is followed by a refusal to loan or advance on any terms. Investors refuse all risks and decline all securities, and in a general fright the money still in the hands of the people is persistently hoarded. It is quite apparent that when this perfectly natural, if not inevitable stage is reached, depression in all business and enterprise will, as a necessary consequence, lessen the opportunity for work and employment, and reduce salaries and wages of labor. Instead then of being exempt from the influences and effect of an immense surplus lying idle in the national treasury our wage earners and others who rely upon their labor for support are most of all directly concerned in the situation. Others seeing the approach of danger may provide against it, but it will find those depending upon their daily toil for bread unspared, helpless and defenseless. Such a state of affairs does not represent a case of idleness resulting from disputes between the laboring man and his employer, but it produces an absolute and enforced stoppage of employment and wages. In reviewing the bad effects of this accumulated surplus and the scale of tariff rates by which it is produced, we must not overlook the tendency toward gross and scandalous public extravagance which a congested treasury induces, nor the fact that we are maintaining, without excuse, in a time of profound peace, substantially the rate of tariff duties imposed in time of war, when the necessities of the government justified the imposition of the weightiest burdens upon the people. Divers plans have been suggested for the return of this accumulated surplus to the people and the channels of trade. Some of these devices are at variance with all rules of good finance; some are delusive, some are absurd, and some betray by their reckless extravagance the

of a great surplus of public money upon the judgments of individuals. While such efforts should be made as are consistent with public duty and sanctioned by sound judgment to avoid danger by the useful disposition of the surplus now remaining in the treasury, it is evident that if its distribution were accomplished another accumulation would soon take its place if the constant flow of redundant income were not checked at its source by a reform in our present tariff laws. We do not propose to deal with these conditions by merely attempting to satisfy the people of the truth of abstract theories nor by alone urging their assent to political doctrine. We present to them the propositions that they are unjustly treated in the extent of present federal taxation, that as a result a condition of extreme danger exists, and that it is for them to demand a remedy and that defense and safety promised in the guaranties of their free government. We believe that the same means which are adopted to relieve the treasury of its present surplus and prevent its recurrence should cheapen to our people the cost of supplying their daily wants. Both of these objects we seek in part to gain by reducing the present tariff rates upon the necessaries of life. We fully appreciate the importance to the country of our domestic industrial enterprise. In the rectification of existing wrongs their maintenance and prosperity should be carefully and in a friendly spirit considered. Even such reliance upon present revenue arrangements as have been invited or encouraged should be fairly and justly regarded. Abrupt and radical changes which might endanger such enterprises, and injuriously affect the interests of labor dependent upon their success and continuance, are not contemplated or intended. But we know the cost of our domestic manufactured products is increased and their price to the consumer enhanced by the duty imposed upon the raw material used in their manufacture. We know that this increased cost prevents the sale of our productions at foreign markets in competition with those countries which have the advantage of free raw material. We know that confined to a home market our manufacturing operations are curtailed, their demand for labor irregular and the rate of wages paid uncertain. We propose therefore to stimulate our domestic industrial enterprises by freeing from duty the imported raw materials, which, by the employment of labor, are used in our home manufactures, thus extending the markets for their sale and permitting an increased and steady production with the allowance of

ABUNDANT PROFITS.

True to the undeviating course of the Democratic party we will not neglect the interests of labor and our workingmen. In all efforts to remedy existing evils we will furnish no excuse for the loss of employment or the reduction of the wages of honest toil. On the contrary, we propose in any adjustment of our revenue laws to concede such encouragement and advantage to the employers of domestic labor as will easily compensate for any difference that may exist between the standard of wages which should be paid to our laboring men and the rate allowed in other countries. We propose, too, by extending the markets for our manufacturers to promote the steady employment of labor, while by cheapening the cost of the necessaries of life we increase the purchasing power of the workingman's wages and add to the comforts of his home. And, before passing from this phase of the question, I am constrained to express the opinion, that while the interests of labor should be always sedulously regarded in any modification of our tariff laws, an additional and more direct and efficient protection to those interests would be afforded by the restriction and prohibition of the immigration or importation of laborers from other countries, who swarm upon our shores, having no purpose or intent of becoming our fellow citizens, or acquiring any permanent interest in our country, but who crowd every field of employment with unintelligent labor at wages which ought not to satisfy those who make claim to American citizenship. The platform adopted by the late national convention of our party contains the following declaration: "Judged by Democratic principles the interests of the people are betrayed when by unnecessary taxation trusts and combinations are permitted and fostered, which, while unduly enriching the few that combine, rob the body of our citizens by depriving them as purchasers of the benefits of natural competition." Such combinations have always been condemned by the Democratic party. The declaration of it national convention is sincerely made, and no member of our party will be found excusing the existence or belittling the pernicious results of these devices to wrong the people. Under various names they have been punished by the common law for hundreds of years; and they have lost none of their hateful features because they have assumed the name of trusts instead of conspiracies. We believe that those trusts are the natural offspring of a market artificially restricted; that an inordinately besides furnishing the temptation for their existence, enlarges the limit within which they may operate against the people, and thus increases the extent of their power for wrong-doing. With an unalterable hatred of all such schemes we count the checking of their baleful operations among the good results promised by revenue reform. While we cannot avoid partisan misrepresentation, our position upon the question of revenue reform should be so plainly stated as to admit of no misunderstanding. We have entered upon no crusade of free trade. The reform we seek to inaugurate is predicated upon the utmost care for established industries and enterprises, a jealous regard for the interests of American labor and a sincere desire to relieve the country from the injustice and danger of a condition which threatens evil to all the people of the land. We are dealing with no imaginary danger. Its existence has been repeatedly confessed by all political parties, and pledges of a remedy have been made on all sides. Yet, when in the legislative body, where under the constitution remedial measures applicable to this subject must originate, the Democratic majority were attempting with extreme moderation to redeem the pledge common to both parties, they were met by determined opposition and obstruction; and, the minority refusing to co-operate in the house of representatives, or propose another remedy, have remitted the redemption of their party pledge to the doubtful power of the senate. The people will hardly be deceived by their abandonment of the field of legislative action to meet in political convention and flippantly declare in their party platform that our conservative and careful effort to relieve the situation is destructive to the American system of protection. Nor will the people be misled by the appeal to prejudice contained in the absurd allegation that we serve the interests of Europe, while they will support the interests of America. They propose in their platform to thus support the interests of our country by removing the internal revenue tax from tobacco and from spirits used in the arts and for mechanical purposes. They declare also that there should be such a revision of our tariff laws as shall tend to check the importation of such articles as are produced here. Thus in proposing to increase the duties upon such articles to nearly or quite a prohibitory point, they confess themselves willing to travel backward in the road of civilization and to deprive our people of the markets for their goods, which can only be gained and kept by the semblance at least of an

while they abandon our consumers to the unrestrained oppression of the domestic trusts and combinations which are in the same platform perfunctorily condemned. They propose further to release entirely from import duties all articles of foreign production (except luxuries) the like of which cannot be produced in this country. The plain people of the land and the poor, who scarcely use articles of any description produced exclusively abroad and not already free, will find it difficult to discover where their interests are regarded in this proposition. They need in their homes cheaper domestic necessaries; and this seems to be entirely unprovided for in this proposed scheme to serve the country. Small compensation for this neglected need is found in the further purpose here announced and covered by the declaration that if after the changes already mentioned there still remains a larger revenue than is requisite for the wants of the government the entire internal taxation should be repealed "rather than surrender any part of our protective system." Our people ask relief from the undue and unnecessary burden of tariff taxation now resting upon them. They are offered—free tobacco and free whisky. They ask for bread and they are given a stone. The implication contained in this party declaration that desperate measures are justified or necessary to save from destruction or surrender what is termed our protective system, should confuse no one. The existence of such a system is entirely consistent with the regulation of the extent to which it should be applied and the correction of its abuses. Of course, in a country as great as ours, with such a wonderful variety of interests, often leading in entirely different directions, it is difficult, if not impossible, to settle upon a perfect tariff plan. But in accomplishing the reform we have entered upon, the necessity of which is so obvious, I believe we should not be content with a reduction of revenue involving the prohibition of importations and the removal of the internal tax upon whisky. It can be better and more safely done within the lines of granting actual relief to the people in their means of living, and at the same time giving an impetus to our domestic enterprises and furthering our national welfare. If misrepresentations of our purposes and motives are to gain credence and defeat our present effort in this direction, there seems to be no reason why every endeavor in the future to accomplish revenue reform should not be likewise attacked and with like result. And yet no thoughtful man can fail to see in the continuance of the present burdens of the people, and the abstraction by the government of the currency of the country inevitable distress and disaster. All danger will be averted by timely action. The difficulty of applying the remedy will never be less and the blame should not be laid at the door of the Democratic party if it is applied too late. With firm faith in the intelligence and patriotism of our countrymen, and relying upon the conviction that misrepresentation will not influence them, prejudice will not cloud their understanding and that menace will not intimidate them, let us urge the people's interest and public duty for the vindication of our attempt to inaugurate a righteous and beneficent reform.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Robert Garrett's Baltimore Palace.

Philadelphia News.

The Garrett residence is a wonder of architectural and decorative art; and its formal opening, by a grand ball early in January, 1887, was the event of that Baltimore season. The ground plan is 60 by 100 feet; there are three stories and a basement, with a solid front of brown stone. The general style is that of the French Rennaissance, but the designer allowed himself much latitude. The main hall is that of an old English manor, and all the woodwork is of English black oak, elaborately carved, with panel decorations, choice paintings and steel suits of mail. There is also a library finished in mahogany, a dining room in the Dutch style of the sixteenth century, a parlor upholstered in Gobelin tapestry, with friezes of allegorical paintings, a wonderful balcony, and a conservatory, 40 by 60 feet in size; which is a perfect paradise of ferns and exotic flowers, with bubbling fountains and waterfalls, over all of which is a light soft as that of a full moon. Altogether it is a neighborhood of which the possible colored orphan neighbor would have no cause to feel ashamed. The real wonder of the place however, is the bath-room, modeled after that of the luxurious Louis XV of France. The ceiling is in imitation of lattice work, with vines and flowers; the immense laver (Vulgato voce, "tub") is of silver and Tennessee marble; the water comes in through brass pipes and gold-plated fixtures, and all the adornments are of sybaritic elegance.

Several Groundless Superstitions.

There are thousands who believe it is healthy to get up early in the morning; whereas it is a hygienic crime for a man to get up before he wants to. The desire to sleep late in the morning is one of nature's most emphatic intimations that more time is needed for repairs. For a man to go to work in the morning in a sleepy, semi-comatose condition is simply a gradual suicide. There is another popular delusion that a man should stop eating while he is yet hungry. He might as well stop breathing before his lungs are filled. Hunger is the barometer of the stomach. A man is never hungry unless he ought to eat. There is another delusion that night air is unhealthy—as if any one could get any but night air at night. There is really no air so unhealthy as day air bottled up and kept all night. There has been no way discovered for preserving air like huckleberries by bottling.—Yankee Blade.

PUNISHING THE PRISONERS.

Two Methods in Use—Hanging Men Up by the Wrists—Horrors of the Dark Cell.

A visitor going through Sing Sing prison is struck by a square room comparatively small for that place, which has a cleaner and brighter appearance than any other room in the entire institution, the chaplain's office not excepted. The entrance is on a level with the ground, the entire center is taken up by a framework of brick that is hollowed out on two sides into cells and the entire place is as white as lime can make it. The flagged corridor running around the cells is spotless, and the place is as quiet as a tomb. The cells are perfectly bare of furniture, and are, for the greater part of the time, empty. They are doubly guarded, for besides the usual heavy grated door they have a door made of heavy planks that sets in close to the masonry. They are in striking contrast to the walls, for they are painted black. A raised section of wood work in the center of them admits air into the cell through winding channels through which not even the faintest ray of light can force its way. As cheerful as the place looks to the visitor, it is a bugbear to the prisoners, for these are the dark cells.

This is one of the two forms of punishment inflicted upon refractory prisoners in Sing Sing, and it is a punishment so horrible that the mere threat of a dark cell carries with it more terrors than the actual infliction of the other punishment, which consists in stringing up prisoners by the wrists. The apparatus for this is in the same building, and consists of a piece of heavy timber about eighteen inches square that slides up and down in a groove. In the centre of the square is a hook. The victim is handcuffed, and the link connecting the cuffs is slipped over this hook, and then the block is raised up until the prisoner's feet leave the floor. This point is generally signaled by a scream from the unhappy wretch who is suspended, Principal Keeper Connaughton said, not more than fifteen or twenty seconds.

"I have seen statements to the effect," said he, "that blood frequently gushes from the wrist of prisoners punished this way; that it often cripples them for life; that prisoners are hung up for five and ten minutes, and that the punishment is frequently inflicted. None of these statements are true. In the first place, no living man could stand being strung up as long a time as that. The punishment is not inflicted here once a month, and during my long experience in prison I have never known of blood being forced through the skin by the pressure. A short time ago a party of visitors were shown through here. One of them was a young man about twenty-one years of age. He had an idea that men were hung up by their wrists for hours at a time. When I told him that the punishment never lasted but a few seconds he was not inclined to believe it. I sent for a pair of hand-cuffs, and he consented to let me hang him up for a few seconds. Just as soon as the strain began he cried out, and his toes had scarcely left the ground before he was imploring me to let him down. There was a faint red line around his wrists, and that was all."

As terrible as this punishment is it is nothing compared to the agonies suffered by a prisoner who is locked up in a dark cell. A young fellow was taken to Sing Sing about a year ago to serve a five years' sentence. He began his term of imprisonment by disobeying every order given him by the keepers. He was reasoned with and efforts were made to show him that he was hurting nobody as much as he was hurting himself. But he was both lazy and vicious, and he was strung up by the wrists. The punishment kept him straight for a few days; but it was found necessary to string him up again. The second punishment seemed to have no effect, and then he was placed in a dark cell. At the expiration of a few hours the door was opened, and the young man rushed out with a face as pale as death, and shaking in every limb. He behaved himself for a week, and then fell into his old ways again.

"I think I shall have to put you in the dark cell again," said Mr. Connaughton to him.

"Oh, don't do that," he pleaded. "Please string me up; that isn't half so frightful."

Thereafter the mere mention of the dark cell was so fraught with terrors that it was enough to bring him to terms and make him industrious and obedient.

"I was punished once by being placed in a dark cell for several hours," said an ex-convict. "The moment the wooden door was closed the darkness seemed to jump right at me. It was not the darkness of night, but a heavy, thick blackness that you could almost feel, and that seemed to settle upon you and crush you down. Slowly it became suffocating, and little sharp rays of light began to dance before my eyes; horrible forms, conjured up by the imagination, began growing out of the blackness, and I fancied I could hear demoniacal laughter. I threw myself down on the floor and tried to sleep. I lost consciousness for a time and thought that I had been there all day, and that it was then night. The blackness assumed a different shape, and seemed to form itself into waves, like the bosom of a troubled ocean. The billows rolled all about me and occasionally seemed to engulf me. I struggled out of them wildly, but again they came tumbling toward me and again covered me up, and then I felt as if I was being slowly suffocated. Little sparks and flashes of light sprang out of the blackness and shot out toward me, but all seemed to fall short. Then I thought I saw demons away off in the shadows, who were hurling the flashes at me intent upon murder. I danced around in a wild effort to escape them, and then, utterly exhausted, threw myself again on the floor, and again lost consciousness for a time. When I awoke another day seemed to have passed, and I imagined I was horribly hungry and thirsty. Long rows of choice food sailed slowly out of the gloom; I heard the gurgling of water, and then, mad and desperate, I rushed to the door, and beat upon it, and called wildly for help. The door was thrown open, and a blaze of light fell upon me that seemed to stun me for a moment. I fell upon my knees and was almost helpless for a time. I found that I had been locked up in the cell less than three hours, but it felt like three days to me, and you can bet that I was careful to avoid punishment in the future.—New Yok Sun.

Writing for the Papers.

A writer in the Chicago Inter-Ocean says: "There is one thing that has puzzled me a great deal," said a knight of the quill. "I can't understand why so many people regard the newspaper business as unlike every other when they come to dispose of contributions of any kind. If a man selling apples or potatoes comes to your door and you tell him that you don't want any he accepts the situation without any show of resentment, and endeavors to dispose of his wares elsewhere; but there are hundreds and thousands of young people writing poems, stories and sketches, who seem to believe that when they offer any contribution to a paper it must as a matter of courtesy and business be accepted. If it is rejected they regard the rejection as in some way a reflection on their ability and an insult to them personally. Therefore there is more friction in dealing with a newspaper than with any other business establishment, and the fault is not with the newspaper.

"The process is like this: A boy writes something out of the usual order; it is complimented by his neighbors and the postmaster, or the teacher, or the teacher tells him that it ought to be published. If the article is returned with a considerable letter of explanation, in nine cases out of 10 the boy feels worse than if the editor had knocked him down, and he never forgives him.

"Or it might happen that some bright girl, having her mind flooded with romance and her nature stimulated by the praise of her associates, dashes off what she conceives to be as good a story as any that Dickens ever wrote and sends it to the editor with the explanation that it is her first effort, and that it has been pronounced very fine by the very best judges, and that she needs the money very badly he will confer a favor by sending her what he considers the story worth by the next mail."

"That isn't the sort of a case that troubles me," said a grizzled veteran of the press. "There are not many men who rank with me as a filler of waste-baskets, but there comes to me occasionally a letter written with a trembling, shaky hand, directing attention, in language pathetic and incoherent, to the fact that the writer is propped up in bed, and is writing with the hope that what she writes may bring a little money to the support of her sorely-striken household; and that, while the sketch, or whatever it may be, is not as well written as it would be were the writer well, she hopes that the circumstances under which she writes will influence the editor in her behalf.

"Or there may come in the sprawling, irregular, straggling hand of an old man a letter dwelling on the fact that the writer has been an invalid from the date of the Mexican war, and that he is in possession of a fund of anecdote and information which he desires to use to relieve his children or grandchildren from the burden of his support. There may run through the letter an intimation, as painful as it is pitiful, that country and friends and family have all been a little ungrateful, and that in his extremity the old veteran turns to the paper that has been friendly to all soldiers, and hopes that the editor may in his kindness of heart pay him well for such contributions as he will send. Thereupon he lays out a programme in his old man's fancy that is to bring him in a handsome income and that will render him independent of ungrateful children and no longer a burden upon anybody. Before a letter like that—frank, earnest and pitiful—the best of us may hesitate."

Care For the Aged.

From the Youth's Companion.

Virgil's renowned hero, Æneas, received his familiar epithet of "pious" from his loving care of his old father, Anchises. In all times and climes a like care has ever been regarded as a prime demand upon filial piety. One point at which such care may be exercised is in guarding the health of our aged parents, and thus protracting their life and rendering it worth protracting. The generation now nearing its close had its birth and growth when this whole matter was little understood even by the medical profession.

All knew that it was a common thing for the old to be suddenly struck down with apoplexy, or hurried to their graves by an attack of pneumonia, or bronchitis due to an ordinary cold. Of such and kindred cases it was said that they died of old age.

Life, it was thought, had reached its natural limit; the body was worn out in every part and went to pieces, as a matter of course, all at once, like the deacon's "one-horse shay." Now, as a general thing, we might as well say that a child dies of infancy, when its mother does not suitably protect it. The fact is every age has its tendencies and special exposures.

In old age the arteries lose their elasticity and toughness, and readily give way, especially those of the brain under whatever quickens the action of the heart. The circulation, too, is feeble, and a slight chill is enough to drive the blood back on the internal organs, thus giving rise to various congestions. Indeed, a common cold is often much more dangerous to the aged than small-pox to an adult, or scarlet fever to a child.

The recuperative power, also, is so weakened in the aged as to make almost any ordinary ailment a serious thing. The secretions are greatly lessened, so that digestion, especially of meat, is much impaired, and the bowels tend to severe constipation, with its grave evils.

Children, and all on whom the aged depend, should not only understand, but be alive to all this. Says Prof. H. C. Wood, M. D., LL. D., in the Medical and Surgical Reporter:

"A large proportion of those who are said to die from old age, really die from the effects of exposure, and it must be remembered that the term exposure is relative. What in a young man may be nothing, may to an old man be a serious matter.

"One of the most perfect protections from cold is a buckskin jacket. Nothing else will compare with it. These patients must be guarded especially against exposure to wind—even more than against damp.

"High winds chill the surface, oppress respiration, and are exceedingly disastrous to the life of any person whose circulation is without power. Stimulating food should be withdrawn. Meat should be used but sparingly. Milk should be the chief article of diet."

LOG CABINS can hardly be considered handsome or elegant, but they were fit habitations for the rugged pioneers of America. Our ancestors were rugged specimens of noble manhood, complete in health, strength and endurance. Their wholesome remedies are reproduced to this later age, in Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla and Warner's "Tippecanoe."

Your Friend Committed Suicide.

You never suspected it, none of his friends dreamed of it, he did not know it himself, but it is exactly what he did nevertheless. Do you remember his sallow complexion? Do you recollect how he used to complain of headaches and constipation? I'm getting quite bilious," he said to you one day, "but I guess it'll pass off. I haven't done anything for it, because I don't believe in 'dosing.'" Soon after that you heard of his death. It was very sudden, and every-one was greatly surprised. If he had taken Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets he would be alive and well to-day. Don't follow his example. The "Pellets" are easy to take, mild in their action, and always sure.

We accidently overheard the following dialogue on the street yesterday.

Jones. Smith, why don't you stop that disgusting hawking and spitting?

Smith. How can I? You know I am a martyr to catarrh.

J. Do as I did. I had the disease in its worst form but I am well now.

S. What did you do for it?

J. I used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It cured me and it will cure you.

S. I've heard of it, and by Jove I'll try it.

J. Do so. You'll find it at all the drug stores in town.

Edwin Forrest's Secret.

The great tragedian, Forrest, had a secret which everybody ought to learn and profit by. Said he, "I owe all my success to the fact that everything I have undertaken I have done thoroughly. I never neglect trifles." That's the point—don't neglect trifles. Don't neglect that hacking cough, those night-sweats, that feeble and capricious appetite, and the other symptoms, trifling in themselves, but awful in their significance. They herald the approach of consumption. You are in danger, but you can be saved. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will restore you to health and vigor, as it has thousands of others. For all scrofulous diseases, and consumption is one of them, it is a sovereign remedy.

Minnesota Governorship.

After an Unprecedented Struggle, Covering Two Days and Nights, Mr. R. Merriam Receives the Republican Nomination.

It required over thirty columns of the Pioneer Press in which to publish the proceedings of the remarkable contest for the portion of gubernatorial candidate on the Minnesota state ticket. The first skirmish on Tuesday evening, when Mr. John L. Gibbs was agreed upon for temporary chairman, in order to avoid an unseemly fight upon the organization; all day of Wednesday and Wednesday night till near midnight were spent in quarreling over contested delegations and getting into shape for the decisive battle for the nomination. The candidates were Wm. R. Merriam, A. R. McGill, Albert Scheffer, and Charley Gilman, and numberless schemes were devised and experimented with by the friends and managers of each to secure advantage and to defeat opposition. There were six formal and informal ballots before a nomination was reached, and they are summarized as follows:

THE BALLOTS.

	Merriam.	McGill.	Scheffer.	Gilman
First informal	158	149	116	17
Second informal	161	145	116	17
First formal	169	138	106	28
Second formal	178	114	98	53
Third formal	212	24	96	110
Fourth formal	270		76	101

Until the last ballot Rice county cast eight votes for Clement. Braden received four votes twice during the balloting.

No sooner had the chairman finished "Merriam, 270," when the air was filled with flying tickets, waving hats and an indescribable din of shouts and cheers. Mr. Hooker of Hennepin county, after vainly trying to get the chairman's eye, moved to make the nomination of Merriam unanimous. He was followed by Craft of Hastings and Searle of Stearns. When the vote was put, D. Aberle, the Ramsey county kicker, was the only man to vote "no." Cries of "Merriam!" were then made, and Loren Fletcher mounted a chair and said:

There is no question that I have done everything in my power honorably to nominate McGill; but I want to say that I will do everything in my power to elect the nominee of this convention.

MR MERRIAM ACCEPTS.

Again when Merriman was brought before the convention there was wild cheering, and when it had subsided Mr. Merriam said:

Mr. Chairman and gentleman of the Convention: You have given me a high honor. It is an hour that any man might well appreciate, and especially so young a man. I feel that it is the highest compliment that can be paid to any man at any time. The history of the Republican party of this state has always been hand in hand with the best interests of the state. In the charge of that party you have given your educational fund, you have given the erection of your public buildings and other public improvements, and I ask any man here to say if that party has ever foiled to do the duty. Since the party was first formed in this state newer questions have come up than those which brought out the party, and they have always been dealt with by that party, to the best interests of the state. I am glad to say that I take this nomination with a pledge, and prepared to do all I can to assist the best interests of the party and the state. I do not bring with me the experience of the statesman, or do I bring the experience of the learned man. My experience has been gained in the counting room, and is executive. If you see fit to elect me to the exalted position to which you have nominated me I shall serve you loyally, faithfully and honestly. I believe that the people of the state want their taxes reduced, their public buildings taken care of, and I shall make it my personal business to give them my careful attention. Again I thank you for this mark of your esteem.

The rest of the tickets was then made up as follows:

For Governor..........William R. Merriam
For Lieutenant Governor..........A. E. Rice
For Secretary of State......Hans Mattson
For Treasurer..........Joseph Bobleter
For Attorney General......Moses E. Clapp
For Chief Justice..........James Gilfillan
For Assistant Justice..........L. W. Collins

THE PLATFORM.

The Republican party of the State of Minnesota in convention assembled announces the following declaration of principles:

The Republicans of Minnesota do cordially ratify the nomination of that eminent statesman and tried to soldier, Benjamin Harrison, for President, and of that able and Philanthropic citizen, Levi P. Morton, for vice president of the United States, and pledge them such a majority of the electors of this state as shall easily assure. Minnesota the place that she so gloriously won for herself in the campaign of 1884 as the banner Republican state of the Northwest.

It points with pride to its record in adopting in its platform, and honestly carrying into execution the most practicable and effectual restraint upon the liquor traffic which has yet been devised, to the large reduction in the number of saloons in towns and cities, and their extinction in country places and the smaller villages, the better observance of the law and the marked and general improvement in public morals which has followed the adoption of the high license principle, and pledged itself to its continued maintenance and enforcement, and that no backward steps shall be taken in the effort to secure the most effectual control of the liquor traffic.

It is uncompromisingly in favor of the American system of protection.

It adheres to the repeated declaration of state and national platforms, in favor of the modification, readjustment and reduction of the tariff, and reiterates the views of the Republican presidents, Garfield and Arthur, upon the same subject, as well as the recommendations of the commission appointed under the last Republican administration.

It declares that all measures of tariff adjustment should be framed and conceived in a cautious and conservative spirit, so as not to disturb and impair interests which have grown up under existing revenue laws, and, as far as possible, to relieve the people from unnecessary taxation upon articles which do not enter into competition with American industry. That in every such measure of revision regard should be had to such adjustments of the revenue among the various articles subject to taxation, as, while providing adequately for the support of the government, will afford sufficient protection to those industries which can be profitably pursued in this country, and which require protection against foreign competition, and, as far as practicable, place on the free list articles of prime necessity which enter into the ordinary consumption of the people.

It declares its belief that these measures can best be conducted under the auspices of a Republican administration in the future, as in the past.

It reiterates its former declarations in favor of an honest administration of civil service laws, and arraigns the Democratic party for the failure to perform its promises in that respect.

It points with pride to the pure and clean administration of Gov. A. R. McGill, to the measures for the protection of the laborer, the restraint upon corporate encroachments upon the rights of the people which have characterized the Republican administration of the government, both state and national, and which it pledges itself to continue to maintain.

It declares its continued confidence in the justice and wisdom of the interstate law and demands its enforcement.

It denounces the attempt of the Democratic party to coerce the senate of the United States into the ratification of the so-called "fisheries treaty" by the covert threat of injury to the growth and prosperity of the Northwest through the destruction of certain competing railways.

It condemns the cowardly and vacillating policy of that party in failing to protect a great American industry from the encroachment of a rival power, and its selfish and dishonest course in refusing and delaying the admission of the Territory of Dakota in order to maintain and perpetuate Democratic control of its government.

That a due gratitude to the brave defenders of the nation demands at all times a liberal recognition of the Union soldiers and sailors of the late war in the erection and equipment of soldiers' homes and liberal provision for pensions.

The Republican party of Minnesota, mindful of its obligations and responsibilities to the people of the state, hereby declares its hostility to trusts so called, and to all monopolistic combinations of every form which seek to limit the production or the price, or in any way control the commodities of the country, as contrary to the common law, subversive of good morals and injurious to the public, and pledges the Republican party of this state to protect as far as possible the producer and consumer by legal means from the evil effects resulting from the practices herein referred to.

It indorses and approves the reform of the voting system called the Australian system, and recommends it to the favorable consideration of the legislature.

In view of the recent revelations showing the abuses to which the immigration and naturalization laws have been subject, we demand of the national congress a thorough revision of those laws; and, in the meantime, a more efficient execution by the national administration of such laws as we have, especially that prohibiting the importation of contract labor, to the end that the country be better protected from the pauper and criminal classes of the old world, whose coming throws upon our working people an unjust and grinding competition.

That while the Democrats of the South have, by reason of the disfranchisement of the blacks, under the constitution of the United States, the benefit of an unjust and unequal representation, we are assured by appeals from various Southern states that in many places a free vote and a fair count is there unknown, and that outrages and oppression, both physical and political, are common, and while condemning all such acts as subversive of free government and an outrage upon the rights of these unoffending citizens, we extend to them in common with all others of the oppressed, wheresoever they may be, a cordial welcome to the free soil, free air and freedom from outrage, which are the common property of all citizens of our state.

We heartily sympathize with the Irish people in their struggle for home rule, and with those brave leaders whose disinterested patriotism has brought upon them suffering in person and estate, and shall hail the day as the dawn of liberty in Ireland, when the scheme of the grand old British statesmen for governing Ireland, whose name is a household word wherever liberty is known, shall become a part of the law of the British empire.

HOW IT WAS RECEIVED.

While Mr. Cole was reading the platform the delegates listened attentively and frequently interrupted by applause. The names of Harrison and Morton were received with great shouting, and the high license plank was greeted with shouts from all but the Scheffer faction, though Mr. Scheffer himself applauded.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Monday, Sept. 3.

Senate.—In the Senate today the bill for the admission of Washington Territory was then taken up, but was laid aside on receipt of the bill which passed the House this morning for the absolute exclusion of the Chinese. Mr. Stewart asked that the bill be taken up for immediate action. Agreed to. A vigorous discussion followed.

Mr. Mitchell agreed that congress had as much power to repeal a treaty as it had to repeal a law. The supreme court had so held over and over again.

The debate was continued at great length and the bill went over without action.

All animated political discussion between Senators Vest and Plumb was one of the events in the Senate today. Mr. Vest offered a resolution instructing the select committee on civil service reform to inquire whether an employe of the Senate had engaged in preparing campaign partisan literature; and whether the publication of the matter so prepared has been made by this employe with his official character printed thereon; and what legislation is necessary to prevent and punish such conduct. Alluding to the number of Republicans still in office, Senator Vest said: "If Grover Cleveland is defeated it will be through the efforts of the Republicans whom he has retained in office."

A long wrangle ensued, Mr. Plumb ending it by declaring that the Democracy had treated public office not as a public trust but as a private snap.

House.—Mr. Scott, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, introduced the bill, supplementing the act approved May 6, 1882, to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to the Chinese:, and the bill at once went through without opposition.

A bill was introduced in the house by Mr. Newton of Louisiana to punish persons connected with trusts. It proposes to subject such persons to a fine ranging from $1,000 to $20,000, or imprisonment from one to five years.

Tuesday Sept. 4.

Senate—Mr. Cullom offered a resolution (which was adopted) calling on the secretary of war for information as to the channel ordinarily used for navigation of the Detroit river and St. Clair flats—whether its waters for navigation of the Detroit river and St. Clair flats— whether its waters are within the jurisdiction of the United States or Canada, etc.

Mr. Cullom also introduced a bill to declare trusts unlawful and had it referred to the committee on finance.

The resolution offered yesterday by Mr. Stewart as to the book published by the assistant librarian of the senate came up and Mr. Plumb Proceeded to discuss it.

House.—Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, offered a resolution directing the special committee investigating the construction of the new library building to inquire whether any member of the house has, by himself, or in combination with others, sought, by persuasion, intimidation, or corrupt or improper means, to influence J. L. Smithmeyer, the architect in the selection, acceptance or approval of inferior of improper material to be used in the construction of the building.

In response to a question by Mr. Blount, of Georgia, Mr. Kelley stated that he made the proposition to the house on information which he had received in the early part of the session, and which had been corroborated by increasing testimony and additional facts. He would name the member when he appeared before the committee.

It was finally decided that a new committee should be appointed, it being intimated that the member referred to by Mr. Kelly was a member of the present committee.

The house then proceeded, as the special order, to the consideration of the retaliation bill.

Wednesday, Sept. 5.

Senate.—Mr. Stewart offered a resolution for the appointment of a select committee to investigate various matters connected with the execution of the laws as to public lands and timber depredations and moved its reference to the committee on contingent expenses. After a question by Mr. Vest as to the propriety of reference the resolution was referred.

Mr. Allison presented the conference report on the army appropriation bill, showing a concurrence in all amendments except those in reference to fortifications.

Mr. Oates, of Alabama, created applause by the introduction of a concurrent resolution providing for the final adjournment of congress on the 20th inst. It was referred to the committee on ways and means.

Mr. Forney, of Alabama, from the committee on appropriations, reported a bill appropriating $200,000 to suppres infection in the interstate commerce of the United States.

The house further considered the retaliation bill, but nothing very interesting was said. The house passed the bill to limit the jurisdiction of United States district and circuit courts, and the bill providing for the exchange of worn or mutilated subsidiary coin at coinage value for new and unworn coin.

House.—Mr. Stahlnecker, of New York, rising to a question of privilege, sent to the clerk's desk and had read an article in a newspaper intimating that he was the member at whom the resolution of inquiry adopted yesterday on motion of Mr Kelley, of Pennsylvania, was aimed. He demanded from the house a speedy and searching investigation.

Thursday, Sept. 6.

Senate.—Among the bills reported from committees placed on the calendar were the following:

The senate bill appropriating $750,000 for the postoffice building in St. Paul, Minn.

The tariff bill granting to the Oregon Navigation company certain tracts of land on the Umatilla reservation for station purposes.

The house bill to authorize the Leavenworth & Rio Grande Railway company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian territory.

The house bill to grant the right of way through the Indian territory to the St. Louis & San Francisco Railway company.

Mr. Hoar offered a resolution calling the attention of the president, respectively, to the resolution of the senate of the 28th of August, requesting him to communicate to the senate copies of all communications addressed by his direction to the government of Great Britain, remonstrating against certain unfair treatment of American citizens and requesting him to furnish such information as soon as possible in order that it may be considered in acting on pending legislation. The resolution was laid over.

House.—Mr. Brum and Mr. Scott occupied the attention of the house for a considerable time by indulging in a discussion of the truth of the charge made some time ago by Mr. Brum that Mr Scott had employed Pinkerton detectives in the coal regions of Pennsylvania. When these gentlemen had concluded their discussion, the consideration of the retaliation bill was resumed.

Friday, Sept. 7.

Senate.—The Chinese exclusion bill was passed in the Senate to-day, and then almost immediately hung up by a motion to reconsider its passage, which motion, for lack of a quorum voting, was not decided up to the time of adjournment. The bill was taken up a few moments after the senate convened.

A message was received from the president inclosing as the only official information at hand relating to the rejection of the chinese treaty by the Chinese government copies of two telegrams from Minister Denby at Pekin. The first dated Sept. 5, read as follows: "Believe treaty has been rejected. Have demanded from foreign office positive information some days since. No information has yet been received;" and the second dispatch, dated Sept. 6, read: "Treaty postponed for further deliberation."

House.—Most of the time of the House was devoted to a discussion of the retaliation bill. The vote will be taken to-morrow at 4 p. m. The retaliation bill was taken up a few moments after the House met. Mr. Nutting, of New York, criticised the President for not using the power given him 18 months ago, and stopping Canadian discrimination against American vessels passing through Canadian canals.

Mr. Nelson of Minnesota continued the debate. The closest attention was given the speaker by both sides of the House, for no one knew exactly how he stood on the question. It had been intimated that he was with the President. But when he said, "I take issue with the President and contend that he already has full power to act in the premises," many Democrats who had gathered around him went back to their side of the hall.

The City of Quito.

If it were not for the climate, Quito would be in the midst of a perpetual pestilence; but notwithstanding the prevailing filthiness, there is very little sickness, and pulmonary diseases are unknown. Mountain fever, produced by cold and torpid liver, is the commonest type of disease. The population of the city, however, is gradually decreasing, and is said to be now about sixty thousand. There were five hundred thousand people at Quito when the Spaniards came, and a hundred years ago the population was reckoned at double what it now is. Half the houses in the town are empty, and to see a new family moving in would be a sensation. Most of the finest residences are locked and barred, and have remained so for years. The owners are usually political exiles, who are living elsewhere, and can neither sell nor rent their property. Political revolutions are so common, and the results are always so disastrous to the unsuccessful, that there is a constant stream of fugitives leaving the state.

The Persistent Office Seeker.

The knowing ones at Washington, who are laughing at a negro who invested $9.40 in a loadstone which he rubbed on the steps of the Government Printing Office in the hope that he would get an office paying him $70 per month are easily amused. Much more diverting stories might be told of white men in this and other large cities who have expended a hundred times the sum the Washington office seeker lost, with as little prospect of getting the office aspired to. One instance is related where a patriot expended nearly $2,000, and wore out a buckboard canvassing the country. When he realized that his chances of getting the office sought were about as good as for bottling last year's snow a sympathizing friend suggested another place—a crumb of comfort. "What!" roared the disappointed office seeker, "ride 2,000 miles and pay $2,000 for a $600 office. It wouldn't pay the whiskey bill."

New Occupations for Women.

From the Chicago Herald.

A young, rather good-looking and tastefully dressed lady stepped into a large real-estate office down town, transacted some business about certain loans on property in a crisp, to-the-point and yet genteel manner, and then left again noiselessly. "It is rather surprising," said one of the members of the firm, "how many women and girls are now doing well in Chicago in certain lines of business entirely monopolized by men up to within a couple of years ago. I know, for instance, eight lady insurance canvassers, all doing well. There is a lady now at the head of a large insurance concern. There are a number of women, girls, widows or grass-widows making a good living by soliciting business for big loan firms in town. The young lady who left us, for instance, is earning between $1,200 and $1,500 a year that way, all on commission, of course. Women seem to be specially adopted for that kind of work."

Grant, Sherman, Sheridan.

What a wonderful trio they were—the three generals whose names are as inseparably associated in our thoughts as they will be for all time to come on the page of history! Unlike in many ways, each of a distinct, strongly marked individuality, how they yet supplemented one another, and how loyal they were in their friendship for one another! It is pleasant now to think of that—that our great soldiers were so free from selfish jealousy and rejoiced so heartily in one another's successes and rewards. There is only one of them left now, the oldest of the three. The day when Sherman follows Grant and Sherdian—may it be still far distant, and may the intervening years be as full of peace and happiness as of honor!—will mark the close of a splendid and heroic chapter of the nation's story.—Hartford Courant.

The American Tough.

The tough is a product peculiar to American city life. In other countries, of course, you will find the rough and the cad, and the brutal coster, but it is only in an American city that you will find the tough. In other lands the man who comes nearest to the tough is but a subject, and a very poor one at that, and he is constantly more or less in dread of a superior governing power. In America the tough is a citizen, or at least claims to be one, and he feels not only the equal of everybody else, and he has a profund scorn and contempt for all processes of law. The tough is a terror, and there is no reason why he should 'scape whipping. Arrest or imprisonment he fears not; but a good dose of the cat-o'-nine-tails might bring him to reflect on the error of his ways.

Wales as an Epicure.

Many anecdotes are current of the Prince of Wales' recent visit to Cambridge university. It is said that the vice chancellor, who is also master of St. John's, sent for the college cook a few days before the great function was to come off, and told him to prepare the best menu his genius would enable him to draw up. The cook sent in a card with eighteen courses, which was sent to the prince's secretary with the request that he would show the prince. The story runs that the menu was sent back with the remark that it was all very well so far as it went, but that it would be all the better if two special dishes, the recipes, of which were inclosed, were added to it.—The Argonaut.

THE OLD STORY.

You may call it flirtation, or what not,
But I don't see that I was to blame.
How could I know that you loved me,
When you never once mentioned the same?
I've walked in the starlight with many,
And have risked my life on the bay,
Yet among them I've never found any
But had something decided to say.

You thought that your silence had told me?
The silence that's golden we've heard;
But the girl of to-day prefers silver.
Coined into words sweet and absurd;
There are lovers whom there's no mistaking,
Whose language leaves no one in doubt;
There are others who leave one's heart aching
For a word there's no living without.

But since the sweet year has grown older,
And you've failed as a special pleader,
Shall I be left out in the cold, sir,
Because I was not a mind reader?
You blame, I think, without reason;
If you really had something to say,
What matters the time or the season?
Why can't we be happy—to-day?

We were old friends, Jackson and I but when we left college and began the grim struggle for pence and praise our paths diverged and we heard little of each other for many years. Since we last met Jackson has struggled into a tolerable practice as a doctor, while I had struggled into no practice at all as a barrister.

One morning I received a note from Jackson asking me to run down and spend 24 hours with him, and so we old pals met after long separation.

Jackson labored in a little country town, some two hours' journey down the Southwestern line. He lived in a house as eccentric, and as honest, and as sturdy as he was himself. When I saw the house for the first time I was possessed with an idea of a builder suddenly gone out of his mind. This well meaning man had selected as the scene of his labors a beautiful grove of pine trees. He chose a clear space and there built a house, not in the usual way; but according to the dictates of a picturesquely contorted intellect. He built up huge blocks of moss-grown stone, with massive beams of timber and red brick. He launched out into insane wings and abutments, he soared into the heavens on tall, skeletonic stacks of chimneys, he groveled on the ground in terraces and paved courts, and finished up the whole with a roof of ancient red tiles. Altogether it was the most rambling, queer, comfortable house I had ever looked upon.

In this great dwelling, large enough for a garrison, Jackson lived a romantic and solitary life, attended only by a woman from the village who "did" for him during the day, and when night fell retired to her own shed in the village.

When Jackson took the house first or a mere song he had a colossal ambition of furnishing it throughout. But his initial failure was so signal that he gave up further attempt in despair and never got beyond the furniture of three rooms—his own bedroom, the dining-room and his surgery. This he told me as we lingered over the dinner table.

Need I say, we sat laughing, telling stories, recalling old adventures, and past scenes? Need I say it was prolonged till supper time, and then, when "the woman" had retired to her own wigwam, far into the night?

After dinner, as the early winter shades were gathering, we prowled over the house. Jackson did enthusiastic cicerone with a lamp in his hand and a black brier-root in his mouth, while I puffed the ambitious captain-general and sustained the part of intelligent sightseer.

He even led me into the apartment in which he was to sleep, while I had his bedroom. It was a narrow, crooked place, devoid of everything except dust and a camp bedstead with the usual toilet paraphernalia, and a pile of packing crates skillfully bestowed in a chasm in the wall, which had sprung from the unpremeditated method of building. But there was a superb painting on the wall, out of all proportion to the room, but superb all the same. It was a life-size portrait of a beautiful woman. The likeness was in this room when Jackson took possession of the house, and although its tenure had been threatened during the day of furnishing, it had outlived the storm, and had now made good its footing as a permanency.

I am not superstitious, at least I was not when I first saw that picture, but had I guessed the influence that it was to work on me before seven hours were passed I would have torn the coarse, putrid, paintbedaubed canvas to shreds; I would have hacked its faded frame and worm-eaten stretcher into matchwood.

We stood in the gloomy, shadowy room, looking at the imploring face for some time in silence. Then I began laughing, and said what came uppermost in my mind.

"It seems rather a strange thing to have to take that picture with the house—a valuable work of art, too. It appears to be the kind of painting that traditions are made of. Is there no story attached to it?"

"Well, no," said Jackson, as he laid the heavy bronze lamp upon the floor, "none that I know of, except those that I myself have weaved. The truth about it, as far as I can make out, is that a kind of foreigneering lunatic, who lived in the house a long time ago, imported the picture. This room was his private and particular den; he smoked here; he got drunk here, and now and then stabbed his friends here, and studied, and made bad pictures, and pursued alchemistic research here, and possibly in the fullness of time, died here; at any rate he achieved that feat in one of his rooms, and his furniture was packed up and carted off to Italy. They would have taken the picture, too, only monsieur effectually prevented it. Do you know, the thing is actually a part of the house? It is built into the masonry!"

And, with the difference to personal discomfort characteristic of the historian producing positive testimony, Jackson overwhelmed himself in a shower of dust as he drew aside the heavy drapery that surrounded the picture and revealed a massive sheet of wrought steel, which came out of the wall and gripped the frame in an immovable grasp.

"I can tell you," he continued, as he brushed some of the dust off his shoulder, "I can tell you I don't like the picture. Sometimes I feel positively afraid of it. Yet this night will I have to spend with those two inquiring, hateful eyes watching me through the darkness. However, to oblige a friend, you know! In the meantime, let us go down stairs and have supper."

* * * * * * * *

At about 2 o'clock in the morning we made a move toward bed. We had arranged that I was to have Jackson's room and Jackson was to sleep in the unfurnished room as before mentioned. Jackson turned away whistling cheerily to himself.

But I was not going to bed yet. I had a great deal to do first. I had to wheel a soft, graceful sofa in front of the fire and surround it by a wide-spreading screen, so that I had every particle of warmth and light to myself. Then I had to open a portmanteau and take therefrom an old and well-worn shooting jacket and some papers which had to be arranged before I slept. Then I threw myself on the lounge and prepared for a good, solid hour's work,

Thus far, and no farther, had I got with my arrangements, when I heard a door in the passage banged with hideous uproar, and a sickly thrill at my heart told me something awful was about to happen. Some one came along the passage with the uncertained shuffling step of a drunken man, and my door was shaken as if by some one trying to find the handle, and then Jackson burst into the room. He advanced into the light of the shaded lamp, but so changed that at the first glance I did not recognize him. The face that but a few minutes ago was flushed and smiling was now rigid and set; the complexion wore a gastly blue tinge, and every particle of color had died on his cheeks. His eyes were dilated, and his short curly hair was erect. He stood staring at me with one hand raised and his mouth open, and gasping as though struggling to speak. To be shut in a lonely house at dead waste and middle of the night with such a figure would be sufficient to try a strong man's nerves, but I (strange to say) was perfectly self-possessed.

I held in my hand a wretched, weather beaten old brief, which had been fingered by generations of lawyers, a case that had been tried at various prehistoric courts, and confirmed and rescinded by judges known to history. Then it was replaced in its original tin box to wait for the period when I, gaily bedight of wig and gown, should go forth to do battle on behalf of the promising young heir who had died of old age before. I was half finished at Oxford. However, this bit of annotated parchment was a stout link, which was sufficient to bind me to the practical commonplaces of life, just at first.

"What on earth's the matter with you?" I asked, laughing. "Have you swallowed the bedroom poker?"

Jackson did not notice my mockery, but remained gasping. Power of speech returned after awhile, and I managed to make out through his gasps and sobs a low murmur: "Oh, God, I've seen it—I've seen her—the picture in my room. The light went out, I locked the door, she's there now!"

I confess I was really frightened but my pride would not allow me to show it. I assumed a reckless, swaggering air, which I solemnly believe was the only thing that prevented us both going mad with terror that terrible night.

"Oh, there is a lady in the case," I said, standing and leading my friend to the fire. "Has the portrait jumped out of its frame and begun walking about to stretch its limbs?"

Jackson shuddered and nodded his head. I was trembling with mortal terror, but, poor fool that I was, I must needs play the part of a thorough going fire-eater, who feared neither man nor devil.

"I will go and interview her," I said: "I will point out to the young lady the impropriety of presuming on her privileges in the house of a bachelor—she ought to stop in her proper place."

I took the matches from the table, and asked Jackson if he would come with me. He clutched me by the coat and murmured: "For the love of heaven, don't go near that accursed room."

I shook him off roughly and said with rudeness, only pardonable by my fright: "Hang it, man, leave me alone. You'll make me as frightened as you are yourself if you go on with this foolery."

He threw himself into the chair and took hold of the lamp as much as to say he would not go himself, nor allow the only light in the house to depart from him.

"Very good," I said, with a poor assumption of gayety. "I go to lay this ghost for you, alone and armed with nothing more potent than a box of patent matches warranted to strike only on the box!" But my heart was in my mouth all the same.

The passage was pitch dark, but I felt my way along it until I came to Jackson's bedroom. Then I struck a light, paused until it was fairly alight, then unlocked the door and swung it wide open. A hot, putrid breath of air wafted past me as I entered, and when I got to the middle of the room my light went out.

A whirl of mortal terror seized me, and I almost shrieked for fear, but I braced myself and stood still for a moment, and out of bravado waved the glowing, charred wood in the air.

Within the red glare of the carbonized wood, within hand reach of my shoulder, framed in the surrounding darkness, was a pale, pale face; a pair of brilliant eyes looking straight into mine. I tell you the glint of those terrible eyes was more than mortal man could bear. With a cry of agony I turned and dashed out of the room and along the passage, conscious of nothing but a mad desire to be in the light again, and beside a human being.

Jackson was still sitting, pale and stricken. He looked at me when I entered and, with his tight-drawn, rigid lips formed the words, "You've seen it?"

"I've seen it," I shuddered, "and I will not remain in this accursed house one moment longer. It may follow us here, and then I shall go mad."

"You're right he said; "we must not stop here—let us go." He took my hand, and together we crept stealthily down the stairs and, only pausing to take out our hats and ulsters, let ourselves out of the front door.

It was a clear, frosty night, the moon shone down coldly and the clouds were scudding before the stars. The wind blew on our fevered frames, and we shivered.

The sudden transition from the overheated house, with its maddening terror, to the serene winter night made a strange impression upon me. I cannot describe the sensation. But I can feel it. We traversed the little garden walk in silence. When we got to the gate Jackson paused, and, turning round, spoke: "There is the window," he said, with a slight tremble in his voice; "there is the window of that horrible room; it looks harmless enough, yet I wonder, in the name of mercy, what devil's tricks are going forward at this moment."

Our walk had brought us to the left corner of the house, and the window was just about eight feet over our heads. As he spoke the window was illuminated by a strange bluish light. It lit up the room in a vague, hazy way. Nothing was invisible, yet nothing was perfectly distinct, and in the middle of the room there was a black, motionless outline of a woman. We stood in silence for perhaps five minutes, then the light gradually died away, and nothing was left but the dark framework of the window.

I motioned mutely to Jackson to come away, but he stood his ground firmly. I looked at him in the moonlight, and was surprised at the change that had come over him. He had entirely recovered his manhood. The color had returned to his cheek, and his face wore the old, easy-going, calm expression. He smiled upon me, and said quietly, "Dick, old boy, I've been a fool, a madman, a coward; but I'm all right now. I shall not run away from the old house. Not all the ghosts and pictures and dark rooms in the world would frighten me now. You can come with me if you like. I'm going back to probe the matter to the bottom!"

And I went with him. We probed the matter to the bottom, but we discovered very little. Armed with the lamp we re-entered the mysterious room, but all was undisturbed as on the first occasion when we visited it. The meloncholly-eyed lady looked down on us as sadly, and the walls seemed as blank, and the curtains and fixtures were as dusty as ever, but we found no explanation of the horrible figure we had seen.

We spent the night by the fire in armchairs, and next morning I returned to London.

Here my story ends. I don't expect any one to believe it. According to Mrs. Sidgwick and others, there are no such things and haunted rooms in real life. All the same Jackson never spent another night under that roof. The house has been left five times within five years, and the tenants have never remained in possession more than seven days at longest, and in one instance a man has been found dead in his bed in that room. He died from natural causes, of course. It would be absurd to say that sights and shadows had arisen before the suddenly-awakened man which froze the life out of him in one awful shuddering sigh of mortal terror.—Chicago Herald.

Kellar's New Trick.

Kellar's new trick, called "The Creamation," produced at the Boston Museum recently, is described as follows: The story is that in olden times a native Indian woman removed the vail from her face and revealed her features to a Christian. The penalty for this offense was death by fire, and the poor girl was burned alive. The Christian secured the services of an old sorcerer, who obtained the ashes, and invoking the powers of the dark arts, produced the girl again, alive, unharmed and happy.

As Kellar will produce the act the audience first sees the executioner dragging the girl to the stake. She pleads and screams for mercy, but there is none. The girl is pulled to a table about three feet square and about four feet high. This table, which is of iron, is surrounded by very coarse woven wire, and is the creamatory. The wire door is open, and the girl is forced to get upon the table and inside the inclosure.

Her hands are secured to a horizontal iron bar above her head. The audience can plainly see under and over this table, and through the woven wire. The executioner touches a lighted match to the young woman's gown and in an instant she is enveloped in flames. Remaining until the form settles into ashes, this very cheerful gentleman takes his departure. The necromancer then appears. Carefully securing all the ashes from the iron table, he places them in an iron chalice at the other side of the stage. He pours upon them some powerful liquid, when there instantly arises from the chalice a thick vapor or smoke. Presently there is discernible in these fumes the gauze of the Indian girl's dress; the vapors grow thinner, and gradually the girl's form becomes visible. Finally the fumes all clear away, and the young woman, restored to life again, steps smiling from the chalice.

Wendell Phillip's Grave.

No stone yet marks the place where Wendell Phillips is buried in the old cemetery at Milton, Mass. But a monument is soon to be erected by Mrs. Green his sister. It will be a rough, weather-stained granite bowlder five feet in height, and in the front center will be placed a sunken tablet bearing an inscriptoin. The stone will be placed in the rear of the lot and in view of the path.

Chauncey M. Depew is a great favorite with reporters on account of the grace with which he lends himself to the interviewing process. It seems that the transatlantic cable companies are at last nearing a settlement of the rate war in cable tolls which has existed for several years, and that only the settlement of details and the notification of contintental delay the formal announcement of an advance in rates. There is litle question that at the rate of twelve cents per word which has prevailed under these competitive conditions is unrenumerative to the companies, but it is doubtful if, after the experience of the public with the low rates an advance to the whole basis of fifty cents would not occasion considerable dissatisfaction.

"Yes," said another, "but above it is a painted hand. Can you see it?" Gen. Wallace adjusted his eye-glasses and said: "Oh, I can see that, and I can see, very plainly, a mosquito about to take a light lunch on it." Amid roars of laughter the general was, on the spot, made president of the new club.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

News From all Parts of the World in a Condensed Form

Washington Brieflets.

The acting secretary of war sent to congress a communication from Col. G. L. Andrews, commanding at Fort Missoula, Mont., relative to the status of the title to the land embraced within the present limits of the military reservation at that post. From correspondence accompanying the communication it seems that certain of the lands embraced in the reservation were wrongly appropriated for that purpose, part of the land being reserved school lands, and other sections are those which should have been withdrawn as being within forty miles of the route of the Northern Pacific railroad. This land has been considered as being a part of the reservation, but the civil authorities have lately claimed jurisdiction over it.

Sinful Siftings.

James Kent and Geo. McCormack, each about 25 years old, while joking a bartender in New York, made a feint of assaulting him. The bartender took a monster revolver from the shelf and said laughingly that he was prepared. McCormack struck the revolver with his cane. It went off killing Kent instantly.

George Johns, living on Worthington creek, seven miles from Parkersburg, W. Va., was shot and instantly killed by Sam Hare, of the same place. John Willis was fatally wounded at the same time by Hare. The parties are all young men and were on their way home from church. An old feud which has existed for a good while was stirred up by a discussion of politics, and 10 or 12 shots were fired.

Information has been received at Philadelphia of the murder near Rock Springs, Wyo., of S. Morris Waln, and Charles Livingston Strong, of New York. Both were wealthy young men and fast friends. The bodies were found by a party of hunters on the plains within 10 miles of Rock Springs, about five days ago. The bodies were stripped of money and valuables of every kind, and the impression prevailed that they were murdered while asleep.

Manly M. Walker, a farmer living near Parena, Mich., was arrested, having in his possession several letter blocks, which he mailed to postmasters throughout the state, demanding money to carry on the Democratic campaign. Two letters, registered, containing money, are in the possession of Postmaster Bennett. Walker says he was hired to issue the circulars and receive the mail by a man in Washington, who claimed to be in the postal service.

A most distressing tragedy was discovered at Delhi, a few miles down the river from Cincinnati. It was discovered by Mr. Steinle, of Delhi, that his wife and two children, who had been missing, had been drowned, and the shock was the more intense because it is believed that the mother, in a fit of insanity, had dragged the children into the river with her. The children were a girl and a boy, 9 and 10 years old. The three bodies were recovered and identified. Mrs. Steinle had been demented, but no one feared insanity.

A horrible affair is reported from the neighborhood of Guide Rock, a small town just over the Nebraska line from Kansa, John Baker, while feeding a thrashing machine on the farm of a man named Weeks, was accidentally cut on the hand by the band cutter, a boy. In a rage he grasped the boy and deliberately fed him into the machine, feet first. The boy's screams attracted the attention of the other hands, but before they could interfere the boy's body had half disappeared in the machine. The enraged men seized Baker and hung him to the straw carrier.

Sam Scanlan called at the house of his brother-in-law in Lousville, Ky., where his wife was staying. As he opened the door he said to his wife: "I want you." As he uttered these words he drew a revolver from his pocket, and, before she was able to give any response, he fired; the ball entering her stomach. Before she could turn to make her escape he shot twice more. One of the bullets entered her back, going through the body, the other through her left arm. He then placed the pistol in his mouth and fired, the bullet coming out above the left ear. Both are mortally wounded.

J. S. Greene, alias Wessler, alias Stewart, will soon be in custody charged with bigamy. He is the man who was ejected from the Grand Pacific hotel at Chicago, and who, it is said, has five wives. Mrs. Margaret Gilbert, who married him August 29 in St. Cloud, Minn., accompanied by a son of one of his wives, who was formerly Mrs. E. G. Brittin, went before Justice Scully and got out a warrant for the arrest of her husband on a charge of bigamy. Officer Tyrell arrested Rev. Greene, at the residence of his sister-in-law, and he was locked up at the Desplaine street police station.

The people of Winona, Minn., were shocked recently at the report that Ben. V. Simpson, city engineer and water commissioner, had committed suicide by drowning. For some time Mr. Simpson has been despondent over imaginary business troubles. He accosted a citizen and asked him to drive him to the eastern part of the city, where the Southwestern railway graders are at work. On the way he met an acquaintance, to whom he gave his watch and keys, asking that they be given to his father, as they belonged to him. Arriving at the river Mr. Simpson scribbled a few lines in his note book saying that his partner had do connection with the troubles which had made him despondent, then ran and leaped over the high bank. Finding the water shallow he waded out to where it was deeper, and was drowned.

A special from Paladora, in the public land strip on the border of Kansas, says that the farmer and herdsmen of that section who had lost many horses and cattle recently suspected a band of campers who claimed to be catching wild horses, and, finding evidence of guilt, forty armed vigilantes surrounded the camp and sent in a committee of six men to demand the surrender of the thieves. The reply of the desperadoes was a volley which wounded one man and two horses. This enraged the vigilantes and firing was at once begun and the outlaws shot down at mercy. They fought desperately and no quarter was asked or given. In twelve minutes the firing ceased and seventeen outlaws were found to to be killed. The vigilantes had three men killed and nine wounded. Two horses were also killed and nine wounded. Sixteen stolen horses were recovered. Not one outlaw escaped alive.

Accidents and Casualties.

As a gang of men were at work on the new highway at Monroe Vermont, an abutment fell, and three men were killed. Several others were wounded. The killed are Henry Bedell, William McKay and William Vane.

Patrick Haley, a son of Dennis Haley of Troy township, aged about seventeen years, went duck hunting near Bird Island Minn. In some way his gun was accidentally discharged and shot the top of his head off, killing him instantly.

Martin Lucas, a farmer 45 years old, was killed, near Delano, Minn., by his horses running away. They were attached to a steam thresher water tank and in some way the tank was thrown upon him, causing death. The deceased leaves a wife and several small children.

The steamer City of Rio de Janeiro, from Hong Kong and Yokohama, brings news that at Tokushing, a town of Awa province, a storm occurred on the night of the 4th, and that in Mayosagori inundation was caused, by which 180 houses were destroyed and 46 persons drowned.

A fire destroyed the greater part of Cattaraugus, N. Y. Thirteen buildings are in ruins, leaving but one store, one hotel and a few dwellings standing. No one was injured. The loss is heavy, but not yet estimated. The water supply and fire apparatus of the village were totaly inadequate. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Information was received at La Crosse from the head of Pine Creek valley, Minnesota, that Martin Vose, a well-known farmer, was found dead in the road. He had been to La Crosse with a load of produce, and the supposition is that he was sitting on the front of the wagon in an intoxicated condition, when, he fell off and the horses kicked him to death. The condition of the body favors this supposition.

About daybreak one morning when Jim Reilly got back to his stable on East Sixty-third street, New York, he went, as usual to the little locker and drew forth the black bottle. Then he took a swig. Then he fell to the floor and yelled for the police. The bottle by some horrible blunder had been filled with carbolic acid. Jim is at Bellevue hospital and will probably die. He says he didn't know it was loaded.

A fire was discovered in the barn of Michael Davitt, of Creen Isle, Minn., and an alarm was given but too late to save the building. When the fire was distinguished the remains of a human being were discovered in the ruins, but so badly charred as to be beyond recognition. Upon investigation it was found to be a body of Peter Kane, a farmer of Green Isle township, and a batchelor, who had crept into the barn to sleep for the night. He occasionally came to town for a spree, but when last seen he was not considered to be intoxicated.

The boiler of Goulette & Letson's threshing outfit exploded near the Manitoba depot at Ellendale, Dak. A crew of 10 or 12 men were engaged near by, and of this number eight were either killed outright or badly injured. J. Goulette, one of the owners, was steering and was blown six rods. He was badly scalded and bruised, but not fatally hurt. An old man, named McLean, was instantly killed. Four young men, named McKinzie, Johnston, Memory and Griffin, sons of prominent citizens, are terribly wounded and cannot recover. The other two who were injured will undoubtedly recover. The explosion scattered fire in all directions and in a few minutes the prairie grass was blazing around the victims of the disaster, some of whom would have perished in the flames but for the arrival of people from the neighborhood who had heard the noise.

News about People.

Mrs. Langtry has sailed for Europe. She said before starting: "I am going partly to get a new play if I can and some new dresses, and partly on account of anxiety about Mr. Gebhardt. He was completely broken down by the loss of his horses. He was so despondent that his friends were much worried about him."

Dr. Gray of Palatka, Fla., the surgeon for one of the Florida railroads, called at the health office in Chicago to get his baggage out of fumigator's hand's. He said that yellow fever would reach St. Augustine without doubt in a few days, and in his opinion it would spread throughout the entire South. He has no hopes of a cessation of the plague until frost comes in November.

Robert Garrett is reported to have considerably improved since his removal to Ringwood, on the borders of Greenwood Lake, New Jersey. He is not nearly so nervous as he was, and at times is able to converse quite rationally. He is taken out driving almost every day. No one is permitted near him except his immediate relatives and the nurses and physicians.

Lester Wallack, who was for so many years the chief of American managers, and the most finished of comedians, is dying. While he was sitting in the library of his summer house at Stamford, Conn, he was suddenly taken with a stroke of apoplexy and fell from his chair to the floor unconscious. Several of Stamfords' best physicians were summond. At the consultation it was decided that Mr. Wallack was in a dangerously critical condition.

Nuggets of Foreign News.

Further reports from Khartoum are that the mahdi has sent three expeditions against the white men in the Bahr-el-Gazel province, and that all of them had been repulsed.

While Bishop du Rousseau was addressing 5,000 pilgrims in a church at Jumet in Belgium, a platform collapsed. Three persons were killed and dozens were injured, including several priests.

The Pall Mall Gazette of London denounces the standard for its violent utterances on the fisheries question, and charges that paper with outraging that good feeling which ought to exist between Great Britain and the United States.

It is rumored that shots have been exchanged between the mounted police and Indians at Onion Lake, N. W. T. The Northern Indians are evidently trying to work up an alliance with the Indians of the South. What the result may be is hard to say. While many of the Indians are doing well and trying to provide for the future, a large number would rather take part in another rebellion.

News in General.

James P. Bennett, retail coffee and tea dealer of New York, filed a general assignment to Joseph F. Becker. Preferences are given twenty creditors, the aggregate being $21,000. The house of J. P. Bennett is one of the best known in the trade and did an extensive wholesale business. The liabilities are not yet known, but are thought to be tween $150,000 and $200,000.

Justice Shields at Waterloo, Iowa, directed the return of the $1,500 worth of liquors seized from Pfeifer's drug store at Cedar Falls. The sheriff gave up the liquor. The justice based his decision upon the ruling of the supreme court allowing transportation of liquor into Iowa, which, he holds, carried with it the right to sell. If this decision should be upheld it will tend to destroy the effect of all state prohibitory laws.

There is trouble at the big Northern Pacific bridge across the Missouri at Bismarck because of a threatened land slide. The east approach and pier seem to be sliding away from their base. The reservoirs of the city water works, a few hundred feet from the bridge, are credited with leaks that have honey-combed the bluffs. A large gang of men are repairing the damage and trying to effectually stop the break.

The finanical statment of the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad for the month of July as compared with the corresponding period of 1888 is as follows: Gross earnings $1,863,500, a decrease of $304,300; expenses $1,510,193, an increase of $312,866; net earnings $353,307, a decrease of $617,166. For the seven months ending July 31, the gross earnings were $11,839,466, a decrease of $3,604,441; expenses $10,192,729, an increase of $1,714,274; net earnings $1,646,737, a decrease of $5,318,715.

The New York Commercial Advertiser says: It is asserted with great positiveness in railway and financial circles that at the coming annual election of officers of the Northern Pacific Railway company, to be held Sept. 20, President Robert Harris will be retired and Thomas F. Oakes, now vice president and general manager will be elected to succeed him. Mr. Oakes is said to represent a combination of all the interests in the company—the Villard interest, the Philadelphia stockholders, represented by Charles B. Wright, and the Oregon Trans continental.

The telegraph operators along the line of the Lake Shore & Michigan Southern railroad are in a state of great anxiety over a recent order from the company to sever their connection with the Order of Railway Telegraphers or vacate their positions. It is reported that the company has been making preparations to accomplish this for the past three months and have secured men to fill every vacancy likely to occur under the order. Members of the Order of Railway Telegraphers in Chicago when approached on the subject were very reticent, and would neither affirm nor deny the report.

The original package construction placed on the last Iowa liquor law is causing friends of the law a deal of grief. A Chicago importing company, which has an agency at Marshaltown, shipped a car load of beer and 1,200 quarts of whisky into that place to be sold on the day when Barnum's circus was to show there. It is estimated that at least 1,000 bottles were sold on circus day. In the latter part of the afternoon the agent voluntarily closed to avoid the charge of keeping a nuisance. The beer came in a car with hay, so that it was sold in the original package, without any tax.

The rumors as to the war between the Utes and Piutes have been confirmed by the receipt of a letter by Gov. Adams from Naturita, stating that the mail carriers had been informed by an Indian that the Utes had fought and beaten the Piutes. The letter adds that from the meagre information obtainable it is probable that one hundred Indians were killed. The band of Utes engaged in the battle was probably that led by Mancos Jim, who is a notorious desperado. They are a band of renegades who have never been attached to any agency, and have had their retreat in the wildest portion of the Lasal mountains.

Nearly 10,000 people were in line at Columbus, Ohio, at the opening of the centennial anniversary of the first settlement made in Northwest Territory. Great enthusiasm was manifested. Gov. Foraker reviewed the parade from a stand erected at the north end of the capitol. Director General Hurst made a short address in presenting the works of the centennial, and Gov. Foraker accepted them with a short address. There are twenty-eight special days set apart for special celebrations during the exposition, during which time President Cleveland, Gen. Harrison, Levi P. Morton, James G. Blaine and other distinguished gentlemen will be present. The centennial will continue for seven weeks.

The Sioux Treaty.

The Indians at Crow Creek Agency are still considering the treaty for opening the Sioux reservation. The outlook is very bright at this agency and very gratifying reports are also received from the lower Brule, where it is expected that still less difficulty will be encountered in securing signatures. Capt. Pratt is confident that if a comparatively clean sweep can be made at these two agencies no serious difficulty will be met in securing sufficient signatures to render the bill operative. The prospects of a successful termination of the labors of the commission are not by any means hopeless.

The fountain head of all the opposition encountered here lies with a certain few who have forged ahead of the great mass and now possess considerable stock, and they are fearful that they will not have the entire earth to graze over. They seem to lose sight of the fact that it takes but a fifth of the proposed reservation to locate every Indian entitled to land upon a 320-acre farm and that an abundance will be left. They are opposed from selfish purposes and seem to be willing to sacrifice schools and all the privileges of civilization and advancement to the great mass of Indians so long as they are allowed to occupy thousands of acres with their comparatively small herds of cattle. Still this bill would would not interfere with them in any respect, but they allege that any change would necessarily do so. Chief White Ghost at the last council said:

Now, my friends we want to do this work peaceably and quietly. That is good, that is right; I am glad of that. We want to put our attention closely to the work you have brought to us. We want to consider it quietly and peaceably. We were to come forward with the pen, but this is not the day; we want to put it off another day.

White Ghost was about to retire, when Judge White called his attention to a brief which the Indians had referred to him for consideration, which covered two requests which the Indians made, one being remunerated from the Northwestern road for about seventy-five acres of land which that road had taken possession of when extending to Pierre and the other calling for the transfer of a number of their people to this agency from Standing Rock. The judge stated that he had examined the papers carefully, and would call the attention of the government to both matters at once. White Ghost then said:

I thank you for that; that is good. The Great Father when he sees he has an important work to do, work that must be done quick and properly, he takes his soldiers by the hand and tells them to do it right. The great father will choose a man from among the multitude, a good and wise man, for a judge. A man who has no malice toward any one. That is the kind of the man, the great father generally chooses for a judge. And among you all there is a great spirit who watches over him who is chosen and it will be well with us. Why I am happy at this. I have suffered from this earthly work, this land work, and I hope that everything will be straightened out. I have wished for that; and it will make me happy. Grunts of approval were frequent during the speech of White Ghost. He was immediately followed by other prominent speakers, none of whom spoke in reality against the bill, but laid great stress upon the proposition set forth in White Ghost's speech.

The real sensation of the day came when Bowed Head, an Indian, sprang into the circle and delivered the following urgent appeal to the Indians:

You are my friends, and what I am going to say may hurt you. Nevertheless I am going to speak. My friends, I am on a different path from some of the rest of you. I am not one of the chiefs sitting there, but I am a member of the tribune, and I want to make a lead for the children. I am not a bit afraid of you, because you are men. The only man I am afraid of is the God in whom I believe. I want to save the young generation of this tribe. He that believes in the Great Spirit and sweats for him, I believe in him. I am going to say a few words to you Indians. I am not going to act for my own personal good. I have no children, but I have grandchildren. I do not wish to impose upon the rights of you chiefs who are sitting in front. No, my friends, I only look at it for myself individually. You know my allotment. There is large, fine timber on it, four stacks of wheat, and I have a self-binder. I feel that I am at liberty to say what I want to. If anybody is a friend of the great father I thought you chief's were his friends. Now, you chief's have spoken of our forefathers and their graves upon the hill, and then I thought to myself like this: When our forefathers died what had they accomplished for us? What did they do for us? I will tell you what works they left behind them. An old campfire, where even now the grass does not grow and old buffalo lanes that we can see on the prairies. That is all that is left of their work. We can see the old stones that they worshipped still piled up. Young men, do you wish your children to go in this way? You chiefs, my brothers, my cousins, my relatives, I pray you to have mercy on the young people who are beginning life and have no property to start with. I do not say these words because I seek to gain honor for myself personally. I do not say them because I expect my great father to remember me hereafter for it. Come forward, you chiefs, and set us an example. ["How."] We are waiting for you because you are chiefs ["how"], but if you do not come forward; we will go forward regardless of you. ["How."] White Ghost, you are poor in health and death is waiting for you every day. But I have something deeper than that to say to you. My friends, you may hate me, but I tell you what is good. I know it is good. You may not think it is good, but I know that it is good. I have finished.

FOLLOWS HIS EXAMPLE.

A young Indian named Williams then walked into the circle and placing his hat gently on the ground said that in the presence of older men he uncovered his head. He then made the most feeling and effective speech that has yet been delivered by the Indians, calling on the Indians if they loved their children and wished them to become educated, made happy and prosperous to come forward and sign the paper, and then walked bravely up to the table and regardless of threats placed his name upon the bill. At this action the entire mass of Indians sprang to their feet. For a moment a fearful silence prevailed. Then the friends of the bill, including two chiefs, gathered about the table, and those opposed, seeing the folly of interference, quietly withdrew from the council. It was an imposing sight when Williams walked coolly and quietly up to the table had the first name enrolled, and he deserves great credit for his nerve, having been frequently threatened with death if he carried out his determination. About sixty names were enrolled at the council and about thirty more later on at the rooms of the commissioners. The commissioners are gratified with the day's work, and are confident that nearly every Indian on the reserve will come up and sign during the coming week. No more councils will be held, and the work hereafter will be done at the rooms of the commissioners. The commissioners brought their work at this agency to a climax at the evening's council by calling for signatures, which resulted in nearly 100 being secured.

A Couple of Fatal Sunday Fires.

At West Superior Wis., at an early hour on Sunday morning, fire was discovered in the American house. Before the fire department arrived the entire building was enveloped in flames, and the screams of frantic men and women escaping from the burning building some in only their night clothes, lent horror to the scene. The fire was finally gotten under control and confined to the hotel. The cause was a lamp explosion in a room occupied by Walter Carter, Minch Storm and John Oleson, who had been out the night previous until pretty late and were considerably intoxicated. Their escape was almost miraculous. The girls who were employed in the hotel were so horrified by the awful death that confronted them that it was with difficulty that they were forced to leave the doomed hotel. The charred bodies of three men were found one of which is supposed to be that of Pat Claire, a Canadian. The others have not been identified. Several men appeared at windows in the second story, and blankets were held by citizens for them to jump into, but they fell back again and it is not known whether or not they escaped by other means.

At about the same hour a fire broke out in the toy warehouse of E. A. Prior & Co., at Baltimore. Before the firemen could get to work an explosion of fire works wrecked the building and caused the flames to spread with alarming rapidity to the drug house of J. H. Winkelman & Co., on the north and the hat house of M.S. Levy & Co., on the south. Scarcely had the fire entered the edifice occupied by the drug house when the inside of the building seemed to suddenly drop in. A terrific explosion followed and the immense building collapsed. The entire fire department had by this time reached the scene, and as the attention of the men was concentrated on the building under which their comrades were burned the flames had chance to spread, and spread they did with frightful rapidity. In an incredible short space of time the entire block, running from Lombard to Pratt street, was a seething mass of flame. At the drug house the firemen worked bravely. Holes were cut through the pavement and every effort was made to reach the imprisoned men, but they were buried under a great mass of brick and iron and fierce flames were roaring around the spot. Awful groans came from the pile, which seemed to make the working firemen put forth superhuman efforts, and, after more than an hour's work, it became evident that some of the men were alive, and that they were being roasted to death. John Kelly, of Truck No. 2, managed to crawl out from the rubbish, and, of the eight men who entered the building, he was the only one to escape with his life. He was cut and bruised, but his injuries are not serious.

Labor Day.

Monday, September 3rd, was the national labor holiday, and in all the larger cities it was duly observed. In New York the organizations turned out in their full strength, and there were probably not less than 15,000 men in line. Following Marshal Sullivan and staff, who were at the head of the procession, came a number of carriages containing the Central Labor union's committees of arrangement. The right of the line was held by the building trades, the housesmiths leading under Section Marshal James McKim. There were 500 of the housesmiths and as many of the slate and metal roofers. The section contained nearly three thousand workers of all classes, and fifteen bands of music. A feature of this portion of the procession was the marble cutters' display. Several wagons were occupied by sculptors and stone dressers plying their trade upon pieces of half-finished work. The German and Hebrew typographical unions, leading the printing trade section, next appeared, followed by the bookbinders. Three hundred oystermen, some on foot and some in wagons, presented a neat appearance in brand new jumpers and caps. In the baker's section, a cone six feet high on a four foot base covered with ornamented ginger snaps attracted attention. It was borne on the shoulders of eight men. A six foot loaf of Vienna bread followed. Five hundred brewers escorted the car of Gambrinus and other emblematical "chariots." Gambrinus held a foaming goblet and was attended by two pages. Each brewer had a sprig of hops in his hat. The printing trades again claimed the column, and Typographical Union No. 6, a thousand strong, each chapel headed by a band or drum corps, marched by.

An immense blood-red flag was carried through the leading streets of Cleveland Ohio, and behind it marched a score of anarchists. This was "labor day," so-called, and twelve hundred men formed in line and with music and waving emblems paraded the down-town thoroughfares and then withdrew to a garden in the suburbs. At the garden the anarchists unfurled their flag and refused to acknowledge the stars and stripes. The committee in charge induced them to put their flag away. When the committee men turned their backs, the anarchists seized their emblem of blood and waved it aloft triumphantly. Immediately they were attacked by a hundred working men. The flag was trampled under foot, and one anarchist after another went to the ground in the fight that continued for at least ten minutes. All the anarchists but five escaped the three detectives who were present, but those who got away were bleeding and lame and will hardly appear in public for some time to come.

Success at Crow Creek.

The Indian commissioners have left the Crow Creek agency for lower Brule. They have made arrangements for the reception of all the signers who may present themselves during their absence. They leave with the satisfaction of having left behind them an army of active workers among the Indians, who are certain to bring comparatively every one eligible to sign finally. The list is steadily increasing, and the most gratifying feature about the result of the work is that those who are arrayed upon the side of the commissioners are the most intelligent, industrious and progressive element upon the reservation.

In compliance with the request of Chief Dog Back the commissioners held another council. Chief White Ghost and several others delivered speeches, but they simply rehashed their former speeches and reiterated that they were not ready to sign. Chief Dog-Black then delivered a good speech in favor of the bill, at the conclusion of which he came forward and touched the pen. A number of his friends followed. When Dog-Back began speaking. White Ghost and a number of his followers quietly left the circle and were seen no more at the council. The Indians who had signed had requested Judge Wright to deliver a speech and the council therefore adjourned to the headquarters of the commissioners, where the judge delivered the most eloquent and touching appeal to the Indians that has yet been uttered. He reviewed their past and present life and what their future would be if they accepted this act. The time had come when their old customs had to be thrown aside and their roaming and unsettled life abandoned and the habits, customs and characters of the whites adopted. The school is the civilizer and the provision for educational facilities having expired in the treaty of 1860 it was necessary that further provision be made and the act now under discussion did this grandly and completely. It furnished them with farms, houses, horses, cattle, clothing and everything necessary to happiness; contentment and prosperity.

The speech of the judge had a marked effect upon his hearers and they left the circle active workers for the measure. The result of their work is beginning to be noticed in the stragglers who are continually presenting themselves for enrollment. The commissioners feel that they have succeeded and confident that with the workers who are so actively advocating the adoption of the act nearly every signature on there reservation will shortly be placed upon the black paper. The Indians are scattering out to their homes and when they are away from the influence of the chiefs, who are afraid that the Sioux bill will depose them, the work will be speedily finished at this agency.

The Yellow Fever.

Thirty-seven new cases of yellow fever and two deaths from that disease were reported to the board of health on Monday. Total cases to date, 245; total deaths, 36. The new cases reported are numerous, but it is now certain that several physicians are making reports to the board of health, asserting that the posting of yellow flags at patient's gates and publishing the fact that they have yellow fever has an injurious effect in frightening them. These physicians tell patients that they only have a little billious attack, but treat them for yellow fever. They say the disease frightens more to death than it kills. It is now believed that the total number of cases of fever not reported is large.

By invitation of Gov. John B. Gordon of Augusta, Georgia, a conference was held in Augusta between Surgeon General Hamilton and himself. The object of the conference was to consider the situation in Jacksonville and the expediency of allowing the people of Jacksonville to go to other places and under what restrictions. Surgeon General Hamilton received a list of resolutions from Atlanta which were adopted at a meeting in that city. The resolutions fully endorse the course of Surgeon General Hamilton, and admit that the wholesale removal of infected persons to populous cities would be hazardous in the extreme.

The Mississippi state board of health has amended the quarantine regulations so as to require a person entering the state to possess a certificate from a health officer, or to give satisfactory proof that he or she has not been exposed to the yellow fever.

Martin Voss, aged 60 years, one of the most prominent farmers of Winona county, Minn., was killed while on his way from Winona to his home in New Hartford. His team ran away, throwing him out, and his skull was crushed, being dead when found. He leaves a family well provided for.

Wm. J. McCoy registered at the Madison House at Middleton, N. Y. from San Francisco. He took laudanum with suicidal intent, but took too much. Next morning he shot himself with a Colt's revolver. The ball entered his left breast and the surgeons think it just missed his heart. Letters found in his room show the act to have been premeditate. He will probably die.

REPUBLICAN BLASTS.

Will Rebuke Them.

The wage-earners and producers, who are themselves the consumers, will inflict in November a crushing rebuke to those who are trying to force the American scale of wages, profits and living down to the European level.—Cleveland Leader.

Hold His Coat Tails.

"Just see me wallop Canada! Hand me a club—no, not that one, a bigger one."—G. Cleveland. But the senate and the people are asking why he hasn't used the club which was placed in his hands a year and a halfago. If the senate now gives him a bigger club he will lie right down behind it, just as he did behind the other one, and hide. As a bluffer, Mr. Cleveland swells up very large.—Detroit Tribune.

No Free Trade for Connecticut.

The quiet movement in this state against the Free Trade tendency of the democrats is very strong and deep. It amounts to an exodus. You may hear it wherever you go. Workmen talking it quietly over among themselves, recognize that the issue is vital to them, and old-time democratic business men, denouncing the party for its folly, have decided to vote against it this time to save themselves.—Hartford Courant

Upsetting Democratic Falsehoods.

It is alleged that the Mills bill is not a Free Trade measure, because it reduces the duties but 7 per cent. This is a subterfuge, and as good as a falsehood. It entirely removes the tariff from articles now producing $22,000,000 a year revenue, or, say, on $60,000,000, increasing the amount of Free Trade imports to $400,000,000, the total imports being but $685,000,000. In other words, it increases the value of Free Trade articles so that they constitute three-fifths of our entire importations.—Chicago Journal

That Letter.

New York World: It may be remarked that the documents is due.

Baltimore American: President Cleveland should invoke the services of Mr. Gallagher, and let the letter go.

Peoria Transcript: We wonder if President Cleveland will mention anything in his letter of acceptance about the dangers of a third term.

Toledo Blade: Grover having gotten off his "jingo" message will probably now have a little time to devote to his long-delayed letter of acceptance.

New York Tribune: Cleveland's letter of acceptance is being held back for want of type. The setting of the first 100 words exhausted all the capital I's and M's.

The Republican Young Ladies.

It is very pleasant to have the girls with us politically. The Mail told of the republican club organized for campaign parades by miss Minnie E. Davis, of this city. It will be a pretty feature of the parades. It will be a telling one, too. It will show the world what is tolerably generally known already—that charming girls are generally republicans.

The young ladies who form this republican club are not women's rights women. They are simply enthusiastic girls who wish to aid a good cause. They are the young Mary Logans and Lady Randolph Churchills, of Chicago, who think, and rightly, that a woman, in a womanly way, can do much to promote a party's success.—Chicago Mail.

Some of His Record.

Come, flatterers and worshipers of the Tattooed President, tell us if these things are not true. Is the record at fault when it sets forth the names of 218 officeholders appointed since 1885 who have been directly connected with the criminal classes? Is it true or is it false that the civil list of this reforming genius of yours includes two murderers, two hirelings of assassins, seven forgers, three rioters, five indicted offenders against the revenue laws, and mail thieves, defrauding county officials, embezzlers, bribers, blackmailers, gamblers, wife beaters, and drunkards without number? Is there any possible answer on your part to the indictment framed by the Tribune against the administration as at once the least efficient, the most partisan, and the most corrupt and infamous in the annals of American politics?—New York Tribune.

Democracy and the Veterans.

The Cleveland Plain Dealer referred to the Union veterans as "stupid and bigoted soldiers." Congressman Kilgore, an ex-Confederate Democratic officeholder, openly insulted them on the floor of the house as paupers; and now Matson, the Democratic candidate for governor of Indiana, in a Democratic majority report from the committee on pensions, says:

And if one (meaning a soldier pensioner) receives not enough, it is because he did not serve long enough, and can he be heard to complain if he gets a just rate equal to his fellow soldiers? And for the remainder of the relief necessary to his support, he shall be allowed, as other citizens must, to accept the charity of the local authorities.

Isn't that statement disgraceful? If an old veteran, maimed or in the last stages of disease, is unable to support himself, he can go to the poorhouse before the government shall aid him. That is the exact substance of Mr. Matson's declaration. This is some more of the great love the Democratic party bears toward the soldiers!

A Tale With A Moral.

John Smith had a board fence around his corn field to keep out his neighbor Brown's cows. Mr. Brown didn't like this fence at all. His pastures were lean and dry, and he its protection restored.—Springfield (Mass.) Union, thought it would be a fine thing if his cows could get into Mr. Smith's field. Accordingly he set to work with Mr. Smith's hired man and persuaded him by arguments and bribes to pull down a part of the fence.

One day when Mr. Smith was looking over his farm he found the man at work removing some of the boards from the fence.

"What are you doing there!" demanded Mr. Smith.

"I'm reforming the fence, sorr—there's a dale too much of it for the good of the corn."

"But you'll let in Brown's cows, and they'll trample down the whole field," urged Mr. Smith.

"Bedad, it won't be so bad as that, sorr. I'm only taking down 15 or 20 per cent of the fence. There's enough of it left to protect the corn, sorr. I'm only rejuicing the average of the fence. Sure, it's there still."

It is enough to say that Mr. Smith didn't see the point, and, ordered the fence and After Two Months.

General Harrison in every respect is a stronger candidate to-day than when he was nominated two months ago. His record as a gallant soldier in the field, a distinguished leader of the Indian bar, and a sagacious legislator with an honorable and useful career in the United States Senate is without flaw, crease, or wrinkle. The Democratic press has found leisure to scrutinize his speeches and public acts, and to ascertain whether he has ever done or said anything which could be used against him in a Presidential canvass. Feeble attempts to convict him of inconsistency in his record on the Chinese question, of hostility to the interests of workingmen during the labor riots of 1877, and of contemptuous disregard of the principles of Civil Service Reform have been abandoned as soon as made. Defamation has recoiled at once upon the defamers, and only served to prove that General Harrison's reputation is invulnerable. Eight weeks have passed, and our friends the enemy have nothing to say against it. They can only repeat the silly fling with which they greeted his nomination that he is the grandson of his grandfather, as if it were anything against him that an earlier Harrison should have won the battle of Tippecanoe and the tariff canvass of 1840, or that a still earlier Harrison should have signed the Declaration of Independence. The Republican leader is not only a strong candidate from his unblemished reputation, and his honorable career as a soldier and statesman, but he is also a man of intellectual resources and sagacious judgment. Since his nomination he has made as many as eighty speeches in Indianapolis, in answer to congratulatory addresses, and he has invariably left a favorable impression upon the delegations who have listened to him, and upon the larger audience in the country which has attentively followed his words.—Tribune.

DOINGS IN MINNESOTA.

The Austin Canning company is employing now about fifty hands. The capacity of their manufactory has been doubled this summer.

The hardware stores of A. Frankenfield and H. Wardsworth were burglarized at Glencoe. Frankenfield's loss is $150, and Wardsworth's about twice that amount,

Jacob Wicklow, aged fifteen, fell from a wheat stack near Montgomery and dislocated his neck, death ensuing at once. Wicklow lived with his father in Wheatland township.

So far the St. Croix boom has turned out this year 350,000,000 feet of logs, the largest amount ever turned out by the boom in one season.

M. B. Sheffield rented the Robinson mill at Faribault and is about to run it to its full capacity. This gives Sheffield from both his mills a capacity of 800 barrels of flour per day.

The Indians are becoming quite numerous around Perham, and as usual are committing a great many depredations. It is said they are fishing on Big Pine Lake with nets, which is contrary to law.

The creamery at Wadena, will shut down on Sept. 1 on account of the dry weather and inability to get cream enough to keep the works in operation. It will resume business again about the first of next May.

The village of Mazeppa has a sensation in the disgraceful proceedings of two young men and three young girls, who had a high old time recently drinking beer and whisky. One of the men is held in $1,000 bonds, while the other got off with a $50 fine.

Along the line of the Northern Pacific prairie fires are doing some damage. The grass is unusually high, and fires are liable to occur and will occur if the utmost precaution is not taken. Farmers can lose their whole crops, and counties will be seriously devastated if the fire break is not universally resorted to.

Hemming Hanson, a farmer living near Alden, was thrown from his wagon between his horses, while stacking, recently, and the team running away, one of his shoulder blades was broken in three pieces, his lungs were injured, and he is not likely to survive the accident.

At Duluth, a party of small boys stole some dynamite cartridges from a gang of blasters clearing land, thinking they could be used as fire-crackers. One of the boys pounded one with a stone and had his right hand lacerated and head cut. The boy will recover.

A sneak thief entered the up town office of the Rochester fair association during the absence of the entry clerks and stole $25 worth of one-cent stamps, besides a few dollars in small change. It is hoped that when the thief attempts to dispose of his large amount of stamps he may be apprehended.

The barn and granary of N. Stein, living in Cannon Falls, were destroyed by fire, caused by a boy's playing with matches. Mr Stein also lost two horses, farm machinery, 1,000 bushels of oats, and a quantity of hay, flax and barley, the loss aggregating $1,500.

For the first time in the history of Minnesota an ex-convict who has been released on a conditional pardon has been brought back to prison to serve the remainder of his sentence in consequence of violating the conditions of his pardon, says the Stillwater Messenger. The party is Delheim of Kandiyohi county, charged with attempted rape.

All indications point to a shortage at Duluth of anthracite coal alone, from the amount needed in the northwest, of 100,000 tons. This will be due to the great increase of consumption in the northwest, and lack of sufficient railroad facilties to transport coal from the mines to the lake shipping ports. The shortage must be supplied from Milwaukee and Chicago.

The new normal school at Moorhead has opened and has about forty students to begin with, which number is expected to be doubled after threshing. The building presents a fine appearance and is admirably fitted up for school purposes. The following is the faculty: L. C. Lord, president, Latin; mental sciences; W. F. Rocheleau, institute conductor natural science; Louise A. McClintock, American history, English, vocal music; Elizabeth R. Clark, pedagogy, English; H. N. Pearce, natural science, mathematics.

The wife of Charles Lawrence, a German farmer living about 10 miles north of Elk River, is missing under very peculiar circumstances. The husband's story is that he was absent from home from Sunday until Friday, and that on his return he found his wife gone and their four small children alone in the house. The oldest child, a boy of six years, told him that his mother started to find the cows on Tuesday night and never came back. A large number of men have been searching the woods and dragging lakes and ponds, but without finding any clue to the missing woman. She left home bareheaded and barefooted. Lawrence and his wife frequently had very violent quarrels.

MERRIAM!

On the 6th Ballot

W. R. Merriam was Nominated for Governor,

"The Kids" again get Frisky and Smash "The Masheen."

IN SPITE OF YOUR UNCLE LOREN'S TEARS AND PROTESTATIONS.

And the Oil Inspector's Grip.

BOSSISM BUSTED!

It was something akin to a feeling of great relief that was experienced, when, on Friday morning of last week the news of the nomination of W. R. Merriam became generally known. Even the friends and supporters of C. A. Gilman breathed a sigh of great relief as they said: "Well, if Charlie Gilman could not get there I am glad that Merriam has got it!" It is a universal feeling that the convention did wisely and well, and Polk County will roll up a larger majority than ever. Had Loren Fletcher succeeded in again dictating the nomination, the head of the ticket, at least, would have been snowed under emphatically. Mr. Fletcher is a shrewd politician, and a good worker, and all that, but the people up here are out of conceit with the idea of one man's presuming to dictate to the State, and, while they endured it once, they had determined to submit no longer to such tactics.

The convention consumed all of Wednesday in perfecting its organization, and it was not until Thursday afternoon that the first formal ballot (two informal ballots having been taken before noon) was had, which resulted as follows:

McGill	138
Merriam	169
Scheffer	106
Gilman	28
Clements	8
Whole number of votes cast	449
Necessary to a choice	226

This shows a gain for Merriam of eight votes over the second informal ballot, a loss for Scheffer of ten, a loss for McGill of seven and a gain for Gilman of eleven.

THE SECOND BALLOT.

The second ballot proceeded amid greater excitement than ever. It was now unanimously conceded that this was the ballot which would test the ultimate strength of all the candidates and decide which must retire from the field, even if it did not actually decide the question of nomination. The announcement of the result of the ballots was made by the chairman as follows:

McGill	114
Merriam	178
Scheffer	98
Gilman	53
Braden	4
Whole number of votes cast	447
Necessary for choice	224

This was a gain of nine votes for Merriam, a gain of 25 for Gilman, drawn principally from Hennepin, which was solid for McGill on previous ballots; a loss of 8 for Scheffer and a loss of 24 for McGill. Mark D. Flower conceded the nomination of Merriam on the next ballot.

THE THIRD BALLOT.

With the taking of the third ballot, which commenced at 2:30, the scene became one of still greater excitement than ever and it was evident that some radical change was under way. The Hennepin delegation was seen to leave the convention and go into secret caucus. They returned as their names were called and one of the delegation announced that they wished to withhold their vote long enough to elect Gilman. It was evident that the delegation was split, and several of the delegates were known to favor Merriam. When they voted they cast 2 for Braden, 26 for Gilman and 10 for McGill. It was stated, however, that several counties had turned for Merriam, and several McGill men conceded that Merriam would be nominated, if not on this ballot, on the next. McGill and Scheffer delegates were breaking allegiance, or promising to do so in every direction. Merriam or a dark horse was the cry, Merriam preferred. The chairman announced the result of the third ballot as follows:

Merriam	212
Scheffer	96
Gilman	110
Braden	4
Clements	1
Whole number of votes cast	247
Necessary for choice	224

The result of the ballot was greeted with continuous and deafening cheers, which the chairman in vain endeavored to suppress.

THE FOURTH BALLOT.

The sixth ballot, being the fourth formal ballot of the convention on the nomination of a republican candidate for governor was proceeded with without delay. This, it was confidently hoped would be the final ballot and it was admitted by the McGill delegates that Merriam would receive at least 20 more votes than he required to nominate him. Several McGill men were seen to pin Merriom badges over those of their own candidate and had evidently given up all hope.

Merriam	270
Scheffer	73
Gilman	101
Whole number of votes cast	444
Necessary for a choice	223

Cheering succeeded the announcement and was maintained for several minutes, ballot papers filling the air like a snow storm.

Mr. Hooker, of Hennepin County, moved to make the nomination of W. R. Merriam unanimous. Mr. Crabbe, of Dakota, seconded the motion and Mr. McKenzie, of Sibley, also seconded. The motion was carried with cheers.

Gen. Baker moved that the chair appoint a committee of three to convey to the Hon. W. R. Merriam the information. Loren Fletcher said he would do all he could to elect the nominee of the convention, although he worked for McGill

The motion was put and carried and the chair appointed Gen. Baker, Loren Fletcher and Mr. Hodgson to inform W. R. Merriam of his nomination. A few minutes later the Hon. W. R. Merriam was escorted to the platform amid cheers, and Chairman Gibbs said: "It gives me great pleasure to present to you a gentleman whom the young men of this state will be pleased to hail as the next governor of Minnesota."

Mr. Merriam said: "You have paid me a high honor, an honor which any man might be proud of and which so young a man as I deems so great an honor at the hands of so great a party as the republicans of Minnesota. This party has always kept pure its annels and will serve you loyally, faithfully and honestly. I believe the people of this state wish to have their credit preserved, their public buildings looked after and their taxes reduced. I thank you for this token of your confidence in me."

Three rousing cheers and a tiger were given for the nominee.

Capt. Reed, of Glencoe, moved that the secretary be authorized to cast the ballot of the convention for the Hon. A. E. Rice for lieutenant governor. Objection being made to this mode of procedure the roll was called on the question. Before the count was announced the name of Oscar G. Wall, of Fillmore County, who was running against the Hon. A. E. Rice, was withdrawn, and Mr. Rice's nomination was made unanimous. Nominations now followed quickly, and were as follows:

For secretary of state, Hans Mattson, of Hennepin. Made unanimous by acclamation.

For attorney general, Moses E. Clapp and Edward Dean. Dean's name was withdrawn and Clapp's nomination was made unanimous.

The appointment of a state central committee was on motion delegated to the chairman to be made at his leisure, one delegate to be from each of the sixteen judicial districts and three at large.

The convention adjourned at 7:30.

OUR CANDIDATE.

William R. Merriam was born at Wadhams Mills, Essex County, New York, July 26th, 1849, and came to St. Paul with his parents in 1861. He attended the St. Paul schools and graduated at Racine college, Racine, Wis. in 1870, when he was 21 years old. He then entered upon a business life as a clerk in the First National bank, of St. Paul; became assistant cashier of that institution, and, subsequently, was cashier of the Merchants' National bank, of which he is now president. Mr. Merriam is impregnated and inspired with the enterprising and alert spirit of the Northwest. He is a republican of the highest type, and notably popular with the younger and aggressively active element in the party. His career in the legislature during the two terms for which he was elected, in 1882 and 1886, designated him as a leader of men of conspicuous ability and value to his party. As speaker of the house in 1886, he won the admiration of all the political elements in that body. His record, public and private, is unassailable, and among his public services his telling work for the State Agricultural society and in behalf of the agricultural interests of the state is prominently known.

Drainage Needed.

Never in the history of Polk County was the need of drainage more emphatically expressed than in the present crop. Some men have lost their entire crop and we have no doubt but that the loss to the whole county is equal to a sum sufficient to do the entire work of drainage for the county. This in one year with the liability of its being repeated should be convincing proof of the great need of a thorough system of drainage. Last spring was cold and backward to an unusual degree and when at last the ground was ready in many places and should have been in all, it was found that much land was unfit by reason of surface water standing upon it with no chance to escape except by evaporation—a slow and tedious process, and, as events prove a disastrous one. Had our wet lands all been properly drained, seeding could have been done in time to have given the grain ample time to be out of danger on the 17th the time of the first severe frost, and it would also have saved the rust which has been the main cause of all the damage done. Instead of useless repining at our loss we should now go to work to prevent a possibility of like occurrences in the future. We need State aid and our representatives in the Legislature should be besieged with letters requesting their aid in our behalf. We ought to have one-half the amount needed from the State and the other should come from a direct tax upon the lands directly benefitted. The question now is, will our people learn wisdom by this year's experience and unite in a demand for this much needed relief? This is a question of far more practical importance to us than any other and it should be agitated by the press and people until it is accomplished. We would like to have expressions from all intelligent farmers and others in our county upon the subject—a short letter, for publication giving their views upon this all important subject. In this way the will of the people can be expressed in so emphatic a manner as to ensure success.

THE BEAR GARDEN,

Yclept The Democratic Convention.

A few of the unterrified assembled together at the Court House, on Friday last at 10:30 o'clock a. m., with a view to putting in nomination a county ticket which should consist only of the simon pure, dyed-in-the-wool, unterrified dimokracy—and this is how they did it:

The convention was called to order at the appointed time by the chairman, I. Fortier. The whole interest of the business clustered upon the question who shall be the nominee for sheriff, John Paterson or I. Fortier. W. H. Averill was nominated temporary chairman. This was considered first blood for Fortier, and amid a howl of mingled rage and delight, Fortier stock sold at a premium. The chair appointed as committee on resolutions: A. C. Wilkinson, Jas. F. Holmes and T. A. Dunlava.

ON PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

J. A. Bemis, H. Lindblad, H. Kaufer, Geo. Riley and F. Liedell.

ON CREDENTIALS.

W. J. Hilligoss, M. E. Kirsch, A. Wentzel, John Mikulecky and T. Bellaire.

Adjourned for refreshments. Upon re-assembling after refreshments the committee on credentials reported 94 regulars and proxies, etc. A motion to exclude all proxies not resident of the town represented, was knocked higher nor Gilderoy's kite after a vast amount of eloquence had been wasted upon the important subject. Considered to be first blood for Paterson.

The committee on organization threw a bomb-shell into the crowd by reporting in favor of unseating the temporary organization and making T. A. Dunlava, of Fisher, permanent chairman, and J. F. Holmes, secretary. More eloquence went to seed in the futile attempt to stem the tide. Second blood for Paterson.

At this juncture a motion was made by a member who had been observed to be sadly spitting cotton for some time, that "we do now adjourn to Max Ericsson's—up stairs." Carried without any eloquence being wasted to contest the point.

After re-assembling at the hall the delegates all appeared to be in the very best of spirits and the business proceeded. Somebody moved to change the deal and nominate the sheriff first, and right here the music did begin. After a three-ringed circus of long duration the proposition was downed and somebody said something about nominating a candidate for auditor. An awful pause ensued and many delegates were observed to quietly leave the hall and go below for a draught—of fresh air. No one appearing, with sand enough to enter the list, this place was sadly passed with the remmick: "Respectfully submitted to the central committee." Considered first blood for A. M. Childs.

Having seen the position of auditor decently interred, (as it were) some venturesome spirit suggested that perhaps it might now be as well to provide for the needs of a treasurer to lend eclat to the already "a very strong ticket!!" After a pause of sufficient length to justify such a solemn proceeding, one enthusiast suggested that it might be well to reward the distinguished services to the party of Capt. Couvrette by making him the victim of misplaced confidence. Another, who had been drinking—in more fresh air than the rest, suggested the advisability of endorsing A. P. Hanson. In order to settle the question amicably somebody suggested that it might be well to have the deacons pass the hat and take up a contribution, suggesting that a quarter apiece would be enough to go around. Upon a count of noes-es A. P. retired by 44, and Capt. Couvrette was declared the choice. The Capt. with a grim smile, acknowledged the contents of the hat, and then the band did strike up, and for the space of ten minutes no man thought of leaving the hall for fresh air or anything, for the battle was now on in earnest, as they had reached the only business of importance, the question "who shall be put up for Paulsrud to knock out?" At this solemn and trying juncture, atty. P. G. Filardeau mounted a chair, got his back up—against the wall, and in a speech o'erflowing with burning eloquence, sung the praises of Isadore Fortier as the only man deserving the empty honor. Judging by the size of the enthusiasm one would be justified in thinking that Fortier had the whole business dead to rights; but atty. Wilkinson here arose and just naturally tore the other fellow all to shreds in the endeavor to show that the only man who was best calculated to suffer defeat gracefully was John Paterson. At this exciting point in the game the attorney for the prosecution requested the secretary to read some documentary evidence bearing on the case. Wilk asked its nature and objected, and somebody moved to lay the evidence under the table, but after the matter was duly ventilated and wet down in proper shape ready to go to press, the secretary was ordered to read the communications. Holmes arose and said: "These documents are from the several castor oil clubs in the county endorsing Fortier and requesting his nomination by this convention." There were some in the crowd who insist that the secretary did not say "Castor Oil Club," and may be he did not, for we noticed that his business kept him so close that he could not get out as often as many to get a dose of fresh air, so he could not be blamed if his voice was so husky you couldn't hear what he did mean to say. We will not insist that he said "Castor Oil," but we are sure that it was some kind of lubricant intended to grease the wheels in Fortier's interests, so it really makes no difference what kind of oil was meant. After passing the hat and going through all the motions of counting, it was announced that Paterson received 50 and Fortier 43. Paterson was declared the victim, took the stand and made a neater speech of acknowledgement than was at all necessary, under the circumstances. As it was now 6 p. m., somebody moved to adjourn till 7:30. At about 8 the routine work was resumed, and Wm. Watts for probate judge was successful. For superintendent of schools, Miss Harrington was suggested, but W. H. Averill, of Fosston, asked the boys to put up A. D. Wishard by acclamation, saying that the Thirteen Towns would go to him solid. With this assurance the lady was quietly ignored and Wishard nominated. John M. Boyle, of Red Lake Falls, was unanimously selected to knock out D. D. Williams. The only reason for this was the convention got the idea that Johnny is the only Boy'le be able to do that leetle yob, and here they made another mistake. W. H. Averill was rewarded for his distinguished services in the convention by the nomination for court commissioner. He insisted stoutly that he "didn't want it," and he need have no fears that he will get it. Somebody here got up and moved to "endorse W. F. Arnold for county surveyor," whereat the orators all went red-headed and declared that they would by no means "endorse any republican!" What's the matter with Will? After "passing" the office of auditor and register, with the plain understanding that the committee would put up P. J. McGuire and Andrew Eiken, to get up and make such a bitter onslaught on Will would suggest that he was not the right kind of a republican to suit—however, it does not signify. They had to make a kind of a kick—"not necessarily for publication, but as an evidence of good faith," and poor Will had to take it. After that splendid exhibition of independence, the convention gravely proceeded to endorse Shep for coroner, body, boots and br-ains. Then they nominated for county commissioner in the 1st district, A. J. McIntosh; 3d district M. E. Kirsch, and the 5th district A. C Rhmehart. For delegates to the democratic legislative convention, Wm. Anglim, I. Fortier, M. E. Kirsch, Jos Smith, Geo. Labissioniere. A. C. Wilkinson, Dr. Forest Bucklin and T. Sullivan were selected. The convention then adjourned.

JAS. GREENHAGH, Jr., Crookston. [16-tf.]

Residents of Maine are familiar with the story told of Capt. Clapp, of Portland, who although a citizen of the 17th century was a speculator, an occupation but rarely followed in that age. Capt. Clapp was very much impressed with an article invented in early days and known as a warming pan. The pan was made of copper, was about one foot in diameter and four inches in depth, with a perforated cover. It was provided with a handle four feet in length. After being filled with red hot coals, the pan was inserted between the sheets or blankets of a bed and rapidly moved to and fro, the result being that a cold or damp bed was made thoroughly warm and comfortable in the severest winter weather, while the temperature of the room remained cool. Capt. Clapp was so impressed with the value of this simple device, and the great boon it was to mankind in general, that he determined to load his ship with warming pans and sail away to foreign shores, and put money in his purse, while dispensing comfort to the purchaser of his wares. Newspapers were decidedly rare in his day, history was not often consulted, and so did not Capt. Clapp have any signal service to consult so the bold Captain sailed straight away to the island of Cuba with his warming pans, but alas, he found that what they needed there was refrigerators and not warming pans. Accepting the situation with commendable resignation the Captain determined to explore the island before setting sail. Happening to visit a sugar house, the Captain heard the proprietor complaining of the lack of proper ladles with which to dip out and handle the cane juice and syrups. Instantly the thought came to Capt. Clapp that with a longer handle his warming pan would make a complete ladle and strainer combined with genuine Yankee shrewdness he informed the Cuban that he had a shipload of improved ladles and he sold his cargo for double the price he had originally set upon it. One of these identical warming pans (an article which would even now be useful during our winters) is to be shown at the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition.

MERRIAM!

On the 6th Ballot

W. R. Merriam was Nominated for Governor.

"The Kids" again get Frisky and Smash "The Masheen."

IN SPITE OF YOUR UNCLE LOREN'S TEARS AND PROTESTATIONS.

And the Oil Inspector's Grip.

BOSSISM BUSTED!

It was something akin to a feeling of great relief that was experienced, when, on Friday morning of last week the news of the nomination of W. R. Merriam became generally known. Even the friends and supporters of C. A. Gilman breathed a sigh of great relief as they said: "Well, if Charlie Gilman could not get there I am glad that Merriam has got it!" It is a universal feeling that the convention did wisely and well, and Polk County will roll up a larger majority than ever. Had Loren Fletcher succeeded in again dictating the nomination, the head of the ticket, at least, would have been snowed under emphatically. Mr. Fletcher is a shrewd politician, and a good worker, and all that, but the people up here are out of conceit with the idea of one man's presuming to dictate to the State, and, while they endured it once, they had determined to submit no longer to such tactics.

The convention consumed all of Wednesday in perfecting its organization, and it was not until Thursday afternoon that the first formal ballot (two informal ballots having been taken before noon) was had, which resulted as follows:

McGill	138
Merriam	169
Scheffer	106
Gilman	28
Clements	8
Whole number of votes cast	449
Necessary to a choice	226

This shows a gain for Merriam of eight votes over the second informal ballot, a loss for Scheffer of ten, a loss for McGill of seven and a gain for Gilman of eleven.

THE SECOND BALLOT.

The second ballot proceeded amid greater excitement than ever. It was now unanimously conceded that this was the ballot which would test the ultimate strength of all the candidates and decide which must retire from the field, even if it did not actually decide the question of nomination. The announcement of the result of the ballots was made by the chairman as follows:

McGill	114
Merriam	178
Scheffer	98
Gilman	53
Braden	4
Whole number of votes cast	447
Necessary for choice	224

This was a gain of nine votes for Merriam, a gain of 25 for Gilman, drawn principally from Hennepin, which was solid for McGill on previous ballots; a loss of 8 for Scheffer and a loss of 24 for McGill. Mark D. Flower conceded the nomination of Merriam on the next ballot.

THE THIRD BALLOT.

With the taking of the third ballot, which commenced at 2:30, the scene became one of still greater excitement than ever and it was evident that some radical change was under way. The Hennepin delegation was seen to leave the convention and go into secret caucus. They returned as their names were called and one of the delegation announced that they wished to withhold their vote long enough to elect Gilman. It was evident that the delegation was split, and several of the delegates were known to favor Merriam. When they voted they cast 2 for Braden, 26 for Gilman and 10 for McGill. It was stated, however, that several counties had turned for Merriam, and several McGill men conceded that Merriam would be nominated, if not on this ballot, on the next. McGill and Scheffer delegates were breaking allegiance, or promising to do so in every direction. Merriam or a dark horse was the cry, Merriam preferred. The chairman announced the result of the third ballot as follows:

Merriam	212
Scheffer	96
Gilman	110
Braden	4
Clements	1
Whole number of votes cast	247
Necessary for choice	224

The result of the ballot was greeted with continuous and deafening cheers, which the chairman in vain endeavored to suppress.

THE FOURTH BALLOT.

The sixth ballot, being the fourth formal ballot of the convention on the nomination of a republican candidate for governor was proceeded with without delay. This, it was confidently hoped would be the final ballot and it was admitted by the McGill delegates that Merriam would receive at least 20 more votes than he required to nominate him. Several McGill men were seen to pin Merriam badges over those of their own candidate and had evidently given up all hope.

Merriam	270
Scheffer	73
Gilman	101
Whole number of votes cast	444
Necessary for a choice	223

Cheering succeeded the announcement and was maintained for several minutes, ballot papers filling the air like a snow storm.

Mr. Hooker, of Hennepin County, moved to make the nomination of W. R. Merriam unanimous. Mr. Crabbe, of Dakota, seconded the motion and Mr. McKenzie, of Sibley, also seconded. The motion was carried with cheers.

Gen. Baker moved that the chair appoint a committee of three to convey to the Hon. W. R. Merriam the information. Loren Fletcher said he would do all he could to elect the nominee of the convention, although he worked for McGill

The motion was put and carried and the chair appointed Gen. Baker, Loren Fletcher and Mr. Hodgson to inform W. R. Merriam of his nomination. A few minutes later the Hon. W. R. Merriam was escorted to the platform amid cheers, and Chairman Gibbs said: "It gives me great pleasure to present to you a gentleman whom the young men of this state will be pleased to hail as the next governor of Minnesota."

Mr. Merriam said: "You have paid me a high honor, an honor which any man might be proud of and which so young a man as I deems so great an honor at the hands of so great a party as the republicans of Minnesota. This party has always kept pure its annels and will serve you loyally, faithfully and honestly. I believe the people of this state wish to have their credit preserved, their public buildings looked after and their taxes reduced. I thank you for this token of your confidence in me."

Three rousing cheers and a tiger were given for the nominee.

Capt. Reed, of Glencoe, moved that the secretary be authorized to cast the ballot of the convention for the Hon. A. E. Rice for lieutenant governor. Objection being made to this mode of procedure the roll was called on the question. Before the count was announced the name of Oscar G. Wall, of Fillmore County, who was running against the Hon. A. E. Rice, was withdrawn, and Mr. Rice's nomination was made unanimous. Nominations now followed quickly, and were as follows:

For secretary of state, Hans Mattson, of Hennepin. Made unanimous by acclamation.

For attorney general, Moses E. Clapp and Edward Dean. Dean's name was withdrawn and Clapp's nomination was made unanimous.

The appointment of a state central committee was on motion delegated to the chairman to be made at his leisure, one delegate to be from each of the sixteen judicial districts and three at large.

The convention adjourned at 7:30.

OUR CANDIDATE.

William R. Merriam was born at Wadhams Mills, Essex County, New York, July 26th, 1849, and came to St. Paul with his parents in 1861. He attended the St. Paul schools and graduated at Racine college, Racine, Wis. in 1870, when he was 21 years old. He then entered upon a business life as a clerk in the First National bank, of St. Paul; became assistant cashier of that institution, and, subsequently, was cashier of the Merchants' National bank, of which he is now president. Mr. Merriam is impregnated and inspired with the enterprising and alert spirit of the Northwest. He is a republican of the highest type, and notably popular with the younger and aggressively active element in the party. His career in the legislature during the two terms for which he was elected, in 1882 and 1886, designated him as a leader of men of conspicuous ability and value to his party. As speaker of the house in 1856, he won the admiration of all the political elements in that body. His record, public and private, is unassailable, and among his public services his telling work for the State Agricultural society and in behalf of the agricultural interests of the state is prominently known.

Drainage Needed.

Never in the history of Polk County was the need of drainage more emphatically expressed than in the present crop. Some men have lost their entire crop and we have no doubt but that the loss to the whole county is equal to a sum sufficient to do the entire work of drainage for the county. This in one year with the liability of its being repeated should be convincing proof of the great need of a thorough system of drainage. Last spring was cold and backward to an unusual degree and when at last the ground was ready in many places and should have been in all, it was found that much land was unfit by reason of surface water standing upon it with no chance to escape except by evaporation—a slow and tedious process, and, as events prove a disastrous one. Had our wet lands all been properly drained, seeding could have been done in time to have given the grain ample time to be out of danger on the 17th the time of the first severe frost, and it would also have saved the rust which has been the main cause of all the damage done. Instead of useless repining at our loss we should now go to work to prevent a possibility of like occurrences in the future. We need State aid and our representatives in the Legislature should be besieged with letters requesting their aid in our behalf. We ought to have one-half the amount needed from the State and the other should come from a direct tax upon the lands directly benefitted. The question now is, will our people learn wisdom by this year's experience and unite in a demand for this much needed relief? This is a question of far more practical importance to us than any other and it should be agitated by the press and people until it is accomplished. We would like to have expressions from all intelligent farmers and others in our county upon the subject—a short letter, for publication giving their views upon this all important subject. In this way the will of the people can be expressed in so emphatic a manner as to ensure success.

THE BEAR GARDEN.

Yclept The Democratic Convention.

A few of the unterrified assembled together at the Court House, on Friday last at 10:30 o'clock a. m., with a view to putting in nomination a county ticket which should consist only of the simon pure, dyed-in-the-wool, unterrified dimokracy—and this is how they did it:

The convention was called to order at the appointed time by the chairman, I. Fortier. The whole interest of the business clustered upon the question who shall be the nominee for sheriff, John Paterson or I. Fortier. W. H. Averill was nominated temporary chairman. This was considered first blood for Fortier, and amid a howl of mingled rage and delight, Fortier stock sold at a premium. The chair appointed as committee on resolutions: A. C. Wilkinson, Jas. F. Holmes and T. A. Dunlava.

ON PERMANENT ORGANIZATION.

J. A. Bemis, H. Lindblad, H. Kaufer, Geo. Riley and F. Liedell.

ON CREDENTIALS.

W. J. Hilligoss, M. E. Kirsch, A. Wentzel, John Mikulecky and T. Bellaire.

Adjourned for refreshments. Upon re-assembling after refreshments the committee on credentials reported 94 regulars and proxies, etc. A motion to exclude all proxies not resident of the town represented, was knocked higher nor Gilderoy's kite after a vast amount of eloquence had been wasted upon the important subject. Considered to be first blood for Paterson.

The committee on organization threw a bomb-shell into the crowd by reporting in favor of unseating the temporary organization and making T. A. Dunlava, of Fisher, permanent chairman, and J. F. Holmes, secretary. More eloquence went to seed in the futile attempt to stem the tide. Second blood for Paterson.

At this juncture a motion was made by a member who had been observed to beadly spitting cotton for some time, that "we do now adjourn to Max Ericsson's—up stairs." Carried without any eloquence being wasted to contest the point.

After re-assembling at the hall the delegates all appeared to be in the very best of spirits and the business proceeded. Somebody moved to change the deal and nominate the sheriff first, and right here the music did begin. After a three-ringed circus of long duration the proposition was downed and somebody said something about nominating a candidate for auditor. An awful pause ensued and many delegates were observed to quietly leave the hall and go below for a draught—of fresh air. No one appearing, with sand enough to enter the list, this place was sadly passed with the remmick: "Respectfully submitted to the central committee." Considered first blood for A. M. Childs.

Having seen the position of auditor decently interred, (as it were) some venturesome spirit suggested that perhaps it might now be as well to provide for the needs of a treasurer to lend eclat to the already "a very strong ticket!" After a pause of sufficient length to justify such a solemn proceeding, one enthusiast suggested that it might be well to reward the distinguished services to the party of Capt. Couvrette by making him the victim of misplaced confidence. Another, who had been drinking—in more fresh air than the rest, suggested the advisability of endorsing A. P. Hanson. In order to settle the question amicably somebody suggested that it might be well to have the deacons pass the hat and take up a contribution, suggesting that a quarter apiece would be enough to go around. Upon a count of noes-es A. P. retired by 44, and Capt. Couvrette was declared the choice. The Capt. with a grim smile, acknowledged the contents of the hat, and then the band did strike up, and for the space of ten minutes no man thought of leaving the hall for fresh air or anything, for the battle was now on in earnest, as they had reached the only business of importance, the question "who shall be put up for Paulsrud to knock out?" At this solemn and trying juncture, atty. P. G. Filardeau mounted a chair, got his back up—against the wall, and in a speech o'erflowing with burning eloquence, sung the praises of Isadore Fortier as the only man deserving the empty honor. Judging by the size of the enthusiasm one would be justified in thinking that Fortier had the whole business dead to rights; but atty. Wilkinson here arose and just naturally tore the other fellow all to shreds in the endeavor to show that the only man who was best calculated to suffer defeat gracefully was John Paterson. At this exciting point in the game the attorney for the prosecution requested the secretary to read some documentary evidence bearing on the case. Wilk asked its nature and objected, and somebody moved to lay the evidence under the table, but after the matter was duly ventilated and wet down in proper shape ready to go to press, the secretary was ordered to read the communications. Holmes arose and said: "These documents are from the several castor oil clubs in the county endorsing Fortier and requesting his nomination by this convention." There were some in the crowd who insist that the secretary did not say "Castor Oil Club," and may be he did not, for we noticed that his business kept him so close that he could not get out as often as many to get a dose of fresh air, so he could not be blamed if his voice was so husky you couldn't hear what he did mean to say. We will not insist that he said "Castor Oil," but we are sure that it was some kind of lubricant intended to grease the wheels in Fortier's interests, so it really makes no difference what kind of oil was meant. After passing the hat and going through all the motions of counting, it was announced that Paterson received 50 and Fortier 43. Paterson was declared the victim, took the stand and made a neater speech of acknowledgement than was at all necessary, under the circumstances. As it was now 6 p. m., somebody moved to adjourn till 7:30. At about 8 the routine work was resumed, and Wm. Watts for probate judge was successful. For superintendent of schools, Miss Harrington was suggested, but W. H. Averill, of Fosston, asked the boys to put up A. D. Wishard by acclamation, saying that the Thirteen Towns would go to him solid. With this assurance the lady was quietly ignored and Wishard nominated. John M. Boyle, of Red Lake Falls, was unanimously selected to knock out D. Williams. The only reason for this was the convention got the idea that Johnny is the only Boy'le be able to do that leetle yob, and here they made another mistake. W. H. Averill was rewarded for his distinguished services in the convention by the nomination for court commissioner. He insisted stoutly that he "didn't want it," and he need have no fears that he will get it. Somebody here got up and moved to "endorse W. F. Arnold for county surveyor," whereat the orators all went redheaded and declared that they would by no means "endorse any republican!" What's the matter with Will? After "passing" the office of auditor and register, with the plain understanding that the committee would put up P. J. McGuire and Andrew Eiken, to get up and make such a bitter onslaught on Will would suggest that he was not the right kind of a republican to suit—however, it does not signify. They had to make a kind of a kick—"not necessarily for publication, but as an evidence of good faith," and poor Will had to take it. After that splendid exhibition of independence, the convention gravely proceeded to endorse Shep for coroner, body, boots and br-ains. Then they nominated for county commissioner in the 1st district, A. J. McIntosh; 3d district M. E. Kirsch, and the 5th district A. C. Rhinehart. For delegates to the democratic legislative convention, Wm. Anglim, I. Fortier, M. E. Kirsch, Jos Smith, Geo. Labissioniere, A. C. Wilkinson, Dr. Forest Bucklin and T. Sullivan were selected. The convention then adjourned.

Residents of Maine are familiar with the story told of Capt. Clapp, of Portland, who although a citizen of the 17th century was a speculator, an occupation but rarely followed in that age. Capt. Clapp was very much impressed with an article invented in early days and known as a warming pan The pan was made of copper, was about one foot in diameter and four inches in depth, with a perforated cover. It was provided with a handle four feet in length. After being filled with red hot coals, the pan was inserted between the sheets or blankets of a bed and rapidly moved to and fro, the result being that a cold or damp bed was made thoroughly warm and comfortable in the severest winter weather, while the temperature of the room remained cool. Capt. Clapp was so impressed with the value of this simple device, and the great boon it was to mankind in general, that he determined to load his ship with warming pans and sail away to foreign shores, and put money in his purse, while dispensing comfort to the purchaser of his wares. Newspapers were decidedly rare in his day, history was not often conned over, nor did Capt. Clapp have any signal service to consult so the bold Captain sailed straight away to the island of Cuba with his warming pans, but alas, he found that what they needed there was refrigerators and not warming pans. Accepting the situation with commendable resignation the Captain determined to explore the island before setting sail. Happening to visit a sugar house, the Captain heard the proprietor complaining of the lack of proper ladles with which to dip out and handle the cane juice and syrups. Instantly the thought came to Capt. Clapp that with a longer handle his warming pan would make a complete ladle and strainer combined with genuine Yankee shrewdness he informed the Cuban that he had a shipload of improved ladles and he sold his cargo for double the price he had originally set upon it. One of these identical warming pans (an article which would even now be useful during our winters) is to be shown at the Minneapolis Industrial Exposition.

BELTRAMI, Sept. 6th, 1888.

William O'Brien, formerly of this place, but now of Minot, Dakota, has been sent for as an important witness in the infanticide case, which will be on the court docket of this county.

During the absence of C. E. Ford in Minneapolis, his son Chas. will have charge of his business here.

Mr. Hill, of the firm of Hill & Ness, of Crookston, has gone into the wheat business at this place. We extend to him our sympathy.

Wm. Street and D. T. Herriot started their threshing machine here to-day. They pay their men $1.50 per day.

D. Fulton, wheat buyer for Thorpe & Stowell, is at present aiding his company in the construction of their elevators along the N. P. R. R. He will return by the time wheat begins to come in here.

We have traveled for miles around here and are sure that the yield of wheat in this vicinity will not be over half that of last year, and of a very inferior quality. Oats and barley we think are all right.

Buying Pure Bred Stock.

American Stockman.

We are in receipt of a correspondent's letter, and in it he complains of the unfairness of some journals that represent particular breeds toward other breeds. He sends us a clipping from one of these journals, in which the inference is drawn that the Holstein-Friesian is mostly sold to those who are already breeding them, and that they are being but slowly adopted by outsiders. Well, if that is true, it would show that they recommend themselves. When a merchant can so satisfy his customer that he makes a permanent customer of him, it is evidence that he is selling good goods. If those who have tried Holstein-Friesians want more of them, it is evidence that the Holstein-Friesian is a good animal.

But the inference that they are being but slowly adopted is not correct. They are being widely adopted, and no breed with the merit that this one possesses can help making its way rapidly in public esteem. The time has passed to decry the Holstein-Friesian. Indeed, there never were but few who had the impudence to decry their merit. The Rural and Stockman is unprejudiced in the matter of breeds, and it can truthfully state the merits and standing of one breed without detracting from the merits of another; and that is proper live stock journalism. The Holstein-Friesian gives a good account of herself. A Kansas breeder and dairyman gives his experience as follows: Some years ago, having become tired of trying to make dairy cows out of Short-horn grades, we bought a thoroughbred Holstein bull, and commenced raising our heifer calves. Some six months ago our oldest half-blood heifers began coming in, and we now have ten half-blood two-year-olds that are giving us more milk daily than the same number of Short-horn grade cows out of our herd of forty head, all treated and fed alike. Out of the ten head of heifers, we have not a single "kicker," or one that is ugly to milk. Our brief experience would be in favor of a Holstein with which to cross up our dairy herd. We are well aware that in animals bred purely for the dairy, size is a matter of small importance as compared with milking quality. It is pounds of milk, butter, cheese and spaces of cream we are after, rather than weight of carcass, and a dairyman who would buy a large cow simply to secure a heavy carcass, and a dairyman who would buy a large cow simply to secure a heavy carcass, would be very much like the housekeeper who bought a cookstove of immense size in order to have a large weight of old iron to sell when the stove was worn out. Yet it should be borne in mind that the small cow will occupy about the same stable room, take about the same time to feed, milk and care for as the large animal, and that the majority of our calves must go for veal, and all our cows, sooner or later, will go to the shambles; hence we claim that the size of the animal does cut some small figure as an item of profit in dairy economy. The vital question is, which machine, with a given amount of feed and the best of care, will yield the largest profit? The Holstein has eminent milking qualities, and when dried off in her milk, fattens readily, and we believe, according to the amount of feed consumed and care bestowed, will yield a profit equal to any other breed. If the quality of her milk is not quite as rich as some others, the quantity more than makes it all up. And in docility and kindness of disposition she is excelled by no other class of cattle. Among the list of dairy cattle we are well aware the little Jersey is not to be ignored. She is just now the fashionable cow of the period. Our experience is that they give a little very choice milk, that the cream very quickly and perfectly separates from the milk, and that the butter has a very rich flavor and color.

We append what this gentleman, a friend of the Holstein-Friesian, says of the Jersey as a lesson to those who never have a kind word to say of any other breed except their own. There is room enough for all these breeds, and we long to see the time when the merits of all will be frankly recognized by every breeder, whatever his breed may be.

Some Dairy Problems.

American Agriculturist: The dairyman must study the market demand for his products, whether these are butter, cheese, or milk, and keep cows adapted for that want. It would be financial suicide to sell Jersey and Guernsey milk to the city milkman, when twelve per cent of solids constitute "good" milk, or keep so-called cheese cows from which to make butter. A line of dairying must be decided upon, and held to, for frequent change in dairy methods will never bring reputation, nor very great prosperity.

Then the cow should be treated and cared for as a mother, and fed a mother's food, not the food of bullocks This feeding and car should commence with the calf. The stunted calf that has been obliged to rob its bodily growth to keep from freezing, or spend its summer fighting the "gaunt wolf," has had its energies misdrected, and in after life it will rarely ever pay to try to make a profitable cow of it.

The calf that is raised for a dairy cow should be abundautly—not lavishly-fed on good grass, clover hay, oats, bran and other protien foods. Corn meal should be discarded. Milk-giving is a function separate and apart from beef making, and to first induce the beef habit by feeding fat-formers, like corn meal, is to train the heifer in that way, and at last, when a cow, and you wish to "feed her up," the extra food will go to four-cent beef, instead of thirty-cent butter, and a big loss is met with; for the food that is turned into butter, and sold every day, and there is only one sale for the beef.

Our heifer calf should be well fed, well housed, and kept warm in the winter, for in a stable of good light and pure air, she will develop the kind of hardiness that dairy cows need, the oats and bran will give solid bone and strong muscle and nerve, and also build up the embryo life that she must otherwise rob herself of to supply, or leave incomplete. Then our heifer, if milked as long as possible the first year of her dairy life, generously fed to make good, rich blood, out of which to make good milk—for milk-giving is first blood secretion governed by nerve force—we shall, as a rule, find we have a profitable dairy cow. This cow should be retained as long as she profitably pays her keep, then sold as a "sausager" for what she will bring; for we hold that no man ever fattened an old dairy cow to a profit. Better by far put this food into a cow that does give milk, and get pay for food consumed.

The warmest day of the month was the 23d, the thermometer indicating 90 above at 6 p. m. The prevailing winds were from the southeast and northwest. There were 20 clear and 11 cloudy days during the month and rain fell on 7 days. The first frost to injure vegetation occurred on the 17th. August, 1888, was two degrees hotter on each day than August, 1887.

Turning to the Dairy.

Western Rural and American Stockman.

It is reported that some of those who found that wheat raising in the wheat producing districts of the Northwest was not as productive of profits as they desired, and turned to the dairy, have not been satisfied with the profits there. Well, there has been universal depression. There has not been very much profit in anything for a few years. No business has been just what we would like to have had it. The dairy has paid as well as anything when it has been properly managed. It is possible, too, and very probable that some who have gone from wheat to dairying have found it a new business, and because of lack of experience have not done as well as they would have done with experience. We do not believe that the farmers of the Northwest will make a mistake in diversifying their farming. Wheat raising has been a bonanza to thousands, and will be to thousands more. Farms have been paid for with wheat, and homes established, when without wheat the result could not have been achieved. The soil of Minnesota and Dakota is perfect for wheat production in its natural state. If the seed is sown the crop will come, barring accidents. But wheat raising will exhaust any soil in time, and then if a man has but one pole up and lightning strikes it, the only pole he has is shattered. Hence, it is better to put several poles up, and that is the reason we advise a diversity of farming in a country that is so well suited for dairying and stock-raising. In the long run it will pay.

To Anti-Saloon Republicacans.

The Anti-Saloon Republican National Committee has removed its headquarters to No. 1 Broadway, New York City, and desires to hear from temperance republicans in every part of the country in reference to all matters of interest in their respective localities. It is especially anxious to know who are willing to do something to help the cause of temperance and republicanism. All such will oblige by writing at once, giving a short statment of the condition of sentiment in their respective localities, with suggestions as to what should be done to improve matters. Mere common scolds and pessimistic grumblers will oblige by not trespassing on our time.

Great Eaters.

Western Rural and American Stockman.

Writing from Iowa a correspondent says that he has been told that the Holstein-Friesian is so great an eater that she is not a profitable cow to keep. He asks us to say if the charge is true. In reply we would say that this is an excellent "fault." We never want a cow that does not eat. The more the animal will eat and utilize, the better cow she is. All good dairy cows are great eaters. It is their business to turn food into milk and the products of milk. When a cow stops eating she stops giving milk, and then is no better for the dairy, than an animal that never gave milk. The Holstein-Friesan is a great milker. There is no cow that gives so large a quantity of milk, and she must eat a good deal to do it. It is not wasteful to feed a good cow all that she will consume. Waste in the dairy is always in a direct opposite position. Dairy writers are constantly endeavoring to get farmers to feed well in the dairy and they meet with but comparative success. The man who endeavors to demonstrate how little a cow may eat and live will consult his own interests by not keeping cows. Trying to make money in the dairy by not feeding, is a hopeless task, and will never be successful. Feed well, and if your cow does not pay well, get rid of the cow.

Some Points as to the Third Party Campaign.

Toledo Blade:

It is a fact that when public opinion—that is, the conscience of a majority of the citizens of a state—crystallizes upon any one subject, one or the other of political parties will be compelled to enact that opinion into law. It may be on the subject of railroad rates, or the destruction of trusts, or a change in the mode of taxation, or for the general improvement of roads, or the stopping of the manufacture and sale of rum. Is it a mistake to assume that the passage of a law is going to produce any change regarding any matter so long as public opinion is at all evenly divided on its subject matter. Practically, men disregard what they regard as an unjust law if it is one that can be evaded. There is not a state whose statute books are not loaded down with laws which are disregarded by the masses of the people.

This is a fact, whether people close their eyes to it or not. A prominent instance is the Sunday closing law in Cincinnati. It will be remembered that the Ohio legislature last winter passed an amendment repealing the paragraph of the state liquor law which allowed municipalities to determine for themselves whether saloons should be closed or open on Sundays. This provision offended many good people in the state, and the pressure for its repeal was so strong that the General Assembly acceded to it. The result in Cincinnati is that the saloons are open as before, in spite of the law. Public opinion in that city is on the side of the saloon, and the law, which in other respects is as well observed in Cincinnati as in any other city of the land, is powerless in this respect. The saloonists, when arrested, demand jury trials, and the juries acquit them. What can be done here but build up public opinion for the right and against rum, so that it will be powerful enough to close the saloons and support the law?

The political prohibitionists—the third party—apparently labor under the delusion that the thing to do is to pass Probibitory laws, whether the people are ready for them or not—whether public opinion is sufficiently advanced or not to have the law properly supported—rather than to build up prohibition sentiment as a moral question, outside of and beyond politics. The latest claim they make is, that prohibition has become "a national question" under the recent decision of the United States Supreme court, as the federal government has control of inter-state traffic. But how can the federal goverment be made prohibition, save through the action of a constitutional majority of individual states? The source of power of the national government is with the people of the states and prohibitory legislation can be obtained before the Prohibition question can become a national one.

Iowa and Kansas for instance, have Prohibition. They can the best serve the cause by a vigorous maintenance of the law within their own borders, and by an earnest and vigorous effort to secure Congressional legislation that will prohibit the introduction of rum into any state wherein the rum traffic is prohibited. Dr. Fellows, in discussing the effort of the third party to build up itself in Iowa, makes use of an argument that is unanswerable when he says:

Suppose a few thousand conscientious Prohibitionists vote the third party ticket in this state, enough to give the Iowa electoral vote to Cleveland, will not such a result exasperate enough supporters of Prohibition to turn the state next year into the hands of the license party? In my opinion any Iowa Prohibitionist who votes the national Prohibition ticket, casts a vote that will tend to weaken the state Republican party, endanger its supremacy in the state and jeopardize Prohibition itself, with no compensating good to the nation:

It seems strange that any one who really has the best interests of Prohibition at heart would favor the introduction of the third party into Iowa, which already has Prohibition. The Democratic party of the state is bitterly opposed to prohibitory legislation, and the division of the frends of Prohibition between the third party and the Republican party can result in nothing but the triumph of Democracy and the imperiling of Prohibition. But Dr. Fellows gives what seems the key to the situation in what was told him by Hon. Aaron Kimball, who met St John while attending the New Orleans exposition. In a conversation upon Prohibition. St John said, in substance:

"Senator, your non-partisan prohibition success in Iowa is a constant rebuke to our third party movement."

Hence the activity of the third party leaders in Iowa. They actually wish nonpartisan Prohibition to be overthrown, that their party may thrive! Party before principle!

It may be interesting to our readers to recapitulate the reasons which Dr. Fellows assigns for objecting to the third party. We believe there is not one of them but is absolutely true, and they afford a compact summary of objections, not to Prohibition, but to the party which is using Prohibition as a cry to attract voters. He says of the third party:

It seeks political success rather than the success of Prohibition.

It deprecates the work of Prohibitonists outside of said party.

It seeks to break down Prohibition in states where it has been secured by non-partisan methods.

Only one in fifteen of Prohibitionists adhere to said party.

It strives more earnestly to promote Prohibition party success than Prohibition sentiment.

It manifests less opposition to the Rum Power than to the old political parties.

Its methods are such as to secure the co-operation and support of those engaged in the liquor traffic.

It aims to reform parties rather than the people.

It devides the ranks of Prohibitionists.

It exalts the political at the expense of the moral phases of Prohibition. It therefore weakens the support of the pulpit.

Its methods compel distrust of the sincerity of many of its leaders.

Its methods strengthen opposition to the principle of Prohibition.

A vote cast for the national Prohibition party, though not intended, is in its ultimate influence a vote for the liquor traffic.

And he could have added with equal truth that a vote for the third party ticket is a vote for Grover Cleveland and for the success of free trade. Dr. Fellows also summarizes the reasons why non-partisan methods of working for Prohibition are more advantageous than the attempt to build up the third party, as follows:

It seeks the success of the principle of prohibition rather then of a political party.

It avoids the expense, waste, and doubtful methods of a political party.

It elevates the standard of Prohibition as a moral reform.

It seeks legal enactment to protect and strengthen said reform,

It promotes no unnecessary antagonisms.

It rejoices in the success of Prohibition wherever and by whomsoever secured.

It secures the hearty and unembarrassed support of the Christian pulpit.

It seeks first to reform the people who create parties.

It unites the ranks of Prohibition.

It tends to conciliate and win the support of all good citizens.

It accelerates the growth of Prohibition sentiment, without which legal Prohibition can never succeed.

When the people are reformed the parties will need no reformation

When the state or nation Prohibition sentiment becomes sufficiently strong, it may utilize in its interest some existing political party, as in Iowa and Kansas.

Non-partisan Prohibitionists may and should support such political parties as can and will do the most for destroying the liquor traffic, even though such party is not ready to fully adopt Prohibition in its platform.

The non-partisan method is the quickest and surest way to exterminate the liquor traffic, as shown in Iowa and Kansas.

We reiterate our belief that the thing to do is not to waste effort, but to concentrate it upon the one prime object of cultivating and educating public sentiment up to the point of endorsing prohibition. Without that sentiment, the law will be a farce, ignored and defied. With that sentiment in its favor, the law will be observed, and Prohibition be effective. The Rum power's chief reliance is upon ignorance and vice. Prohibition depends for its success upon education and enlightenment. To educate the people to a clear understanding of the evils of Rum, and the benefits of Prohibition, is the first great step in the effort to Pulverise the Rum Power.

Merriam for Governor.

The Pioneer Press.

It is William R. Merriam for next governor of Minnesota. To that conclusion without break or halt or hesitation, the work of the convention proceeded from beginning to end. It was a fair and strenuous fight, but Mr. Merriam's strength grew steadily with every ballot until his nomination. It is a result upon which we may congratulate the Republican party and the people of Minnesota, and it came easily because it was so obviously the fittest thing that the representatives of the people could do. Gov. McGill deserves the hearty endorsement which the convention gave to his administration; and that he failed of renomination must be considered rather his misfortune then his fault. There was a general doubt of his strength as a candidate, which proved fatal to his honorable ambition. Nor need he feel other then a worthy pride in laying down the trust with whose discharge the people are not dissatisfied because, under the circumstances, they deemed it inexpedient to renew it. The warmth of the support that rallied about Mr. Scheffer, which is but a part of the tribute paid by all who know him to his admirable personal qualities, is something that may well bring consolation in defeat, though it could not overcome the stubborn and obvious reasons why he should not receive the Republican nomination. The favor and deliberate approval of the convention turned naturally toward Mr. Merriam, and the fitness of his candidacy will grow daily upon the people of Minnesota. He is a representative of the young men in politics, the forceful and insistent element everywhere coming to the front as to its rightful place. He is a man who, as member and speaker of the house, gave high proof of his ability to hold public station to the satisfaction of the people. He is a man of the very highest executive ability, whose years are already full of the grave conduct of affairs, and who will bring to the business of the state the same keenness of intellect and trained experience which he has applied to his own. He is a man of irreproachable character, commanding the universal confidence of the community that knows him, and of that wider business world in which he has been long a familiar figure. He is known especially to the agriculture communities of this state in connection with his disinterested services as president of the state agricultural association, and has won a general and deserved popularity. Surely the Republicans of Minnesota could have acted under no happier inspiration then that which led them to confer upon a leader so equipped the high honor of an arduous service. Standing on a platform as broad and liberal as it is positive and straightforward, this representative of the elements that inspire Minnesota Republicanism will appeal with the old-time success to the people of the state. The nomination is a wise one. The election of Mr. Merriam is already assured.

Griffin the Eloquent.

A. S. Griffin, the Noted Anti-Saloon Republican, Addresses a Large Audience at Harmonia Hall on the Political Issues of the Day.

Pioneer Press.

Harmonia hall was well filled last evening with a gathering composed mostly of Republicans, with a small sprinkling of ardent Prohibitionists, who had assembled to hear Alfred S. Griffin the well known anti-saloon Republican, talk of the great questions of the day. Mr. Griffin furnished those present with a fine entertainment. He is well informed concerning whereof he speaks. He put it in good logical shape. He first defined the functions of a Republican form of government. He held that every man who shirked the duties of citizenship was a political parasite, and if things went wrong had no one to blame but himself. The great issues of the day, he thought, were an honest ballot and a fair count and the will of the people must be framed in the laws. The Republican party, he claimed, was always in favor of laws compelling this. The Democratic party opposed. It meant success to the one and disaster to the other, for in every case an honest ballot would paralyze the Democratic party. While the speaker talked of ordinary politics he was logical and withal smooth and deliberate, but in the last half of his discourse when he argued in a fatherly way with the Prohibitionists his fund of enthusiasm burst all bounds and then he becomes truly oquent. He launched at the third party-men whole broadsides of passionate entreaty to turn from the error of their ways, and come over to the party that had done all the temperance and Prohibition work ever done in the country. He roasted them in quite a galling manner. The Eighth word contingent in the rear of the room squirmed visibly. The third party he denominated as only an adjunct to the Democracy, and, in reality, a saloon-protecting party. It claimed to be a second abolition party, but, unlike that illustrious party, it would not come out and fight on the side of its friends, but persisted in betraying them to the enemy. Two or three local Prohibitionists became exceedingly excited, and at the close of the speech asked some easy questions, which the speaker answered instanter. The meeting closed with a campaign song by a male chorus.

Report of Supt. Elliot.

Hon. D. L. Kiehl, Supt. Public Instruction, St. Paul, Minn.

SIR: Herewith please find my report on the condition of the public schools in Polk County.

TEACHERS.

In point of numbers our supply has been ample, but the improvement in quality is slow. Our standard is too low, and has necessarily to be so. We employ a large number of teachers in remote and newly organized districts, where the school year barely reaches the minimum required by law. These school must have teachers; and two causes operate to keep out the better teachers, viz: low wages, and too short a school year. For the present our teaching force is composed chiefly of teachers from our own midst. That these teachers are improving from term to term is seen in the advancing sentiment concerning the teachers' need of special preparation. Our teachers are not satisfied with present attainments. The institutes and county associations have been well attended, and good results have come from all. There is an increased demand for professional reading; more educational papers are taken and read than ever before, and, generally speaking, the results of this reading have been easily noted where visits of inspection have been made.

Under the conditions that exist with us, I do not look for a speedy advancement to that high plane where thoroughly trained teachers can be secured for all our schools. But under wise management it is a condition to which we shall grow. As elements in this growth I note the good work that is being done by our State High school. Many of our schools have been supplied with teachers from its classes. While these have not taken into their work much of that special training so valuable to the teacher, yet their scholarship has been exceptionally good, and they have materially aided in raising the standard of work. In the same line I might speak of the majority of the older and larger schools of the county. Under efficient instruction many of them have helped us to teachers who, though young in years, have for the most part been very faithful in work, and who will by continuance in this line of labor, availing themselves meanwhile of the means of culture that are within their reach, become valuable to the cause.

As a potent factor to the end we seek to attain, I welcome the fourth normal school. My faith is pinned to these schools as the leaven which is to leaven the whole lump of our school work; and I note with pleasure that already the foot-steps of those who are to be the teachers of the near future are turning thither. While our present condition is far from what could be desired I regard the prospect of a supply of reasonably well trained teachers decidedly improving and very hopeful.

SCHOOL GRADING.

A movement has been made toward a system of classification of the country schools. The State manuals have been placed in the hands of all teachers and they are required to arrange their work according to the course of study. As yet no very marked results could be expected, yet there is a noticeable improvement in the arrangement of school work. There is less of that aimless, purposeless work that characterizes lack of system. Studies are taken up and pursued which before were ignored, and there is an increasing recognition of the importance of each in the course.

TEMPERANCE HYGIENE.

The law has been enforced in every district in the county where there has been the slightest chance of this being beneficial. There are a few schools made up entirely of foreign children who have so limited on understanding of the English language that teachers have found it very difficult to do much in this line of work. Such schools have been dealt with leniently.

In this work I have sought to carry out the department's suggestion contained in circular 5 of 1887. The books recommended by the commission have been ostensibly adopted. Yet a too servile dependence upon text books has been deprecated. Much of the primary instruction has been oral, while the more advanced grades have worked from the Eclectic Guide to Health. No opposition to the working of the law has been encountered.

As to results: It certainly has not abolished the use of intoxicants, and boys still smoke cigarettes, though, it is to be hoped not ignorantly. A very marked improvement in the understanding of the subject by the teachers is manifest. Two years ago the greater number were very deficient in the entire subject; to-day better standing is secured at examination than upon any other study. This I think may be taken as an evidence that a sound, scientific temperance education is being diffused among those who are to be our citizens, which I take it, is the great purpose of the law.

PUBLIC SCHOOL LIBRARIES.

In this line not as much has been accomplished as could be desired. Still, books are gradually finding their way into the districts. Reports from the last annual meetings show that the people appreciate the benefits to be derived from the law. Generally speaking it is the more remote and poorer districts that are the first to avail themselves of these privileges.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Though beset with many difficulties, the period covered by this report has been one of general prosperity and advancement. Attendance has not been good. The thirty-day law has greatly reduced the number entitled to apportionment, but this will be largely compensated for in the increase of apportionment. Another year, when the importance of attendance is better understood from a financial standpoint, I expect to see much better results. The compulsory law is of but little use, except to threaten with. Some good has been done with it in this way, but it is too faulty to rely upon. Special pains has been taken to have Arbor Day observed, and it has resulted already in giving many of our school grounds an appearance of thrift they otherwise would not have.

In building and equipping school houses we have been vigorously active, and Polk County is fast acquiring school buildings that would be an honor to a county much larger settled and more completely developed.

In conclusion I would offer the following suggestions pertaining to legislation:

1st. Modify the compulsory law so as at least to close up one-half the holes through which delinquents can escape.

2d. Amend Proviso 1st of Section 79 so as to allow our poorer districts to get full apportionment for all scholars who shall have attended the requisite number of days, when the districts shall have voted tax up to the nine-mill limit, even though this tax is less than the amount which would have been so secured from apportionment funds. As the law now is it fails to benefit just those districts that most need the help.

3d. Modify the law pertaining to the certification of teachers in such a manner as to secure, first, some system of state certification for the higher grades; second, a transfer of the power to grant certificates of any grade from county superintendents to district examining boards. Each district to be made up of a number of contiguous counties; third, enact a law compelling county and city superintendents to admit graduates of our normal schools in good standing to all grades of school work below principalship of high schools without examination.

Respectfully submitted,
EZRA F. ELLIOT,
County Supt.

Mr. Hardy, well known in this vicinity, stepped off Friday's train, having come on from Ontario for the purpose of looking after his farming interests south of the city. A few days ago Art. Franklin, an employe of the McArthur Lumber Co., barely escaped death from a south bound passenger train. It is a custom of the engineers to give a warning whistle upon entering town, and then to run at full speed to the depot. On the day mentioned, the wind was high, and Art., who was driving the dray, failed to hear the whistle, and with his back to the fast approaching train drove over the crossing in front of the train, which grazed the back end of the dray as it dashed by. Nothing but the frightened plunge of the horse saved Art. from a horrible death.

Hold the Wheat.

Millers and Elevators Said to Have Combined to keep Down Prices.

Special to the Globe.

JAMESTOWN, Dak., Sept. 7.—An agent for one of the elevator companies of this place this week stated that the price of wheat is now controlled by the Minneapolis millers, and that the elevator companies are powerless to raise or lower it. This statement seems to give color to the already prevalent belief that the elevators and mills are in collusion to keep down the price. The latter do not propose, any more than they have in the past, to pay the farmer what

HIS WHEAT IS WORTH.

They are also endeavoring to shift the blame for not doing so on to the millers' association. This is undoubtedly so, and farmers will do well to hold their grain for sixty days at least, and await developments. There is considerable good wheat in this country, and considerable that is away off in grade, and the fear is daily expressed that these wheat-buying corporations will take advantage of this to and class it all rejected or some other grade below No. 1 hard. With this fear in view the farmers have been repeatedly advised to separate their good grain from the bad, thresh it separately and sell it separately—and by sample if possible. As is always the case with early frosts, the damage was done in spots, and if farmers considered this fact they could, by a little extra labor and judicious care, obtain a several points higher grade for a good deal of their grain. Instances are coming to light where this season's crop threshed and turned into elevators has netted the farmer little or nothing.

A Murderer Escapes.

From the Marshall County Leader we learn that Joe Chiwaltowski, the Polander boy who was lodged in the county jail, at Warren, awaiting trial at the next term of court for the murder of his uncle, made his escape from Sheriff Kivel Saturday evening, Sept. 8, in a very slick manner. The Sheriff, moved by the youthfulness of the prisoner and his apparent inability to realize the magnitude of the crime committed, as well as by his general good behavior while in jail, has allowed him a great deal of latitude. Mr. Kivel has often given him exercise in the open air and permitted him to walk around, and the boy has never given cause for the slightest suspicion of desiring to run away. On the evening in question he asked leave of Mr. Kivel to go to get a pail of water for the other prisoners at a well a short distance from the jail, but he would have kept Mr. Kivel waiting at the jail door until now, for Joe has not yet returned with the water. Mr. Kivel soon realized that he had been imposed upon and that the young criminal had made his escape, aided by the darkness of the night. Search was immediately instituted and kept up all night by a large force of men, but Joe could not be found, and has not been heard from yet.

Warren Register: Ye Editor made a trip to Crookston the first part of the week and found things about as usual. We found our brethren of the legal fraternity full of business. We called on A. C. Wilkinson, P. C. Schmidt, and Judge Montague, who are among the leading legal lights, and found them all as genial as ever, but too busy to fool away much time. We also met the new Register of the Land Office, H. H. Dickman, and found him to be a pleasant, courteous gentleman. We made a short call at sanctum of the POLK COUNTY JOURNAL, where we found Bro. Cooke busy over his exchanges. By the way, THE JOURNAL is a first-class weekly and is a valuable property made so by the ability of its editor and publisher. There is no editor in "this upper country" that gets away with THE JOURNAL man and whenever one of the unterrified jumps onto his neck expecting to do him up in the latest approved democratic style, he is sure to come out of the contest in about the same condition his party will be found after the votes are counted in Nov. next.

HARRISON ACCEPTS.

In His Letter He States His Own Position and that of the Republican Party, in the Times of the 10th.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Sept. 11.—The following is Gen. Harrison's letter of acceptance:

Hon. M. M. Estee and Others, Committee—Gentlemen: When your committee visited me on the Fourth of July last, and presented the official announcement of my nomination for the presidency of the United States by the Republican convention, I promised as soon as practicable to communicate to you a more formal acceptance of the nomination. Since that time the work of receiving and addressing, almost daily, large delegations of my fellow citizens has not only occupied all of my time, but has in some measure rendered it unnecessary for me to use this letter as a medium of communicating to the public my views upon the questions involved in the campaign. I appreciate very highly the confidence and respect manifested by the convention, and accept the nomination with a feeling of gratitude and a full sense of the responsibilities which accompany it. It is a matter of congratulation that the declarations of the Chicago convention upon the questions that now attract the interest of our people are so clear and emphatic. There is further cause of congratulation in the fact that the convention utterances of the Democratic party, if in any degree uncertain or contradictory, can now be judged and interpreted by executive acts and messages, and by definite propositions in legislation. This is especially true of what is popularly known as the tariff question. The issue cannot now be obscured. It is not a contest between schedules, but between wide-apart principles. The foreign competitors of our market have, with quick instinct, seen how one issue of this contest may bring them advantage, and our own people are not so dull as to miss or neglect the grave interests that are involved for them. The assault upon our protective system is open and defiant. Protection is assailed as unconstitutional in law, or as vicious in principle, and those who hold such views sincerely cannot stop short of an elimination from our tariff laws of the principle of protection. The Mills bill is only a step, but it is toward an object that the leaders of Democratic thought and legislation have clearly in mind.

THE IMPORTANT QUESTION

is not so much the length of the step as the direction of it. Judged by the executive message of December last, by the Mills bill, by the debates in congress and by the St. Louis platform, the Democratic party will, if supported by the country, play the tariff laws upon a purely revenue basis. This is practically free trade—free trade in the English sense. The legend upon the banner may not be "Free Trade;" it may be the more obscure motto, "Tariff Reform;" but neither the banner nor the inscription is conclusive, or, indeed very important. The assault itself is the important fact. Those who teach that the import duty upon foreign goods sold in our market is paid by the consumer, and that the price of the domestic competing article is enhanced to the amount of the duty on imported articles—that every million of dollars collected for customs duties represents many millions more which do not reach the treasury, but are paid by our citizens as the increased cost of domestic productions resulting from the tariff laws—may not intend to discredit in the minds of others our system of levying duties on competing foreign products, but it is clearly already discredited in their own. We cannot doubt, without impugning their integrity, that if free to act upon their own convictions, they would so revise our laws as to lay the burden of the customs revenue upon articles that are not produced in this country and to place upon the free list all competing foreign products. I do not stop to refute this theory as to the effect of our tariff duties. Those who advance it are students of maxims and not of the markets. They may be safely allowed to call their project "tariff reform" if the people understand that in the end the argument compels free trade in all competing products. This end may not be reached abruptly, and its approach may be accompanied with some expressions of sympathy for our protected industries and our working people, but it will certainly come if these early steps do not arouse the people to effective resistance.

NOT A SCHEDULE, BUT PRINCIPLE.

The Republican party holds that a protective tariff is constitutional, wholesome and necessary. We do not offer a fixed schedule, but a principle. We will revise the schedule, modify rates, but always with an intelligent provision as to the effect upon domestic production and the wages of our working people. We believe it to be one of the worthy objects of tariff legislation to preserve the American market for American producers, and to maintain the American scale of wages, by adequate, discriminating duties upon foreign competing products. The effect of lower rates and larger importations upon the public revenue is contingent and doubtful, but not so the effect upon American production and American wages. Less work and lower wages must be accepted as the inevitable result of the increased offering of foreign goods in our market. By way of recompense for this reduction in his wages, and the loss of the American market, it is suggested that the diminished wages of the working man will have an undiminished purchasing power, and that he will be able to make up for the loss of the home market by an enlarged foreign market. Our workingmen have the settlement of the question in their own hands. They now obtain higher wages and live more comfortably than those of any other country. They will make choice between the substantial advantages they have in hand and the deceptive promises and forecasts of those theorizing politicians. They will decide for themselves and for the country whether the protective system shall be continued or destroyed. The fact of the amount of which is variously stated, has directed public attention to a consideration of the methods by which the national income may best be reduced to a level of a wise and necessary expenditure. This consideration has been seized upon by those who are hostile to protective custom duties as an advantageous base of attack upon our tariff laws. They have magnified and nursed the surplus, which they affect to deprecate, seemingly for the purpose of exaggerating the evil in order to reconcile the people to the extreme remedy they propose. A proper reduction of the revenue does not necessitate and should not suggest the abandonment or impairment of the protective system. The methods suggested by our convention will not need to be exhausted in order to effect the necessary reduction. We are not likely to be called upon, I think, to make a present choice between the surrender of our protective system and the entire repeal of the internal taxes. Such a contingency, in view of the present relation of expenditures to revenues, is remote. The inspection and regulation of the manufacture of oleomargarine is important, and the revenue derived from it is not so great that the repeal of the law need enter into any plan of revenue reduction. The surplus now in the treasury should be used in the purchase of bonds. The law authorizes this use of it, and if it is not need for current or deficiency appropriations, the people, and not the banks in which it has been deposited, should have the advantage of its use by stopping interest upon the public debt. At least those who needlessly hoard it should not be allowed to use the fear of a monetary stringency, thus produced, to coerce public sentiment upon other questions.

PAUPER IMMIGRATION.

Closely connected with the subject of the tariff is that of the importation of foreign laborers under contracts of service to be performed here. The law now in force prohibiting such contracts received my cordial support in the senate, and such amendments as may be found necessary effectively to deliver our working men and women from this most inequitable form of competition will have my sincere advocacy. Legislation prohibiting the importation of laborers under contracts to serve here will, however, afford very inadequate relief to our working people if the system of protective duties is broken down. If the products of American shops must compete in the American market, without favoring duties, with the products of cheap foreign labor, the effect will be different, if at all, only in degree, whether the cheap laborer is across the street or over the sea. Such competition will soon reduce wages here to the level of those abroad, and when that condition is reached we will not need any laws forbidding the importation of laborers under contract—they will have no inducement to come and the employer no inducement to send for them. In the earlier years of our history public agencies to promote immigration were common. The pioneer wanted a neighbor with more friendly instincts than the Indian. Labor was scarce and fully employed. But the day of the immigration bureau has gone by. While our doors will continue open to proper immigration, we do not need to issue special invitations to the inhabitants of other countries to come to our shores or to share our citizenship. Indeed, the necessity of some

is obvious. We should resolutely refuse to permit foreign governments to send their paupers and criminals to our ports. We are also clearly under a duty to defend our civilization by excluding alien races whose ultimate assimilation with our people is neither possible nor desirable. The family has been the nucleus of our best immigration and the home the most potent assimilating force in our civilization. The objections to Chinese immigration are distinctive and conclusive, and are now so generally accepted as such that the question has passed entirely beyond the stage of argument. The laws relating to this subject would, if I should be charged with their enforcement, be more faithfully executed. Such amendments or further legislation as may be necessary and proper to prevent evasions of the laws and to stop further Chinese immigration would also meet my approval. The expression of the convention upon this subject is in entire harmony with my views. Our civil compact is a government by majorities; and the law loses its sanction and the magistrate our respect when this compact is broken. The evil results of election frauds do not expend themselves upon the voters who are robbed of their rightful influence in public affairs. The individual, or community, or party, that practices or connives at election frauds has suffered irreparable injury and will sooner or later realize that to exchange the American system of majority rule for minority control is not only unlawful and unpatriotic but very unsafe for those who promote it. The disfranchisement of a single legal elector by fraud or intimidation is a crime too grave to be regarded lightly. The right of every qualified elector to cast one free ballot and to have it honestly counted must not be questioned. Every constitutional power should be used to make this right secure and punish frauds upon the ballot. Our colored people do not ask special legislation in their interest, but only to be made secure in the common rights of American citizenship. They will, however, naturally mistrust the sincerity of those party leaders who appeal to their race for support only in those localities where the suffrage is free and election results doubtful and compass their disfranchisement where their votes would be controlling and their choice cannot be coerced. The nation, not less than the states, is dependent for prosperity and security upon the intelligence and morality of the people. This common interest very early suggested national aid in the establishment and endowment of schools and colleges in the new states. There is at present an exigency that calls for still more liberal and direct appropriations in aid of common school education in the states.

TERRITORIAL RIGHTS.

The territorial form of government is a temporary expedient, not a permanent civil condition. It is adapted to the exigency that suggested it, but becomes inadequate and even oppressive when applied to fixed and populous communities. Several territories are well able to bear the burdens and discharge the duties of free commonwealths in the American Union. To exclude them is to deny the just rights of their people, and may well excite their indignant protest. No question of the political preference of the people of a territory should close against them the hospitable door which has opened to two-thirds of the existing states. But admission should be resolutely refused to any territory, a majority of whose people cherish institutions that are repugnant to our civilization, or inconsistent with a republican form of government. The declaration of the convention against "all combinations of capital, organized in trusts or otherwise, to control arbitrarily the condition of trade among our citizens," is in harmony with the views entertained and publicly expressed by me long before the assembling of the convention. Ordinarily capital shares the losses of idleness with labor; but under the operation of the trust, in some of its forms, the wage worker alone suffers loss, while idle capital receives its dividends from a trust fund. Producers who refuse to join the combination are destroyed, and competition as an element of prices is eliminated. It cannot be doubted that the legislative authority should and will find a method of dealing fairly and effectively with these and other abuses connected with this subject. It can hardly be necessary for me to say that I am heartily in sympathy with the declaration of the convention upon the subject of

PENSIONS TO OUR SOLDIERS

and sailors. What they gave and what they suffered I have had some opportunity to observe and, in a small measure, to experience. They gave ungrudgingly; it was not a trade, but an offering. The measure was heaped up, running over. What they achieved, only a distant generation can adequately tell. Without attempting to discuss particular propositions, I may add that measures in behalf of surviving veterans of the war and of the families of their dead comrades should be conceived and executed in a spirit of justice and of the most grateful liberality, and that, in the competition for civil appointment, honorable military service should have appropriate recognition. The law regulating the appointments to the classified civil service received my support in the senate, in the belief that it opened the way to a much needed reform. I still think so, and therefore cordially approve the clear and forcible expression of the convention upon this subject. The law should have the aid of a friendly interpretation, and be faithfully and vigorously enforced. All appointments under it should be absolutely free from partisan considerations and influence. Some extensions of the classified list are practicable and desirable, and further legislation extending the reform to other branches of the service, to which it is applicable, would receive my approval. In appointments to every grade and department fitness, and not party service, should be the essential and discriminating test, and fidelity and efficiency the only sure tenure of office. Only the interests of the public service should suggest removals from office. I know the practical difficulties attending the attempt to apply the spirit of the civil service rules to all appointments and removals. It will, however, be my sincere purpose, if elected, to advance the reform. I notice with pleasure that the convention did not omit to express its solicitude for the promotion of virtue and temperance among our people. The Republican party has always been friendly to everything that tended to make the home life of our people free, pure and prosperous, and will in the future be true to its history in this respect. Our relations with foreign powers should be characterized by friendliness and respect. The right of our people and of our ships to hospitable treatment should be insisted upon with dignity and firmness.

OUR NATION IS TOO GREAT,

both in material strength and in moral power, to indulge in bluster or to be suspected of timorousness. Vacillation and inconsistency are as incompatible with successful diplomacy as they are with the national dignity. We should especially cultivate and extend our diplomatic and commercial relations with the Central and South American states. Our fisheries should be fostered and protected. The hardships and risks that are the necessary incidents of the business should not be increased by an inhospitable exclusion from the near lying ports. The resources of a firm, dignified and consistent diplomacy are undoubtedly equal to the prompt and peaceful solution of the difficulties that now exist. Our neighbors will surely not expect in our ports a commercial hospitality they deny to us in theirs. I cannot extend this letter by a special reference to other subjects upon which the convention gave an expression. In respect to them, as well as those I have noticed, I am in entire agreement with the declarations of the convention. The resolutions relating to the coinage, to the rebuilding of the navy, to coast defenses and to public lands express conclusions to all of which I gave my support in the senate. Inviting a calm and thoughtful consideration of these public questions, we submit them to the people. Their intelligent patriotism and the good Providence that made and has kept us a nation will lead them to wise and safe conclusions. Very respectfully, your obedient servant, BENJAMIN HARRISON.

INDEPENDENT CANADA.

Sir John Macdonald Declares That Canada Can Do Without the United States—A Patriotic Young American Lady.

KINGSTON, Ont., Sept. 11.—The industrial exhibition was formally opened, to-day by Sir John A. Macdonald, who made an address, and, touching on retaliation, said that probably Canada would have to look to its own resources in view of the action of the United States.

"Canadians," he said, "are to be excluded for no act of theirs. Well, if they will not allow us to trade with them, we can trade with ourselves. We are not afraid or dismayed at any threatened attempt to hamper our commerce or cripple our resources. The effect will be the same as was shown after the abrogation of the reciprocity treaty of 1854. It showed that we could rely upon our own resources. While we should like to continue to trade with our neighbors in the freest manner we can afford to do without it, and can afford to wait with calm self-respect the outcome of the matter.

G. A. Kirkpatrick, ex-speaker of the house of commons, endorsed the premier's utterances, saying that Canadians could, with nonchalance, listen to the retaliation discussion, as they could be quite independent of other countries. They wanted to be friendly with the United States, but if the doors were shut they would not growl. Miss Hulda Baker of Syracuse, N. Y., created a feeling of delight by stepping to Sir John's side, grasping his hand, declaring that she was a loyal American, but could tell them that they did not mean to shut the door against him—that that they were going to open it wide. Sir John laughed and said: "I am sure you won't against such a good looking fellow as me." Hon. H. J. Jolly then offered his arm to the lady and conducted her with the premier's party on a tour of inspection of the exhibition.

To Drive out Summer Insects.

The chief drawback to summer is the friendly insect. He converts peace into discomfort, ease into pain, and too frequently piety into profanity. Wire nettings, gauze screens and mosquito canopies he laughs at and scorns pursuers and pursuit. Yet a little aid from chemical science destroys his career of usefulness. To drive and keep flies and mosquitoes from a room may be accomplished by sprinkling an ounce of carbolic acid dissolved in a quart of warm water upon the floor and furniture. A rose syringe or a large atomizer affords the best means of sprinkling. If the odor of the carbolic acid is unpleasant oil of pennyroyal is the next best "insectifuge." Below this are the oils of peppermint and thyme. Carbolated vaseline or oil of pennyroyal rubbed upon the hands and face will keep away the little pests. To remove the pain of mosquito bites, strong ammonia should be applied to the puncture. Ether dropped or rubbed on the inflamed surface evaporates rapidly, and generally stops the smarting. Nearly all the strong essential oils used in toothache are of great value in this regard. Creosote, oil of cloves, cinnamon, pennyroyal, peppermint and thyme, laudanum and petroleum, either readily give greater or less relief. The various preparations in the market such as mosquito banisher, anti-mosquito, insecticide, insectifuge, &c., are made from the articles mentioned, and are each and all good in their way. Most of them, however, cost more than a person can buy their ingredients for. They are very convenient, nevertheless, and should be carried into the country by travellers proposing to go far from civilization.

The Genuine Yankee Type.

Opinions differ among students as to the effects of the fearful flood of immigration from Italy, Poland and such countries. It seems to me that one might as well hesitate as to the certain effect of a break in the walls of the Mississippi river. Mr. Curtis' phrase about "watering the life blood of the nation" contains an argument. To understand his meaning one wants to go to Boston. Go into the Faneuil hall and the old State house for a look at the pictures of typical Yankees. Then go out into the streets and search for their kindred. In the long procession which fill Tremont and Washington streets you may see once in an hour the splendid heads which are related to the genuine Yankee type. Frequently good average faces are seen. But everywhere you are made to feel that the real New Englander is not in the majority in New England. The life blood of this country is "watered."

Systematic Training for Babies.

The president of a large orphan asylum in New York city, in which the children are unusually healthy, asked a physician how he accounted for it. "It is very easy," he replied; "the children have no mothers to look after them and spoil their little stomachs with candies and other improper food. Besides, they are fed and trained systematically with you, which fond mammas often overlook."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Monday, Sept. 10.

SENATE.—Discussion of the Chinese exclusion bill occupied most of the time of the Senate, and led to the passage of bitter personalities between Senators Morgan and Mitchell. The Senate adjourned without action on the bill, leaving it just where it was last Friday at the time of adjournment—passed, but with a motion pending to reconsider the vote by which it was passed.

Mr. Morgan introduced a bill appropriating $276,000 to compensate Chinese subjects in the United States for losses and injuries received at the hands of lawless men. He then addressed the Senate in explanation and support of the bill, and on the subject of the pending bill for the absolute exclusion of the Chinese.

HOUSE.—The bill introduced by Representative Oates to amend the naturalization laws, provides among other things, that no alien who has ever been legally convicted of any infamous crime or misdemeanor involving moral turpitude or who has immigrated to the United States in violation of the laws thereof, or who cannot speak the English language and read the constitution of the United States in English or who is a polygamist, anarchist, socialist, or communist or belongs to any society or association of such shall be naturalized or adjudged by any court to be a citizen of the United States or of any state: nor shall any alien be naturalized who has continuously for six years next preceding such adjudication resided within the United States.

Tuesday, September 11.

SENATE.—The house amendment to the senate bill for a pension to the widow of Gen. Heintzleman, reducing the amount from $100 to $75 per month, was non-concurred in and a conference was ordered.

Mr. Sherman, from the committee on finance, reported the senate bill to declare unlawful trusts and combinations in restraint of trade and production. Placed on the calendar.

The senate passed the "Fourth of July" claims bill—a bill to reimburse those who suffered damage in small amounts during the war. Senator Blair entered a motion to reconsider, and then went into a criticism of the speed with which the bill was passed.

HOUSE.—The house resumed the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, the pending amendment being that relative to the reclaiming of the arid region.

Mr. Blount, of Georgia, made an earnest appeal for economy in the public expenditures, declaring that a waste of the public money and a reduction of taxation were utterly inconsistent.

Wednesday, Sep. 12.

SENATE.—As far as can be learned the senate tariff bill will not be reported before the last of the month. It was expected that it would be reported to the full committee to-day, but there has been a great demand for hearings, and the sub-committee has agreed to accord them. It is further asserted that the Republicans are so well satisfied with the result in Maine that they will take their time in formulating a bill, and will make no efforts to rush it in order to demonstrate to the country what they intend to do.

Mr. George offered an amendment to the trust bill reported consisting of four additional sections, one of which empowers the president to suspend the operation of the tariff laws in relation to any article, the price of which is, in his opinion, being affected by any combination of domestic manufacturers or merchants. A debate on this amendment took the form of a political discussion, in which Senator Hoar referred to the interest which he said the Standard Oil company had in the cabinet of the present administration and in the Democratic party generally. Senator Payne replied to Senator Hoar, making what he said was the first and last denial of his supposed interest in the Standard Oil Company.

HOUSE.—The clause for the irrigation of arid lands, which has been debated with vehemence in the house for two days, was today agreed to, after the senate amendment has been so amended as to appropriate $100,000 for the investigation for which the geological survey asked $250,000. The amendment offered by Breckinridge of Kentucky by which the lands subjected to irrigation should be reserved to the government was adopted.

Thursday, Sept. 13.

SENATE.—The Republicans have made a new departure in the matter of trusts in the senate in a resolution which has been introduced by Mr. Platt of Connecticut, who asked that the committee on finance be directed to make an inquiry as to the copper trust. Mr. Platt has some private information in his possession as to the great trust which shows that it is controlled exclusively by prominent politicians.

Mr. Jones of Nevada spoke in favor of the immediate passage of the Chinese exclusion bill. He spoke from personal observance, and from the heart of the evils which Chinese have inflicted upon the Pacific coast.

Dakota made a probably final appearance so far as the question of admission is concerned in the house this evening at the time when Mr Springer was making his fight towards the close of the day's session for the Oklahoma bill. Mr. Baker, a member of the committee on territories, desired to know if it would be in order to raise the question of consideration of the Dakota admission bill as against the Oklahoma measure. He thought that the chairman of the committee on territories was showing a good deal of zeal in trying to get a lot of savages under the protection of a form of government which would be practically useless to them, while 500,000 people in Dakota were deprived of the right of self-government. The speaker replied that the motion would not be in order.

HOUSE.—The house passed the senate bill amending the interstate commere bill. The Northwestern members took a very active part in the debate, and, indeed, nearly the entire burden of the discussion was carried on by Western and Northwestern members. Messrs. Macdonald, Wilson, Lind and Nelson all took an active part in the talk, and La Follette and Haugen also joined in the discussion.

Friday, Sept. 14.

SENATE.—Among the bills passed by the Senate to-day were the following:

The House bill providing boards of arbitration to settle differences between interstate railroads and their employes upon application of either party to the controversy.

The Senate bill to declare forfeited certain lands granted to the State of Michigan to aid in the construction of a railroad from Ontonagon to the Wisconsin state line.

The Senate bill authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada and the territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes.

HOUSE.—The House amendments to the interstate commerce act were non-concurred in, and Messrs. Cullom, Platt and Harris were appointed as a conference committee. In answer to the resolution introduced by Delegate Dubois calling for information respecting convictions and pardons for polygamy, the attorney general has replied in a communication in which he says that under the provisions of the anti-polygamy law of 1882 and its amendments there have been in the territory of Utah 470 convictions for polygamy, adultery and unlawful cohabitation with fines imposed and 30 convictions where the sentence was imprisonment without fine, making a total for the territory of 500. In Idaho there was a total of 89 cases. There have been 14 pardons granted by the President to persons convicted under the above mentioned acts. Fines to the amount of $48,208 have been collected and forfeitures of $25,000.

A majority of a quorum of the House committee on invalid pensions today decided to recommend to the House the bill granting a pension to Theresa Herbst, widow of John Herbst, late private in company G, 14th regiment, New York volunteers, be passed over the President's vote. The deceased died in 1868 of heart disease. He was a soldier in the union army until he was captured by the enemy on the 19th of August, 1864, when he joined the confederate forces.

Saturday, Sept. 15.

SENATE.—The senate does not appear disposed to take hurried action in the matter of the retaliation bill. All that has been done is to refer the bill to the committee on foreign relations. The committee postponed action to await an answer from the president to the resolution of Senator Hoar as to the question of the fact whether there had been any recent outrages committed upon American fishermen and whether there had been any seizures of American fishing vessel during the season which has just closed.

HOUSE.—There is a contest in the house between the appropriations committee, which has in charge the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the friends of the Oklahoma bill.

Defying the Alabama.

From the Detroit Free Press.

I was one of the first men who signed papers with the much-valued confederate cruiser, the Alabama, and my service in her did not end until she sailed into an English port with the confederate flag flying. You will thus realize that I participated in the capture of several dozen federal merchantmen and whalers. There was a sameness about our manner of making captures which we were glad to have broken now and then. It was rarely that a vessel was overhauled during the night. If we were in chase of her we simply kept her in sigit, or tried to, until daylight came. While we could not anticipate any stubborn resistance, the right sort of a skipper might fire a volley into a boat's crew or go to some other uncomfortable extreme. As a rule we had only to close in on our victim, fire a solid shot across his course, and he would heave to, and put the best possible face on a bad matter. The first lieutenant would be sent off to him with a boat and half a dozen marines, and in the course of half an hour his fate would be decided. If it was thought best to bond him the papers were made out and signed, and he was permitted to go his way. If his craft was to be destroyed, the men were allowed to bring up their clothing and knick-knacks, the officers to pack up their personal effects, and inside of an hour the craft would be ablaze, and we would be sailing a way in search of another victim.

When we ran around in search of whalers we came upon a yankee skipper who didn't know what surrender meant. We were just well to the west of the stormy cape, when, one morning after breakfast, we raised a whaler. He was headed up the coast, and about noon we overhauled him. He paid no attention to the first shot, and it was only when the second one hulled him that he came into the wind. It was then seen that he had fifteen or sixteen men abroad, and that all were armed with muskets and meant to defend the ship. The Lieutenant was sent off with his boat, but no sooner was he within fair musket range than the whaler opened on him, killing one man and wounding two at the first volley. The officer pushed ahead and demanded a surrender, but he got another volley and the reply that the whaler "would go to the bottom before he would surrender to a d—— rebel!"

The boat was recalled, and our gunners were instructed to hull the whaler with solid shot. We approached him within rifle rang and opened fire. Every one of the balls plumped through the side at and above the water line, and he answered with his muskets, severely wounding two men. He was repeatedly hailed to surrender, but in reply he encouraged his men to maintain their fire. We soon had the sea pouring into his starboard side through a dozen holes, and when it was seen that he would soon go down we ceased firing and again demanded his surrender. I can remember just how he looked as he sprang upon the rail—tall, gaunt, hair flying and eyes blazing, and shouted in reply:

"The Ben. Scott don't surrender? Come and take us—if you can."

Five minutes later his craft settled down bow first. We lowered the boats to save his crew, and strangely enough not a man was lost. When we brought them aboard the Yankee skipper walked up to Semmes, bareheaded, barefooted and coatless, and said:

"If I'd only have had one old cannon aboard we'd have licked ye out of yer butes! Here we are, and what are ye going to do with us?"

He was voted a jolly good fellow, and the crew were better treated than any other ever forced aboard. In order to give them their liberty the next capture we made was bonded, and they were put aboard to sail for home.

Laughing at Ma.

Miss Birdie McHennipin is one of the belles of Austin. Her intellect, however, does not tower into the sublime heights reached by Susan B. Anthony, but, to use the cold language of truthfulness, she is very much the same kind of a young lady that Gus De Smith is a young man. Not long since he proposed matrimony. He proposed in good faith, in a solemn, impressive manner, upon which Miss Birdie inaugurated a giggle, until Gus was very much disgusted, and arising from his knees, his anger found vent in words. He was mad, too mad almost to speak. "Miss Hennipin, he finally ejaculated, "with me this is no laughing matter. Why should you see anything ridiculous about it?" "You must excuse me, Mr. De Smith—really you must, for I am not laughing at you; really, now, I am not. Ma's so funny, you know. Really, she is just too funny for any use. Yes, I was laughing at ma." "At your ma?" "Yes; you see ma told me only this morning, 'Birdie, you are so green that donkey will take you yet,' and here you come.—" But he was gone. He was in the past tense. It was he who banged the door so violently. "I wonder," said the suddenly deserted Birdie. "I wonder, now, really, if he is offended at what ma said? But then ma always was too awfully funny for any kind of use."—Texas Siftings.

A Surprise for the Teacher.

Boston Herald.

I heard of a young teacher in one of the public schools the other day who suffers all the pleasures and inconveniences of being idolized by her boys, and it seemed as though it must be much more pleasant to be a little less adored after being told of some of her experiences. The children demonstrate their affection in various ways peculiar to shy young innocents who must walk, breathe and speak according to public school discipline. One of their greatest pleasures is "giving the teacher something." Winter or summer this very popular teacher's desk is covered with childish, boyish tokens that show an inherent spirit of gallantry which is quite touching—in the abstract. The other morning a little chap sidled up to the desk with a box in his little red paw, and pressing it into his teacher's hand, said in a whisper: "There, I've brought 'em for you." "What is it, dear?" said the teacher. "Oh, you look!" with a grin of satisfaction. Untying the string she opened the box, and behold, there was a set of false teeth! "They are mamma's," explained the child in a delightful tone; "they're much prettier than yours, and I brought 'em to you."

NATURAL HISTORY.

Dr. Talmage on the Deer Hunt in his First Post-Vacation Sermon.

A Wide, Deep and Glorious Lake of Divine Solace and Rescue Whither all May Flee.

The Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D.D. has returned from his summer vacation, and Sunday morning at the Brooklyn Tabernacle, he expounded passages illustrative of Solomon's acquaintance with natural history.

His text was: Psalm xlii., 1: "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God." Dr. Talmage said:

David who must some time have seen a deer hunt, points us here to a hunted stag making for the water. The fascinating animal called in my text the hart, is the same animal that in sacred and profane literature is called the stag, the roebuck, the hind, the gazelle, the reindeer. In Central Syria, in Bible time, there were whole pasture fields of them, as Solomon suggests when he says, "I charge you by the hinds of the field." Their antlers jutted from the long grass as they lay down. No hunter who has been long in "John Brown's track," will wonder that in the Bible they were classed among clean animals, for the dews, the showers, the lakes, washed them as clean as the sky. When Jacob, the patriarch, longed for venison, Esau shot and brought home a roebuck. Isaiah compares the sprightliness of the restored cripple of millennial times to the long and quick jump of the stage, saying: "The lame shall leap as the heart." Solomon expressed his disgust at a hunter who having shot a deer is too lazy to cook it, saying: "The slothful man roasteth not that which he took in hunting." But one day David, while far from the home from which he had been driven, and sitting near the door of a lonely cave where he had lodged, and on the banks of a pond or river, hears a pack of hounds in swift pursuit. Because of the previous silence of the forest the clangor startles him, and he says to himself: "I wonder what those dogs are after." Then there is a crackling in the brushwood, and the loud breathing of some rushing wonder of the woods, and the antlers of a deer rend the leaves of the thicket, and by an instinct which all hunters recognize, plunges into a pond or lake or river to cool its thirst, and at the same time by its capacity for swifter and longer swimming, to get away from the foaming harriers. David says to himself: "Aha, that is myself! Saul after me, Absalom after me, enemies without number after me, I am chased, their bloody muzzles at my heels, barking at my good name, barking after my body, barking after my soul. Oh, the hounds, the hounds! But look there," says David, "that reindeer has splashed into the water. It puts its hot lips and nostrils into the cool wave that washes the lathered flanks, and it swims away from the fiery canines, and it is free at last. Oh, that I might find in the deep, wide lake of God's mercy and consolation escape from my pursuers! Oh, for the waters of life and rescue! As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God."

I have just come from the Adirondacks and the breath of the balsam and spruce and pine is still on me. The Adirondacks are now populous with hunters, and the deer are being slain by the score. Talking a few days ago with a hunter, I thought I would like to see whether my text was accurate in its allusions, and as I heard the dogs baying a little way off and supposed they were on the track of a reindeer, I said to the hunter in rough corduroy: "Do the deer always make for the water when they are pursued?" He said: "O, yes, mister, you see they are a hot and thirsty animal, and they know where the water is, and when they hear danger in the distance they lift their antlers and snuff the breeze and start for the Racquet, or Loon or Saranac; and we get into our cedar shell boat or stand by the 'runway' with rifle loaded ready to blaze away." My friends, that is one reason why I like the Bible so much—its allusions are so true to nature. Its partridges are real partridges, its ostriches, and its reindeer real reindeer. I do not wonder that this antlered glory of the text makes the hunter's eye sparkle and his cheek glow and his respiration quicken. To say nothing of its usefulness, although it is the most useful of all game, its flesh delicious, its skin turned into human apparel, its sinews fashioned into bowstrings, its antlers putting handles on cutlery, and the shavings of its horns used as a restorative taken from the name of the hart and called hartshorn. But putting aside its usefulness, this enchanting creature seems made out of gracefulness and elasticity. What an eye, what a liquid brightness, as if gathered up from a hundred lakes of sunset! The horns, a coronal branching into every possible curve, and after it seems done, advancing into other projections of exquisiteness, a tree of polished bone, uplifted in pride, or swung down for awful combat. It is velocity embodied. Timidity impersonated. The enchantment of the woods. Eye lustrous in life and pathetic in death. The splendid animal a complete rhythm of muscle, and bone, and color, and attitude, and locomotion, whether couched in the grass among the shadows, or a living bolt shot through the forest, or turning at bay to attack the hounds, or rearing for its last fall under the buckshot of the trapper. It is a splendid appearance that the painter's pencil fails to sketch; and only a hunter's dream on a pillow of hemlock at the foot of St. Regis is able to picture. When, 20 miles from any settlement it comes down at eventide to the lake's edge to drink among the lily pads, and, with its sharp-edged hoof, shatters the crystal of Long Lake, it is very picturesque. But only when, after miles of pursuit, with heaving sides and lolling tongue, and eyes swimming in death, the stag leaps from the cliff into Upper Saranac, can you realize how much David had suffered from his troubles, and how much he wanted God when he expressed himself in the words of the text: "As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God."

Well, now, let all those who have coming after them the lean hounds of poverty, or the black hounds of presecution, or the spotted hounds of vicissitude, or the pale hounds of death or who are in any wise pursued, fly to the wide, deep, glorious lake of divine solace and rescue. The most of the men and women whom I happen to know at different times, if not now, have had trouble after them, sharp muzzled troubles, swift troubles, all-devouring troubles. Many of you have made the mistake of trying to fight them. Somebody meanly attacked you, and you attacked them; they depreciated you, and you depreciated them; or they overreached you in a bargain, and you tried, in Wall street parlance, to get a corner on them; or you have had a bereavement, and, instead of being submissive, you are fighting that bereavement; you charge on the doctors who failed to effect a cure; or you charge on the carelessness of the railroad company through which the accident occurred; or you are a chronic invalid, and you fret and worry and scold, and wonder why you cannot be well like other people, and you angrily charge on the neuralgia or the laryngitis, or the ague, or the sick headache. The fact is you are a deer at bay. Instead of running to the waters of divine consolation, and slaking your thirst and cooling your body and soul in the good cheer of the gospel, and swimming away into the mighty deeps of God's love, you are fighting a whole kennel of harriers.

I saw whole chains of lakes in the Adirondacks, and from one height you can see thirty, and there are said to be over 800 in the great wilderness. So near are they to each other that your mountain guide picks up and carries the boat from lake to lake, the small distance between them for that reason called a "carry." And the realm of God's word is one long chain of bright, refreshing lakes; each promise a lake, a very short carry between them, and though for ages the pursued have been drinking out of them, they are full up to the top of the green banks, and the same David describes them, and they seem so near together that in three different places he speaks of them as a continuous river, saying: "There is a river the streams whereof shall make glad the city of God;" "thou shalt make them drink of the rivers of thy pleasures;" "thou greatly enrichest it with the river of God which is full of water."

But many of you have turned your back on that supply, and confront your trouble, and you are soured with your circumstances, and you are frightening society, and you are frightening a pursuing world and troubles, instead of driving you into the cool lake of heavenly comfort have made you stop and turn round and lower your head, and it is simply antler against tooth. I do not blame you. Probably under the same circumstances I would have done worse. But you are all wrong. You need to do as the reindeer does in February and March—it sheds its horns. The Rabbinical writers allude to this resignation of antlers by the stag when they say of a man who ventures his money in risky enterprises, he has hung it on the stag's horns; that a proverb in the far East tells a man who has foolishly lost his fortune to go and find where the deer shed her horns. My brother, quit the antagonism of your circumstances, quit misanthropy, quit complaint, quit pitching into your pursuers, be as wise as, next spring, will be all the reindeer of the Adirondacks. Shed your horns.

But very many of you who are wronged of the world—and if in any assembly between Sandy Hook, New York, and Golden Gate, San Francisco, it were asked that those that had been sometime badly treated should raise both their hands, and full response should be made, there would be twice as many hands lifted as persons present—I say many of you would declare: "We have always done the best we could and tried to be useful, and why we should become the victims of malignant or invalidism, or mishap, is inscrutable." Why, do you not know that the finer a deer, and the more elegant its proportions, that the more beautiful its bearing, the more anxious the hunters and hounds are to capture it. Had that roebuck a ragged fur and broken hoofs and an obliterated eye and a limping gate, the hunters would have said: "Pshaw! don't let us waste our ammunition on a sick deer." And the hounds would have given a few sniffs of the track and then darted off in another direction for better game. But when they see a deer with antlers lifted in mighty challenge to earth and sky, and the sleek hide looks as if it had been smoothed by invisible hands, and the fat sides inclose the richest pasture that could be nibbled from the banks of rills so clear they seem to have dropped out of heaven, and the stamp of its foot defies the jack-shooting lantern and the rifle, the horn and the hound, that deer they will have if they must needs break their neck in the rapids. So if there were no noble stuff in your make-up, if you were a bifurcated nothing, if you were a forlorn failure, you would be allowed to go undisturbed; but the fact that the whole pack is in full cry after you is proof positive that you are a splendid game and worth capturing. Therefore sarcasm draws on you its "finest bead." Therefore the world goes gunning for you with its best Maynard breech-loader. Highest compliment is it to your talent, or your virtue, or your usefulness. You will be assailed in proportion to your great achievements. The greatest and mightiest being the world ever saw had set after him all the hounds, terrestial and diabolic, and they lapped his blood after the Calarean massacre. The world paid nothing to its Redeemer but a bramble and a cross. Many who have done their best to make the world better have had such a rough time of it that all their pleasure is in anticipation of the next world, and they would if they could express their own feelings in the words of the Baroness of Nairn at the close of her long life:

"Would you be young again?
So would not I;
One tear of memory given,
Onward I'll hie;
Life's dark wave forded o'er,
All but at rest on shore,
Say, would you plunge once more
With home so nigh?

"If you might, would you now
Retrace your way?
Wander through stormy wilds,
Faint and astray?
Night's gloomy fled,
Morning all beaming red.
Hope smile around us shed,
Heavenward, away!"

But what is a relief for all these pursuits of trouble, and annoyance, and pain and bereavement? My text gives it to you in a word of three letters, but each letter is a chariot if you would triumph, a throne if you want to be crowned, or a lake if you would slake your thirst—yea, a chain of three letters—G-o-d, the One for whom David longed, and the One whom David found. You might as well meet a stag which, after its sixth mile of running at the topmost speed through thicket and gorge, and with the breath of the dogs on its heels, has come in full sight of Scroon Lake and tried to cool its projecting and blistered tongue with a drop of dew from a blade of grass, as to attempt to satisfy an immortal soul, when flying from trouble and sin, with anything less deep, and high, and broad, and immense, and infinite, and eternal than God. His comfort, why it embosoms all distress. His arm, it wrenches off all bondage. His hand, it wipes away all tears. His Christly atonement, it makes us all right with the past, and all right with the future, and all right forever. Lamartine tells us that King Nimrod said to his three sons: "Here are three vases, and one is of clay, another of amber, and another of gold. Choose now which you will have." The eldest son, having the first choice, chose the vase of gold, on which was written the word "empire," and when opened it was found to contain human blood. The second son, having the next choice, chose the vase of amber, inscribed with the word "glory," and when opened it contained the ashes of those who were once called great. The third son took the vase of clay, and opening it, found it empty, but on the bottom of it was inscribed the name of God. King Nimrod asked his courtiers which vase they thought weighed the most. The avaricious men of his court said the vase of gold. The poets said the one of amber. But the wisest men said the empty vase, because one letter of the name of God outweighed a universe.

For Him I thirst; for His grace I beg; on His promise I build my all. Without Him I cannot be happy. I have tried the world and it does well enough as far as it goes, but it is too uncertain a world. I have been one of the most unfortunate, or, to use a more Christian word, one of the most blessed of men, blessed in my parents, blessed in the place of my nativity, blessed in my health, blessed in my field of work, blessed in my natural temperament, blessed in my family, blessed in my opportunities, blessed in a comfortable livelihood, blessed in the hope that my soul will go to heaven through the pardoning mercy of God, and my body, unless it be lost at sea or cremated in some conflagration, will I lie down in the gardens of Greenwood among my kindred and friends, some already gone and others to come after me. Life to many has been a disappointment, but to me it has been a pleasant surprise, and yet I declare that if I did not feel that God was now my friend and ever present help, I should be wretched and terror-struck. But I want more of Him. I have thought over this text and preached this sermon to myself until with all the aroused energies of my body, mind and soul, I can cry out: As the hart panteth after the water brooks, so panteth my soul after Thee, O God."

Through Jesus Christ make this God your God and you can withstand anything and everything; and that which affrights others will inspire you. As in time of earthquake when an old Christian woman was asked whether she was cared, answered: "No, I am glad that I have a God who can shake the world," or as in a financial panic, when a Christian merchant was asked if he did not fear he would break, answered: "Yes, I shall break when the fiftieth Psalm breaks in the fifteenth verse: 'Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee and thou shalt glorify me.'" O Christian men and women, pursued of annoyances and exasperations, remember that this hunt, whether a still hunt or a hunt in full cry, will soon be over. If ever a whelp looks ashamed and, ready to slink out of sight it is when in the Adirondacks a deer by one long, tremendous plunge into Big Tupper lake gets away from him. The disappointed canine swims in a little way, out, defeated, swims out again and cringes with humiliated yawn at the feet of his master. And how abashed and ashamed will all your earthly troubles be when you have dashed into the river from under the throne of God, and the heights and depths of heaven are between you and your pursuers. We are told in Revelation, 22d and 15th, "Without are dogs," by which I conclude there is a whole kennel of hounds outside of the gate of heaven, or, as when a master goes in a door, his dog lies on the step waiting for him to come out, so the troubles of this life may follow us to the shining door, but they cannot get in. "Without are dogs!" I have seen dogs, and owned dogs, that I would not be chagrined to see in the heavenly city. Some of the grand old watchdogs who are the constabulary of the homes in solitary places, and for years have been the only protection of wife and child; some of the shepherd dogs that drive back the wolves and bark away the flocks from going too near the precipice; and some of the dogs whose neck and paw Landseer, the painter, has made immortal, would not find me shutting them out from the gate of this [illegible] St. Bernard dogs that have lifted perishing travelers out of the Alpine snow; the dog that John Brown, the Scotch essayist, saw ready to spring at the surgeon lest, in removing the cancer, he too much hurt the poor woman whom the dog felt bound to protect; and dogs that we caressed in childhood days, or that in later time laid down on the rug in seeming sympathy when our homes were desolated. I say, if some entering heaven should happen to leave the gate ajar and these faithful creatures should quietly walk in, it would not at all disturb my heaven. But all those human or brutal hounds that have chased and torn and lacerated the world; yea, all that now bite or worry or tear to pieces, shall be prohibited. "Without are dogs!" No place there for harsh critics or back biters or despoilers of the reputation of others. Down with you to the kennels of darkness and despair! The heart has reached the eterna water brooks, and the panting of the long chase is quieted in still pastures, and "There shall be nothing to hunt or destroy in all God's holy mount."

Oh, when some of you get there it will be like what a hunter tells of when he was pushing his canoe far up north in the winter and amid the ice-floes, and a hundred miles, as he thought, from any other human being. He was startled one day as he heard a stepping on the ice, and he cocked the rifle ready to meet anything that came near and found a man, barefooted and insane from long exposure, approaching him. Taking him into his canoe and kindling fires to warm him, he restored him and found out where he lived, and took him to his home, and found all the village in great excitement. A hundred men were searching for this lost man, and his family and friends rushed out to meet him; and as had been agreed at his first appearance, bells were rung and guns were discharged, and banquets spread, and the rescuer loaded with presents. Well, when some of you step out of this wilderness, where you have been chilled and torn and sometimes lost amid the icebergs, into the warm greetings of all the villages of the glorified, and your friends rush out to give you welcoming kiss, the news that there is another soul forever saved will call the caterers of heaven to spread the banquet, and the bell men to lay hold of the rope in the tower, and while the chalices click at the feast, and the bells clang from the towers, it will be a scene so uplifting I pray God, I may be there to take in the celestial merriment. And now do you not think the prayer in Solomon's song, where he compared Christ to a reindeer coming down in the night to pasture on the plains, would make an exquisitely appropriate peroration to my sermon: "Until the day break and the shadows flee away, be thou like a roe or a young hart upon the mountains of Bether."

Eating Singed Flesh.

From Blackwood's Magazine

I went into one of the stone-built recesses, where several of our Tartars were crouching around a small grass-root fire, and was considerably edified by watching them cooking and dispatching their morning repast. To begin with a very dirty copper vessel was put on the fire and filled with some green weed like nettles, barley, flour, and water. While one of the men stirred this pottage round and round with a wooden ladle another produced some raw meat—a bit of the dog I had shot. This he proceeded to tear up into small strips and throw them on the fire, every now and then popping a raw lump into his mouth and masticating it with the greatest gusto. Even the bits on the fire were quickly disposed of after being merely singed. As soon as the pottage was considered ready it was ladled out into little wooden cups like the whisky "quaighs" of the highlands. After being replenished again and again until the pot was emptied, the cups were carefully licked clean and redeposited where they had been before the meal. Another course of flesh was about to be partaken of after the manner of the first, but a regard for my appetite for breakfast prevented my waiting to see the performance. These hardy Tartars are quite independent of any other dishes beyond their little wooden bowls. In these they mix their suttoo (meal made from barley) with a little water and salt and make an expeditions repast of it whenever they feel hungry. Indeed this kind of uncooked porridge seems to be their staple food.

Of the proposed Sullivan-Kilrain match the New York World says: "Sullivan, who is now in Boston, has been in communication for several days with the head of a syndicate here, and has not only agreed to go on with the match, but also to come to New York within a few days to arrange details. Kilrain is ready to make a match at any time."

Referring to the claim of the dominion government to the St. Clair Flats canal, R. Stevenson, formerly representative of Kent county in the dominion parliament, said that there was not a shadow of a doubt as to the equity of Canada's claim. "In 1870," he continued, "I drew the attention of the dominion parliament to the seizure of two Canadian vessels by the United States authorities for landing a cargo of timber at a point on the new canal without paying duty. The dominion authorities contended that the section of the canal where the seizure was made was in Canadian territory, and the vessels were released after the United States government had satisfied itself as to the legality of the seizure. For twenty years the game and fishery overseers of the dominion have had full charge of that section of the St. Clair Flats through which the new canal runs and their right of jurisdiction has never been questioned by the United States authorities."

The International Plumbers' union closed its session at Milwaukee. The sessions have all been secret. A delegate said the convention had been enthusiastic, and the reports showed prosperity. The incorporation of the union was completed at this session. W. H. Halsey was appointed manager of the Milwaukee cooperative shops.

A disastrous fire broke out in the sash and door factory of Day, Huber & Cracker on Main street San Francisco. The entire fire department of the city was called out and battled with the flames three hours before the fire was gotten under control. The burnt district embraces two whole blocks, which were entirely consumed, and three blocks which are almost a total loss. The fire started from a spark which dropped among the shavings. The loss is estimated at $1,250,000. The latest and closest estimate places the total loss at $1,000,000, with an insurance of $200,000. About two thousand men are thrown out of employment. One man was burned to death in the flames.

Hoppe, the Montana murderer, left Winnipeg for Fort Benton in charge of an officer from that place, he having been extradited.

No. 18, through freight from the west, had a smashup at Verndale. The train, which was a long one, separated about midway, and the front section was running but a few lengths ahead of the rear. The engineer slowed up as he passed the station, and the result was a collision, demolishing two cars and damaging fifteen others. Fifteen tramps stealing a ride in a box car had a narrow escape. The passenger was delayed here three hours and a half.

Cashier Allan, of the defunct Central bank of Toronto has been granted protection from the crown and will come from St. Paul and give evidence against ex-Broker E. S. Cox.

David H. Bennett, aged seventy-four years, a broker at 66 Wall street, New York, was found murdered in his bed at his residence. The old man's skull had been fractured with some heavy instrument. The case is strangely like the Nathan murder in New York twenty years ago, and may prove as great a mystery.

It is rumored that Emperor William has authorized Dr. Bergmann to publish a further reply to Dr. Mackenzie's coming book if necessary.

The German press devotes much space to comments on the fishery dispute between the United States and Canada. A majority of the papers disapprove of a rejection of the treaty, but conclude that it is merely a party move, and will be without serious results.

Republican Roasters.

Disgusted of Course.

Having seen Democracy tried, they are disgusted. That is the meaning of the returns thus far, and it is likely to be the meaning of the returns in November.—New York Tribune.

Make a Note of It.

Please make a note of this: The 163 congressmen who voted for the Mills bill received when elected 2,108,498 votes.

The 149 congressmen who voted against the bill received when elected 2,478,310 votes.

Which is Preferable.

In Leeds, England, a free trade city, population 320,000, not one laboring man or mechanic owns his home.—Testimony of Chief of Police.

In Philadelphia, Penn., a protection city, 170,000 homes are owned by working people.—Hon. Charles O'Neill.

One Republican Blessing.

Edward Atkinson, the noted statistician, in a magazine article just published, shows that the purchasing power of the wages obtained by the different classes of workingmen now is from 40 to 70 per cent. greater than in 1860, in the last year in which the democratic party was in power before the Cleveland regime began.

John Bull's Dream of Happiness.

We here are interested in this thing a good deal. If America opens her ports to the manufactured goods of this country [Great Britain] it will give a great impetus to trade. We will soon flood the Yankee markets with cheap clothes, cheap hardware, cheap boots and shoes and other articles that we can manufacture more cheaply than they. We will be gainers by this. So, by all means, let us pray for the success of the Free-Trade policy of Cleveland.—Glasgow (Scotland) Observer.

Jekyll Losing His Strength.

The sending of the ten thousand-dollar check was a sign that Jekyll is fast losing his strength and must soon succumb. It will not be many days, now, before we shall have a letter in which nothing will be said concerning "the allurements of power," and "the temptation to retain public places once gained," but in which the nomination for a second term will be eagerly, even greedily, accepted. The letter will be signed by Jekyll, but we shall all recognize between the lines the cunning and unscrupulous hand of Edward Hyde.—N. Y. Tribune.

Fair Warning.

A Missouri Bourbon paper says the wheel organization is strong in the southern counties of the state, and warns the democrats to beware the nones of November. The warning comes too late. The free trade propaganda of Cleveland, Mills and their congeners have arrayed under the republican banner all the elements which prefer this country to England, Italy, China or any other nation of Europe or Asia. Even in Missouri this is going to be a glorious year for the republicans.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Spare the Aged.

It was proved in Madison Square Garden that the venerable Allen G. Thurman is no fit subject to be hauled about the country like a dime museum curiosity to make votes for a man who has not half the claims upon his party or upon the respect of the country that he has. This fact needed no corroboration to those who witnessed Judge Thurman's appearance in this city. It was one of the most pitiful spectacles ever witnessed in public life—this old man who had been neglected and snubbed during the period of his power for usefulness, hauled and jostled by the rough crowd in his dotage, while his anxious son stood by, with watch in hand, counting the trying moments of his painful efforts to make a good appearance to the world. The Democrats of the country will agree that if the man in the White House wants help he should help himself and not allow a feeble old man to be dragooned into the service. As for the Old Roman, a pitying world will cry shame that his place for him is at home in quiet with his good wife. The days of his activity and of his intellectual capacity are over.—Toledo Commercial.

Missouri's Curse.

Mr. Blaine is reported to have said that if he thought there was any show of carrying Missouri for Harrison and Morton he would come here and make some speeches, but as he did not think it likely, he would give his time to states where his services would count for something.

Perhaps Mr. Blaine is right in thinking that Missouri is helpless in the grasp of the Bourbons. It is unquestionably the fact that this impression prevails very generally and it is an exceedingly unfortunate thing for the state that it does. It has immeasurably retarded its development, and until the people of the state appreciate the situation and rise in their might and free themselves from its ruinous influence, the state can never hope to occupy the position which its great natural resources entitle it to.—Kansas City Journal.

President Cleveland's Apology.

President Cleveland began in December with an attack; he opens in September with an apology. His letter of acceptance is one long excuse for his December message. The country has waited three months to learn if he had the courage of his convictions as a Free-trader; it finds that he is only conscious of his perils as a candidate. Ten months ago he was anxious to show how near to Free Trade he could go; he is anxious to show how much of a Protectionist he is. Where he once denounced "Tariff laws, the vicious, illogical and inequitable source of unnecessary taxation," he is fain now to declare that he has "no intention "to discredit the system." Where last December he felt justified in charging against the vast body of citizens engaged in manufactures "that they can hardly complain of a suspicion, entertained to a certain extent, that there exists an organized combination all along the line to maintain their advantage," he now predicates the utmost care for established industries and enterprises."

This is the change which Oregon, Rhode Island, Vermont and Maine have wrought. This is the lesson which the people have taught in every election since the message was written. This is the warning which sounds in the rising tide of popular protest against the assault made by the President in December and repented in the crisis of a presidential election in September.—Philadelphia Press.

The Maine Election.

The people at large on this side the Alleghenies have not had a correct estimation of the heat and energy of the campaign in Maine that has just closed, with a triumphant republican victory. There has been too much confidence that a victory in Maine is almost a matter of course. This has been in forgetfulness that there has been a large swarm of cranks in Maine for many years, and that the State was actually lost in the September election of 1880, though Garfield was elected two months later.

There has been a flood of Democratic money poured into the State. It was to Maine, no doubt, that the $10,000 of the President, and the $20,000 of Cal Brice, and the $20,000 of Whitney, and other trust funds, were transmitted and disbursed.

The Vermont election was such a shock to the Democrats that they felt throughout the country that if they could not turn the tide in Maine, they were already defeated.

According to Mr. Blaine's estimate, no doubt made with great care, in his dispatch to Harrison, the gain on the Republican plurality of 1886—and the Gubernatorial vote of one year is properly compared with another—is between seven and eight thousand, and the gain over the vote in September of the Garfield year is twenty thousand. The story, this year, is extraordinarily good from Maine to Oregon, by way of Vermont, the story is the same. The Cleveland Administration scores another bitter disappointment in Maine. The signs are all auspicious for the election of Harrison and Morton.—Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

H. W. Carney was arrested at Pierre for incendiarism and theft. On restitution of goods stolen he was released, but having made threats against the lives and property of citizens he was rearrested and held until a train arrived, when he was placed on board with orders to go out into the wide, wide world, never more to return.

The rural residence of Wm. Kramer, three miles north of Yankton, burned to the ground, involving serious loss to Mr Kramer. Nearly all the household effects were saved. One of Mr. Kramer's sons narrowly escaped being left asleep in the house, and his mother rescued him at her own peril. Mr. Kramer was formerly proprietor of the Merchants' hotel in Yankton.

Fire destroyed the barn of F. H. Benson, a farmer living six miles north of Casselton. Eight horses and a span of mules were also burned. The fire was caused by the explosion of a kerosene lantern carried by one of his men, Albert Sanders, who was so badly burned in attempting to save the horses that he has since died of the injuries. There was no insurance, as the barn was a temporary one.

A big buffalo bull was killed three miles from Oakes, in Central Dakota. It was alone and was supposed to have wandered from the usual feeding grounds, though three or four buffalo have for several years been reported as in the foot hills, between the James and Missouri rivers in the counties of Logan and Emerson, which are sparsely settled. It was killed by three men after a hard fight. It weighed about 1,700 pounds and is one of the largest killed in Dakota in several years.

Italian eat Italian.

There is this to be said in favor of the Italians as residents of American cities: They devote their attention to each other and let other nationalities alone. And as a general thing the Italians are very indignant when the law attempts to punish an Italian ruffian or assassin. The Congressional investigation has shown that the Italian swindler, like the Italian murderer, preys exclusively upon his own countrymen. It is the Italian agencies that bring the immigrants over here under false pretenses and the Italian contractors and bankers that swindle them after they arrive. And these Italian swindlers seem to consider that it is none of the business of the American people what is done with Italian immigrants.—New York Telegram.

Judge Davenport of Kansas City has decided that women can wear trousers in Missouri.

"If a woman is pretty,
To me 'tis no matter,
Be she blonde or brunette,
So she lets me look at her."

An unhealthy woman is rarely, if ever, beautiful. The peculiar diseases to which so many of the sex are subject, are prolific causes of pale, sallow faces, blotched with unsightly pimples, dull lustreless eyes and emaciated forms. Women so afflicted, can be permanently cured by using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription; and with the restoration of health comes that beauty which, combined with good qualities of head and heart, makes women, angels of loveliness. "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

How's Your Liver?

The old lady who replied, when asked how her liver was, "God bless me, I never heard that there was such a thing in the house," was noted for her amiability. Prometheus, when chained to a rock, might as well have pretended to be happy, as the man who is chained to a diseased liver. For poor Prometheus, there was no escape, but by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, the disagreeable feelings, irritable temper, constipation, indigestion, dizziness and sick headache, which are caused by a diseased liver, promptly disappear.

THE LAST DAY.

The Thirtieth Annual Minnesota State Fair Closes With the Greatest Possible Success.

It was the greatest day in the history of all agricultural exhibits in the Northwest. Fully forty-five thousand people were within the inclosure. When the day broke there was no sun to be seen in the east, nor at either of the other three points of the compass. At about 9 o'clock the clouds in the east disappeared, and the king of the day shone forth in all his radiance and splendor. Trains of ten cars each from the two cities went thundering into the station at the fair grounds depositing their precious freight in thousands at a time. The brightness of the sun had absorbed the moisture on the grass which had fallen the day before, and everything bore evidence of a superb day in the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the history and progress of the splendid achievements in the world of agriculture in Minnesota. The American flag, as it unfolded its magestic folds to the bright crisp northwestern breeze from the topmast of every building, never before presented a more inspiring scene than it did yesterday morning, with thousands and thousands of lovers of the emblem of American liberty upon the grounds and hundreds of scarred veterans who had followed it to victory and preserved its dignity and grandeur and the solidity and perpetuity of the union. It was typical of the breadth, not of the acreage of the golden Northwest, but of the spirit of its citizens in making it one of the integral parts of the common union, associated with the achievements of the past and the brilliant possibilities of the future.

THE INDUSTRIAL PARADE.

At 10:30 o'clock Supt. Bushnell was the busiest man in the state. The industrial parade was the creation of his own prolific brain, and its magnitude as well as beauty was looked forward to with more than ordinary interest. The delay in getting the various industries in line naturally caused some impatience, though it was not long until the line was formed, and a more extensive display was seldom if ever exhibited. The procession was headed by the Great Western band of sixty pieces, followed by Supt. Bushnell on horseback. Next came a magnificently painted wagon drawn by two handsome bay horses, in which were President Merriam and the other officers of the association. Then came the steam engines drawing their trains of wagons, threshers, mowers, reapers, cornplanters, plows, cultivators, harrows, rakes, drills, potato-diggers, grass-seed sowers and the hundreds of other farm implements which have contributed so much to the advancement of the state of the industrious husbandman, and especially to the benefit and interest of the fair.

THE STOCK DISPLAY.

The next in line, and a long line it was, too, was what appeared to be miles of stock. It is doubtful if a more splendid aggregation of horses and cattle were ever placed on exhibition than was seen on the grounds during the week just passed. It was a sight, the beauty of which is not often offered in this or any other country. The progress made by the people of the United States within the last ten years in the cultivation of blood in domestic animals, as well as the human race, has attracted the attention of the civilized world. No better evidence of this progress could have been offered than was demonstrated yesterday.

The display was especially one of the distinctive features of the Northwest, which could with consistency be taken to illustrate the fact that this section has not only kept pace with the march of progress, but has placed itself in the lead. The exhibit and display made in the parade of the Percheron and Clydesdale heavy draught stallions was one of the most attractive features in the parade, which commanded the admiration and favorable comment of almost the entire attendance.

THE GRAND ARMY.

By this time the attractions incident to the coming battle were the chief topic, and soon the grand stand began to be filled by those who might have objected to being first in war, though they manifested a desire to occupy front seats when war-like scenes were in full view. The scenes in and about the tents of the Grand Army were brisk in the extreme. The old veterans were not as bilarious as the young, who had only read instead of tasted the hardships of war. The fife and the drum filled the air with music.

The citizen soldiery clad in the habiliments of war were not less imposing in appearance than were the regulars, though the latter commanded the admiration of every one and simply because they were participants in the name of the army of the United States. As the positions were taken by the contending forces upon the different portions of the field, when the infantry with its steady tread, followed by the force and dignity of the United States artillery, had taken its place, cheer after cheer went up from the forty thousand throats in praise of the institution of the army and its proud achievements. Galloping horses with gallant riders went from end to end of the acreage, bearing the ensign of the army and holding it up for admiration to the civilized world. On the distant hill stood silently waiting the command the army of the nation, while in the valley below were stationed the citizen soldiery of the state. It was not unlike the massing of the forces for a Gettysburg or a march up Lookout mountain. It was a renewal of the scenes during the darkest days of the nation's history, and when gazed upon by those who had bared their breasts to the enemy for their country's good, it called forth the recollections of the past which are so dear to the survivors of that grand army of patriots whose day was yesterday in the celebration of the eventful past.

THE BATTLE BEGINS.

After a proper disposition of the forces in the bloodless battle a skirmish fire was commenced by cavalry from the Blues and infantry from the Reds. The fire grew hotter, and the Reds began to move down and over the fence into the field. The regulars held their places on the left of the Red line of battle, save one company, which was deployed along the track at right angle to the lines of battle, where they commenced a crossfire. Their skirmishers were being driven slowly back when the Blues advanced in full line of battle, their skirmishers forming on the right. The battle waxed hotter, and the artillery of both sides was brought into action. The Blues answered the desultory firing of the Reds by volleys from the militia. The smoke gradually began to obscure the field from the sight of the eager spectators. The Blues were driven back slowly at first, then the right broke and then the center, till they were in their original position, when the firing ceased as if by mutual consent. At 3:55 the Blue skirmishers re-opened their scattering fire and retreated, followed closely by the Reds. The Blue's artillery commenced firing again. The regulars were marched up battalion front at right angles to the rest of the Red line and opened a fierce fire at left oblique. The battle now reached its fiercest point. The Reds advanced, driving the enemy before them till they were intrenched behind their breastworks and the battery retired to the extreme end of the field. The Reds thought they had inflicted a decisive blow and fell back, but the Blues with renewed fury advanced again on the full run. The Reds' retreat was not because of weakness, however, and they turned on the enemy, driving them back out of their entrenchment to the higher ground, forming their own line at the fence. The Blues sent their skirmishers out again to the earthworks. At 4:15 the firing again commenced, and the Blues advanced to their fourth charge. The Red line was almost broken, but the regulars advanced to the line of battle in the face of a fierce fire from the Blue artillery. The Blues halted behind the fence and formed their line, and then advanced again, the Reds stubbornly resisting. The engagement was almost hand to hand, and the field was strewn with bodies. The regulars were sending forth deadly volleys by battalions, which checked the advance. The commanders, wishing to stop the needless slaughter, sent out flags of truce. Another consultation was held and a year's armistice was agreed upon. The two armies marched off the field to the martial notes of both bands and amid general rejoicing, both bodies firing their muskets in the air. The regulars set out at once on their march to Fort Snelling. The veterans went over to the camp and delivered over their weapons, and the militia stocked arms and dispersed to see the sights. The old men were rejuvenated by the smell of powder and the young men were excited and flushed by the simulated conflict.

A SAD ACCIDENT.

The sham battle was marked by only one accident, though that was sad indeed. Paul Mitch, a young artilleryman from the fort, suffered the loss of his right hand and wrist. The accident occurred during the thick of the fight, and was due either to insufficient sponging of the piece, or to the fact that the man holding the vent let his thumb slip, allowing the air to enter. The piece was prematurely discharged, tearing off Mitch's right hand, mangling the arm fearfully and breaking the thumb of his companion. The two men were in the act of reloading the gun. The ambulance was called into service and the wounded man removed to the Jobbers' Union building where Dr. Murphy, who acted as surgeon general, bandaged the wounded arm, the man displaying wonderful nerve. He was removed to St. Joseph's hospital where Dr. Hoyt amputated the forearm four inches above the wrist. He is now doing nicely. His face was also burnt by powder.

Gloom at Jacksonville.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Sept. 14.—This has been the saddest day yet in the history of Jacksonville's epidemic. The general gloom is made intense by the grief at the loss of several of our very best citizens. Two of the noblest of Florida's native sons fell to-day—Louis I. Fleming, whose son and name-sake was laid to rest only three days ago, and Hon. Henry A. Lengle, cashier of the Bank of the State of Florida, ex-treasurer of state and lately the heroic and indefatigable chairman of the committee on sensation of the citizens' association. No man stood higher in Florida as a man and a lawyer than Louis I. Fleming. He was the elder brother of the Democratic candidate for governor and a grandson of Gen. Lewis Fatio. Hon. H. A. Lengle was one of the most active and public spirited citizens and a near relative of Mr. Fleming. Both died of yellow fever near the same hour. Frank W. Ely, a prominent insurance agent, was also one of to-day's victims. He was not generally known to be dangerously ill. The fatal list contains the names of Mrs. C. W. Herrick, whose husband died ten days ago, the third death in this house; Harry L. Robinson, Mrs. C. H. Weimouth, Ezra Gray, Mr. Chatman, an infant of J. W. Wallace, Lulu coleman, Benjamin Bogwell and Mrs Patrick Kelly. The number of new cases to-day was 43; deaths 12, the largest record of mortality yet; total cases reported to date, 830; total deaths, 116. The weather is still wet and unpromising, and the earth soaked with water. Several physicians and nurses from other cities—New Orleans, Mobile and Savannah—arrived to-day. A special train was sent to McClenny this afternoon with physicians, nurses and supplies. About sixty-five cases have been reported at McClenney and ten or twelve deaths. The place is almost depopulated, not more than 240 people remaining. The local physicians are all sick. The Citizens' association to-day resolved to pay for the erection of a hospital to be maintained by the Knights Templars. Dr. Mallett, eminent commander and protector of the hospital in behalf of the order, was stricken with fever to-day, but will probably recover. Rev. Dr. Weller, of St. John's church, is still ill from overwork. He is an epidemic veteran from Vicksburg. Camp Mitchell is being rapidly built and equipped. A large order for hospital, camp and general supplies was telegraphed New York to-day.

A REPORTER'S ADVENTURES.

The World's Jacksonville special says: Yesterday morning I started for McClenny and had a most eventful trip. I went as correspondent to the World. And as special representative of the Duval county board of health. I left at 10 o'clock and got to within one mile of a pretty town called Baldwin, where the trains run daily, remaining over night by the fumigating car. At Baldwin I found the people terror stricken. Everything, down to the ice was fumigated I reached McClenny at 3 o'clock and found the town completely demoralized. It is a straggling little place with about 200 houses and at present I should not think much over twenty people in it. Both the doctors, both the clergymen, the mayor and every one else in authority were ill, and the town was being run by a young fellow who had been sent with ten other Red Cross nurses to take charge until the arrival of a doctor who went up to-day. He had turned the hotel into a hospital and was doing well, and said he hoped to have the fever out of the place in a week, and there were only four cases. Of the sick, with the exception of five, all are doing well or sure to recover. After getting a list of supplies and necessities that were required, I started for Jacksonville in a light cart, with a mule and colored driver. I had almost got through in safety, when at the depot—fortunately on the side of the town I was making for—my guard and I were hailed and a mob of about twenty-five or thirty men rushed upon me like hounds on a fox. I was threatened with being locked up and abused in the most shameful way. I was escorted to the fumigating car and asked the conductor of the train I had come in to let me rest there until the morning, when he would go down, but he refused, So I tramped on the eight mile post, where the night watchman let me lay down on a sawdust heap. I rested for a few hours, and then started again, but after going a couple of miles I struck Mariett, where the people were not terror stricken, and gave me a breakfast and a wagon to town. Certainly it sounds strange, but Jacksonville was like a haven of refuge. It has rained nearly all the time with a steady downpour that is terribly disheartening. The air is cold, damp and full of miasma. Already the doctors report bad symptoms among their patients from the unfavorable weather, and unless it changes for better the death roll will increase very fast.

Disastrous Fire at Washburn.

The citizens of Washburn, Wis., about ten o'clock in the morning of the 14th inst., were awakened by the cry of fire, and in a short time the entire populace were at the scene of a conflagration in a block on Bayfield street. It could be seen at a glance that nothing could be done toward checking the flames with the limited water facilities, and an effort was made to save the contents of the buildings with poor success. The fire caught in a barn at the south end of the block, and by five o'clock in the morning the entire block was in ashes—not a house left. The flames spread with such rapidity that a number of people had some trouble in escaping from their homes, and those living in the immediate vicinity of the starting point were unable to save anything. A quantity of the goods were taken out of the burning buildings, which were carried to the opposite side of the street, caught fire, and were burned there. The Hotel Washburn, which is situated opposite the burned block, was saved only by the herculean efforts of the citizens. The entire front of the building is scorched to a black color, and it is almost a miracle how it was saved. Dr. F. L. Bradly and a commercial traveler had a very narrow escape from being burned. They were assisting to remove the goods from Meehan's store, and were overpowered and blinded by the smoke while in the building. They escaped by jumping through a window and were badly singed. There were wild rumors afloat about an infant being in the flames, but it was found resting securely in a basket of clothing. Thieves were busy, and a number of articles were stolen from where they had been piled. It is reported a prominent merchant tried to lay in his winter supply of wine, but was detected and made to give it up. There were about twelve safes scattered along Bayfield street. The contents of those opened so far are uninjured. Joseph O'Brien, the man who slept in the store where the fire originated, states that he went to sleep between 12 and 1 o'clock and was awakened by a pet dog which slept in the barn. The fire was then raging all around him. Had it not been for the dog he would probably have been cremated. How the fire originated will probably never be known. The hook and lader company came over from Ashland on the steamer Emerald, but was to late to be of any service. Both printing offices, the Itemizer and News, were burned. Lumber is already on the ground to begin building, and the block will be rebuilt immediately. A number of families were left homeless, but those more fortunate have opened their houses, and are provided for. A heavy rain fell all day, damaging the property exposed. The total loss is about one hundred thousand dollars, with but little insurance, on account of the extensive insurance rate in this block, which was four per cent.

Canadians Awaiting Developments.

An Ottawa special to the New York Sun says that Sir John Macdonald, in an interview being asked what would be the policy of Canada, replied:

The policy of the Canadian government will be to await developments in the United States. By this I mean that the only question from which trouble can arise relates to the fishing. The fishing season has just closed, and it will not open again until May. In other words, it will be fully eight months before the United States will have any chance to bring up that question again. Until that time we will do absolutely nothing unless President Cleveland makes some unexpected move, which is not probable, even if the senate should grant him the asked-for power. Nothing can come of the present discussion, therefore, for eight months, and before the expiration of that time things may have assumed a quieter aspect. The feeling toward the United States is not unfriendly, but it is to be remembered that we have given much to the states, one thing after another under the several treaties. We do not feel that this can go on forever, I think that the treaty of last year, generally known as the Chamberlain treaty, was, in the main, fair and decisive. I have no hesitation in saying that, if politics had not interfered, the United States must have come to the conclusion by this time that it had made a first-rate bargain by that treaty. In that measure, however, the utmost limit of concession was reached. We can go no further, and now the treaty has been set aside the whole matter falls back on the treaty of 1818 as far as the fisheries part of the dispute is concerned. The convention of 1818 has been admitted by both governments as a recognized indisputable basis; there can be no further discussion concerning it. Diplomacy has utterly failed to convince the United States of the advisability of adopting the more recent treaty.

"What would be the effect on Canada, if the retaliation measures were fully carried out?"

"The Grand Trunk railroad will suffer to a certain extent, because its eastern terminus is in Portland and its western terminus in Chicago, but many of the other roads may be built up by the increase of trade diverted to them. As the matter now stands, the president must carry out his threats or lose his hold upon the voters. One good effect has been subserved by the recent action of Mr. Cleveland, and that is the marked growth of unity of sentiment among Canadians. There is a feeling now in Canada that we have been thrown upon our own resources, and that we must be more self-reliant."

A Whack at the Northern Pacific.

On motion of Mr. Wilson of Minnesota, who is a member of the committee on commerce, the lower house of congress, took up and passed Mr. Nelson's bill to provide, in certain cases, for the regulation by state legislation of railway companies chartered by the United States. This is the bill introduced last March by Mr. Nelson at the instance of the Minnesota railway commission, by which it was drawn. Mr. Nelson made an attempt to have the bill made a section of the interstate commerce bill which was passed, but his motion was rejected. The purposes of the bid are to give state railway commissions power to control all railroads having government charters, as well as to place them under legislative restrictions and make them amenable to state laws. The bill passed without dissent, and is as follows:

That where any railroad heretofore chartered or incorporated by act of congress has built or constructed and operates, or shall build, construct or operate a railroad through, across or into the territorial limits of any state of the United States, the tolls, rates and fares made or charged for the transportation of property and passengers over or upon such railroads for traffic within the limits of a state or territory, and the tariffs and schedules thereof, shall be subject to the legislative control of and by the several states and territories through, across or into which such roads are constructed, built or operated, anything in the charters or acts of congress creating such company or companies or any law of any state or territorial legislature enacted in pursuance of such charter or act of incorporation to the contrary notwithstanding. That section 1 of this act shall be limited in its operation and shall apply only to the carrying and transportation of such company or companies of passengers and property wholly by railroad or partly by railroad and partly by water (when both are used by a common management, control or arrangements) from one place or station to another place or station, both being within the territorial limits of one and the same state or territory, and shall in no case apply to any commerce between the states, territories or into foreign countries.

Another Railroad Horror.

A Baltimore & Ohio north-bound passenger train, jumped the switch at Ankeneytown siding, twenty-five miles south of Mansfield, Ohio, and collided with a freight train on the siding. The mail car, followed age in all directions. The two coaches contained 110 passengers nearly all returning from the encampment at Columbus. The hot water and steam from the boiler poured into the coaches and the passengers that had not been hurt by broken timbers were scalded. The engine on the passenger train, which, with two express cars, had safely passed the switch, was immediately taken to Independence and Bellevue, and all the doctors in these places were taken to the wreck. The passengers who were not held down by timbers crawled out of the windows, and by the time the doctors reached the spot all but four or five were out of the broken coaches. Mrs. Edward Valentine of Chicago and F. Luckens, the express agent, were fairly pinned under the wreckage. Harry Tomlinson, the freight engineer, was standing on the side track next to the passenger train, and he was found between the tender and boiler of his engine, with the front part of his head blown off. He was unmarried and resided at Newark, Ohio, with his mother. David Wilson, the baggagemaster, was found doubled up alongside the freight train with his neck broken and his skull crushed. He has a wife and two children living at Sandusky. Mrs. Edward Valentine, of Chicago, and William Gransley, of Shawnee, a brakeman on the freight train, can't live. The dead men were laid on cots alongside the track, and the wounded were taken to houses near by. The wrecked train consisted of an engine, two express cars, mail car, baggage car, two day coaches and two sleeping cars. The only persons injured were in the day coaches. The sleepers did not leave the track. The injured number thirty-two, three of whom are likely to die.

A Missouri Triple Tragedy.

Andrew Rhuel, a well-to-do farmer living six miles from St. Louis, was a central figure in a triple tragedy the other night. For several months bad blood has existed between the Rhuel and Fink families. Their farms adjoined, and their trouble was caused by some disparaging remarks made about Miss Annie Fink. For this he was thrashed by Fred Pink, the girl's brother. Rhuel went to St. Louis and purchased a pistol with the determination of killing the Finks. There were only two of them, the brother and sister. Rhuel went to the house of the Finks, where he met Fred, and without a word shot him through the jaw. Without pausing to ascertain the condition of the first victim he hurried on to complete his murderous task. At the house he found Miss Fink cooking supper. She had heard the report of the pistol when her brother was shot, and, seeing Rhuel approaching, sought safety in flight. She ran out of the house, with the man close upon her track. Instead of firing at her as she ran, he chased her for a distance of two hundred yards. The poor woman, after her long race for life, becoming utterly exhausted, turned and faced her pursuer with the appeal: "Mr. Rhuel, don't shoot me." This had no effect. He placed the muzzle of the weapon at her left breast, and sent a bullet through her heart. Not satisfied with this he fired again and again at his prostrate victim. He then returned home, reloaded his weapon, bade his wife and children adieu, and going to the barn, blew his brains out.

Minnesota's Heroes.

Friday, of fair week was distinctively a Grand Army day in St. Paul. From early morning till late at night the streets were crowded with veterans, some battle-scarred, and all wearing a badge of some one of Minnesota's brave volunteer regiments, in addition to the slouch hat or brass buttons, which are used to give the idea of the former trappings and pomp of war. Very few of the veterans appeared alone. They had quickly found some comrade of their own regiment, or had fraternized with some member of another, for old soldiers get acquainted very easily. Six of the eleven regiments of infantry, which the North Star state sent to the front in the nation's time of peril, held reunions and nearly one thousand of the survivors were in the city. Two of them had called their meetings at the fair grounds. Owing to the rain these were held in the city, and the misunderstanding caused in the change of place and hour made the attendance smaller than it would otherwise have been. The regiments were the Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Seventh and Ninth.

Hon. John Edwards, late candidate for Kansas City court of appeals, blew his brains out at Hampville, Mo. He leaves a wife and three grown children. Judge Edwards was one of the leading lawyers of Missouri.

Minnesota State Fair.

OPENING DAY.

No more perfect day could have been secured for the commencement of the fair than was. The sun beamed brightly over the vast grounds, quickly drying the grass which had been drenched by the autumnal storm of the night before; the brisk breeze from the south caused every piece of bunting to wave to and fro in luxuriant folds, the roosters crowed with delight as they saw the brilliant orb of the heavens, and the people who were present, and there were a goodly number for an opening day, seemed happy and contented that the thirtieth fair should open under such auspicious circumstances.

At a few minutes before 9 o'clock the crowd surrounded the machinery building where the great engine stood and listened to the opening address by Mr. Bushnell, Sr., as follows:

Gentlemen and Ladies: The hour has now arrived for the opening of the thirtieth annual exhibition of the state agricultural society. As we gaze with wonder at the great inventive genius that produced all these mechanical contrivances, we must exclaim, "Truly, this is a great country." We behold on one hand every device known to man for labor saving, with all the improvements man can contrive; on the other hand we view with pleasure the varied production of the soil of our proud state. Then, too, we look with deepest pride upon the magnificent stock of all kinds bred, raised and used within the boundaries of our great State of Minnesota. Here, there, and on every hand you see the evidences of the great wealth and boundless resources of our state, and I ask you all to examine carefully and thoughtfully the wonders you see about you. They are living evidences of the contentment and happiness of the citizens of your state, who are protected by the wise and judicious tariff laws of our country, affording to every honest man and woman an opportunity to earn not only a good living, but a comfortable home to enjoy in age.

Gentlemen and ladies, in the name of the president of this association, I bid you welcome; and we will now proceed to the starting of our great motive power by one tiny finger of a tiny hand applied to the electric button.

The main building is replete with interesting exhibits. The many firms who have placed displays in the building seem to have gone on the order of quality, not quantity, and the displays are more elegant than cumbersome.

The length of the shafting is one and three-eighths miles, from which is turned 841 pieces of machinery. The air was filled with the busy hum of industry, giving it the appearance of a manufacturing district in a great city. The exhibits alone in this branch of the exhibition represents 1,500 firms, coming from eighteen states of the Union. The value of goods exhibited in this department is estimated at $350,000.

In no way is the improvement of the present fair over that of last year apparent than in the live stock display. It is one reflecting great credit upon the management and upon the breeders to whose labors the people of St. Paul are indebted for an exhibit particularly complete and more satisfactory than ever before. Never has there been so excelent a gathering of blooded stock, and never have the arrangements at the fair grounds been so completely perfect. The buildings set apart for the accommodation of horses and cattle are admirably adapted to the purpose, and they are kept clean and well ventilated.

Agricultural hall, filled as it is with the producers of the great Northwest, presents a decidedly farm like appearance with its hosts of pumpkins, pears, apples, grain and the railroad exhibits. Of the latter those of the Northern Pacific and Manitoba roads excel and show the different kinds of grain raised along those lines to good effect.

The illumination of St. Paul, is one of the most interesting features of the occasion. The spectacle with all its exhilarating effects, is not a new feature to the inhabitants of St. Paul It was in this city where the idea of making bright with all the colors known to human art a portion of the metropolis was first formulated, and it is a distinctive feature of St. Paul in Demonstrating its gratitude to its friends and showing its high appreciation of good will to those who might be within its gates. The globes of green, red, white, yellow and blue, each shedding its luster upon the thousands of pedestrians who good naturedly joined in the welcome and hospitality to the city's guests, served to remind a stranger who had never before looked with wondering eyes upon a scene so enchanting of that beauty which awaits the just when there is drawn aside the veil leading to the great eternal. It was like a fairy scene, where dwelled only the loveliness, the gentleness and the sweetness of nature. It seemed not like rude hands had constructed so glowing a tribute to a city's honor. It bore impressions of having been in nature's triumphant sphere. It dazzled not in force, but in magnificence.

The Maine Election.

Mr. Blaine places the Republican majority at 20,000. There are gains on every hand. Fifteen cities give a gain of 1,000 over 1884, or a total Republican majority of 4,500. The same rate of grain on the remaining towns and cities gives a Republican majority of over 20,000.

Chairman Manley sent the following telegram:

To Hon. M. S. Quay, Chairman Republican National Committee, New York: "We have carried the state by a plurality of 20,000. Have chosen the entire delegation in congress. Reed's majority will reach 2,500. The majorities for Dingley, Boutelle and Milliken will exceed 6,000, respectively. We have chosen every senator and nearly or quite four-fifths of the representatives in our legislature and have carried every county in the state on the popular vote."

Mr. Blaine telegraphed Gen. Harrison as follows,

Returns up to 9 o'clock indicate Republican candidate will have more than 20,000 majority over Democratic candidate, largest majority since 1866. Prohibition vote falls off everywhere.

Androscoggin county elects the full Republican ticket. In Knox county the Republicans probably elect all county officers except register of probate. In Washington county the Republicans elect all county officers by 1,200 majority and seven out of ten representatives. In Lincoln county the entire Republican ticket is elected, and the republican ticket is elected, and the republicans elect four out of six representatives. The Republicans carry Somerset county by over 1,500 plurality, electing a Republican senator and seven of the eight representatives. There is a gain of 1,100 in plurality over 1886. Waldo county elects the entire Republican ticket by about 300 majority, except sheriff, and elects four Republican representatives out of seven. Large Republican gains are reported in Hancock county, which will give an estimated majority of 1,000, electing the full county ticket. The entire nine representative districts have elected Republicans. Returns thus far received from York county indicate a majority for the Republican county ticket of 1,000. Two years ago the majority was less then ten. Reed's majority in this county will be the largest ever received. Republicans elect twelve out of fifteen representatives.

H. B. Mason of Ellsworth, Me., has assigned. Liabilities reported as $126,000; assets, $250,000 in timber lands, mills, logs, real estate and sailing vessels.

The chemical works of the Marshfield Manufacturing company, owned by J. H. Matthes, burned at Marshfield, Wis. The fire originated in a lot of chemicals stored in one corner of the building, from what source is unknown. The retort building and coal house was saved. About two hundred and fifty cords of wood was burned. The loss will reach $10,000, with a total insurance upon the whole plant of $7,500.

At Elliot's circus in Faribault one of the performers, named Barton, met with a serious accident by having his hand cut on glass. Miss Elliot, who was playing on glass bottles, hit the bottle hard enough to break it, and the attendants failed to clear the platform of the broken glass. Barton struck the broken bottle with his hand in his performance, and was so seriously injured that he will be unable to do his work for a number of weeks, if he does not lose his hand.

A rear end collision occurred on the Northern Iowa division of the Chicago & Northwestern railway at Auburn, Neb. One special freight ran into another which had been delayed by an accident. The rear engine went through three cars and into the middle of the depot, completely wrecking it. Engineer Kellar was slowly roasted to death under the fire box. Fireman George Trusty had both legs cut off and died at midnight. A brakeman, name unknown, was fatally injured.

THE G. A. R.

Close of their Great Encampment at Columbus, Ohio.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Special Telegram, Sept 12.—The Grand Army encampment of 1889 will be held in Milwaukee. This was decided upon by the national encampment late this afternoon, the vote being unanimous. Before the encampment adjourned Gen. H. M. Curtis of New York, Gen. Goodman, California; Gen. J. C. Linehan, New Hampshire; Judge Vesey, Vermont; Congressman Warner, Missouri, and H. M. Duffield, Detroit, were placed in nomination for the position of commander-in-chief. A vote will be taken to-morrow morning. It was 11 o'clock when Commander-in-Chief Rea called the encampment to order in the Metropolitan opera house. Judge Rea delivered his annual address, saying:

JOHN P. REA.

A century ago a little band of heroic men, fresh from the struggle of independence in which the political rights and moral grandeur of American manhood were vindicated, crossed the mountain range, which, theretofore, had marked the western boundary of that narrow belt of our continental settlement which stretched along the winding slope of the sea, penetrated the solitude of the wilderness of the Mississippi valley and founded, the western bank of the "beautiful river" a settlement, which, in the order of Providence, became the germ from which developed the imperial commonwealth in whose capital city we meet to-day in this twenty-second national encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic. They were home-fostering, God-fearing, liberty-loving, self-sacrificing, chivalric men. They counted the cost of every step they took and took every step that was right, regardless of cost. Poor in material resources, but rich in mental and moral endowment, they founded deep down on the granite ledge of individual independence and eternal right this great community which furnished for the defense of the republic they had helped to create, when the time of its peril came, an army of 320,000 men, and gave that republic and the world Grant, Sherman, Sheridan, MacPherson, Rosecrans, Buell, Garfield, Steadman, McCook, Custer, Crook, and many others of kingly, deathless, matchless fame, all born, reared and inspired amid the quiet of its forest homes and under the influence of its bold progressive thought, to be the peerless commanders of the armies of freedom in her final conflict on this continent. Full detailed statements of the workings of our organization and of its finance for the official year will be found in the reports submitted by the several staff officers, all of which are commended to the careful perusal and candid consideration of the encampment.

PENSIONS.

The committee on pensions will submit a report of its labors. I desire to bear testimony to the untiring zeal of its members, and their unselfish devotion to the duty imposed upon them. All that could be done they have manfolly done. They have failed, but the blame lies elsewhere, not with them. The bill reported by the committee to the twenty-first national encampment, and by it recommended, while not so far reaching in its provisions as to meet the demand of a large minority of the comrades, was yet so eminently just, so absolutely free from all objection, resting upon reason, that there seemed no possibility of its failing to receive prompt and favorable action from the national congress. No man or set of men can be found anywhere who will say that the relief it was framed to give should not be given. It exceeds in no particular the nation's promises in the past or the wishes of the nation in the present. Notwithstanding the ceaseless, earnest efforts of our most efficient pension committee in its behalf, it has failed to pass congress, and by this failure, wholly inexplicable and indefensible, thousands of our helpless comrades, helpless because of their devotion to their country in its extremity, are subsisting upon the charity of their comrades, or are paupers in the mighty, wealthy republic their unselfish valor saved. I cannot fitly comment upon this subject. My emotions will not permit it. It cannot be that the people of America will voluntarily continue longer to withhold from these heroic men that scanty support needed to preserve them from the pauper's fate and enable them to end their lives, so replete with past glory, so full of present pain, so bereft of future hope, in self-respected manliness. I have no desire to utter a word to influence your action upon the several propositions for pension legislation that will probably be presented for your consideration: only, comrades, let our action be of a manly, dignified character, worthy the men and the cause we represent, and justly exemplifying that comradeship which is the tie that binds us together. No measure receiving the endorsement of this encampment, followed by the earnest, hearty support of our entire membership, will fail to receive favorable consideration from the national congress. Through this body, and this alone, our order must speak, or speak in discordant tones.

During the year ending March 31, 1888, 4,433 comrades died, an increase of 1,027 over the previous year, a death rate exceeding twelve per day.

GEN. SHERIDAN.

One of the sad events of the year was the death of Comrade Philip H. Sheridan, general of the United States army, a member of Post No. 5, department of Illinois. He died in the prime of his perfect manhood, ending a career that can suffer no disparagement by comparison with that of any other in human history. All gentleness in his nature, he was yet the dashing, heroic master of modern warfare. An educated soldier, he was nevertheless the trusted, considerate and appreciating commander of volunteers. He never erred in judgment; never faltered in purpose; never failed in courage. His unselfishness was only equaled by his greatness of character. Living, he placed a true estimate upon the men he commanded, and in death he sought the companionship of those who had followed and loved him. He sleeps to-day amid that army corps of immortal heroes in their bivouac of glory at Arlington, and will come forth with them, and surrounded by them, when the reveille of eternity is sounded. Conscious of the fact that I have not given to the duties of commander-in-chief the time that their importance demanded, I assure you that nothing remains undone from indisposition to do it. I have visited twenty-four departments, some of them several times, have traveled 26,000 miles, slept 52 nights on the cars, and made 122 public addresses, and to the utmost tension of my physical strength and mental ability have striven to discharge the duties of the high office with which you honored me, in such manner that no stain would come upon the burnished fame of the Grand Army of the Republic. Wherever I have gone, north or south, east or west, I have received a kindly greeting and a cordial welcome, most gratifying, because it came spontaneously as an evidence of the high regard of the people of this republic for the survivors of the army and navy which conquered treason, cemented the Union and established upon the basis of universal equality, the grandest nation of earth. In all sections of the country I have found the comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, in community and in state, occupying the highest positions, enjoying the full confidence of their fellow citizens, and living manly lives worthy the earnest they gave of fidelity and loyalty in the terrific conflict through which they passed in their youth.

The report of the committee on pensions gave rise to a prolonged and animated debate. It cited their action in regard to national pension legislation, and spoke in exceedingly bitter terms of the failure of the disability bill. The report of the committee reindorsing the "indigent" bill was finally adopted. There was an exciting scene during the afternoon session of the encampment. While the pension question was under discussion a number of papers were handed up to the chairman to be read Among them was a dispatch from President Cleveland acknowledging the receipt of an invitation to attend the encampment, and explaining that it had been mislaid by his secretary and forgotten in the press of business. For this and his inability to be present he expressed his regrets. The reading of the dispatch, according to some of the delegates, was followed by

HISSES, GROANS AND CHEERS.

Half a dozen motions were made to lay the dispatch on the table and to refer it to the committee on pensions. Several delegates demanded vociferously the name of the officer or comrade who had taken it upon himself to extend the invitation, and Gen. Keifer in an excited manner asked Commander Rea if he was resposible for the action. The commander responded promptly in the negative, adding that he had no authority to invite the president. Some of the delegates took advantage of the circumstance to make a general onslaught upon the president's pension policy and his vetoes. Finally all the motions were declared out of order, and the regular business was proceeded with. To-night it was developed that the invitation had been extended by the local committee, to which body the reply was addressed, and that it had gotten into the hands of the adjutant general of the national encampment by an error in the exchange of papers. Republican comrades to-night are expressing their regret at the occurrence, but insist that nothing transpired to which the president could have taken exception had he been present.

ADJUTANT GENERAL'S REPORT.

The report of Adjt. Gen. Daniel Fish showed that at the end of March, 1888, there were 40 departments reporting 6,283 posts and 354,216 comrades, in good standing. There were also 422 posts delinquent, making a total of 6,705 chartered posts. The net gains since last year are two departments, 472 posts reporting, 393 chartered posts and 33,280 comrades in good standing. June 30 the reports showed a still further increase and the total membership of the G. A. R. on that date, including 33,583 suspensions, is a round 400,000. There were 4,433 deaths last year, an increase of 1,027 over the previous year. The new departments are those of Idaho and Arizona. A total of $215,975.10 was expended by the G. A. R. last year for the relief of comrades, distributed among comrades and their dependents to the number of 15,103, and to other persons numbering 8,707; a grand total of 23,810 persons pecuniarily assisted. Of this sum $1,998.84 was expended in Minnesota, $4,500.85 in Iowa, $319.30 in Dakota, and $4,190.92 in Wisconsin.

THE LAST DAY

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Special Telegram, Sept. 13.—This was another eventful day in the history of the G. A. R. The most remarkable national encampment of the Grand Army finished its most important business and the most tremendous conclave ever held in the United States drew to a close. The closeing scenes are marked by the same great good humor that prevailed at the beginning of the encampment and was noticed by all who were in the city. This morning a number of regimental and brigadier reunions were held, and this evening a mammoth campfire was held in the auditorium, on the centennial exposition grounds, speeches being made by ex-Gov. Fairchild of Wisconsin, ex-Speaker Keifer of Ohio, and Gen. W. H. Gibson. One of the most notable events of the day outside the convention was the call made by the famous department of the Potomac upon Gov. Foraker and his distinguished guests. The Washington men who were under the command of Col. C. P. Lincoln, created quite a sensation here. The "Old Guard," a veteran corps selected from the department, and always honored with being made the president's escort on occasions of state, was offered the extreme right of the parade on Tuesday, but refused, as to accept would have been to separate themselves from the rest of the department. The members of the department in their call this afternoon were received by Gov. Alger and the members of the family and by Mrs. Gen. Logan. Mrs. Logan expressed much interest in the department and spoke freely with the members. She said that at Calumet place, the residence presented to her by the Grand Army of the Republic, one of the finest rooms had been set apart to be used as a memorial chapel, commemorative of the GREAT VOLUNTEER SOLDIERS.

In that room she will deposit all the relics and every other object in her possession bearing on the life and deeds of the great Logan. The delegation was escorted by the old guard, and the introductions were made by Col. C. P. Lincoln, who made a happy reference to the presidential order as to the return of the rebel flags and brought out cheers and laughter. Gov. Foraker made some very happy remarks. The reception of the Illinois delegation by Gov. Foraker and Col. Fred Grant at South Neil camp this morning was another remarkable event. The reception to Gov. Foraker was expected, but the presence of Col. Grant was a surprise. When it was known that he had come with Gov. Foraker the camp turned out en masse and gave the sensible son of the old commander a perfect ovation. Many interesting facts were brought out during the reception, a number of Illinois men who fought with Gen. Grant at the outbreak of the war were making themselves known to the old commander's first-born. After all the able-bodied men had shaken hands with Gov. Foraker and Col. Grant, a paralyzed comrade lying on a cot near at hand asked to be given a similar privilege. Both gentlemen went to his bed and shook hands with the poor unfortunate, who offered to each a cheap photograph of Gen. Grant. Needless to say the gift was more than repaid many times.

THE NEW COMMANDER.

At the national encampment this morning the election of a commander-in-chief was in order. After the nominations were made, Maj. William Warner of Missouri was elected. Maj. Warner served in the Thirty-third and Forty-fourth Wisconsin regiments, and has spent his latter life in Missouri. After filling various offices in that state, he was elected to the Forty-ninth congress from the Fifth Missouri district as a Republican, and is still in congress. Col. Moses Neil of Columbus was elected senior vice commander. W. H. Dixon, of the St. Paul road, entertained to-night, with his inimitable stories and recitations at the Loyal Legion rooms, a most notable gathering, among which were ix governors, Col. Fred Grant, many generals and others. He kept them in a roar of laughter and all heartily congratulated him.

Bismarck and Brandy.

On the occasion of Prince Bismarck's last speech in the reichstag Count Herbert, his eldest son, now secretary of state in the foreign office, kept the cognac bottle in his own hands while a group of high functionaries divided the rest of the work between them. Nothing could exceed, for downright comicality, the busy scene that was enacted behind the chancellor's back during the whole of the speech. The difficulty with which the glass-mixers had continually to contend was that of securing the requisite degree of dilution. First one would taste and find the compound too weak, so that more cognac had to be added. Then another would pronounce it to strong and the addition of seltzer water was the consequence. More than once the chancellor, hard to please, refused to drink the draught so carefully prepared and one of the solemn group had to drain the glass so that the blending operation might begin again. Probably a dozen and a half small glasses were handed to Prince Bismarck full and removed from his bench empty before all had been said that was in the great statesman's mind. That was a high record to reach, but then the occasion was a momentous one and the chancellor's throat was unusually troublesome.—The Argonaut.

UNCLE SAM'S MONEY BAGS.

Why strangers are Not Allowed to Inspect Them—Disappointment Would Result.

"You must excuse me, madam. I am sorry to disoblige you. But it is an imperative order that no one shall enter the vaults. You would not be permitted to go around alone, and we can spare no one to act as an escort."

This was the firm but polite reply of the U. S. Sub-Treasury to a lady from the country who had applied for permission to inspect the gold and silver in the vaults. She had, in company with a gentleman, asked Capt. Thomas Sampson, the special detective in charge of the Pine street door, for the same privilege. He had while giving her no encouragement, referred the two strangers to the cashier. A look of disappointment passed over the lady's face as the answer was received.

"You would be surprised," said the cashier to a reporter for the Mail and Express as the two turned away and passed out of the building by the Wall street door, "How many persons ask to be allowed the privilege of rambling through the vaults. They are invariably strangers to the city. We have to refuse them, as it would interfere with business, besides which the tour would only result in disappointment, as they would really be able to see nothing."

"But have you not hundreds of millions of dollars in coin in this building? Surely that would be worth seeing."

"It is true we have large amounts of money here, but strangers would not be able to see it, even if accorded the privilege of going around wherever they pleased. They might hear the jingle of the gold and silver in the coin division, on the right and left hand of the Pine street entrance, as the specie is being weighed out and handled at the rate of $100,000 a day; but this can be done without a permit. They would not, however, be able, in conseqence of the screens, to see a single piece of gold, silver, nickel or copper, unless transacting business therein. On certain days, when the government is paying off its employes in this city, pensioners drawing their pensions, or bondholders are collecting interest, they might see a long line of persons waiting to reach the paying tellers window. They would see little money except in the hands of the persons receiving it, although hundreds of thousands of dollars might be paid out. The cashier's window possesses little interest to strangers, as there is no money to be seen there. The receiving teller's branch on the opposite of the rotunda is not attractive to sight-seekers, for although from $500,000 to $1,000,000 are handled daily in United States notes, the screen hides the valuable pieces of paper from the view of outsiders."

"But you have large quantities of United States notes of different denominations in this building?"

"Yes, but they are packed away in safes. If the doors were opened a stranger would only see the ends of a few bundles of paper. This would certainly dissapoint a sightseeker, notwithstanding the fact that over forty-five millions of dollars may thus be stored away. Now, there is the bond clerk's bureau, in the Wall street corner, opposite the Assistant Treasurer's room. A stranger could see very little there, although transactions in millions might be going on. And in the Assistant Treasurer's room there is no display of wealth, despite the fact that he has under his care about $200,000,000 of treasure in one shape or the other. But no permit is necessary to see all I have alluded to, except the safe where the notes are kept."

"But what about the gold?"

"That is kept in two safes built into the masonry. Even if these doors were opened a stranger would only see a couple of whitened rooms with a lot of iron boxes. The gold is enclosed in bags, tied and sealed, and locked up in the boxes, which are also sealed. We could tell them without opening the safe doors that in each safe are about $58,000,000 in gold coin, for they could see no evidence of the coin, even if they went into the vault, beyond the presence of the iron boxes. Certainly there could be little satisfaction in that to a sight-seeker, besides taking up the time of the government employes."

"But the silver coin is to bulky to be packed away in boxes. That would be a sight worth seeing?"

"Not half as much as the one that can be seen every day by the passing strangers when silver coin is being sent away in bags from the Pine street entrance. Then a number of bags containing $1,000 each will be wheeled along on a hand truck to the entrance, thence lifted to some vehicle and carted away. The silver coin is deposited in a vault fifty-eight feet long by twenty-six feet broad and twelve feet high. It is put up in bags, which are piled one upon another like grain in a barn. So far as an outside observer is concerned the bags might contain oats or corn for any opportunity he could have to tell the difference. They are kept out of reach by massive iron bars. A stranger might be informed that there are in the bags $31,000,000 in silver dollars and $10,000,000 or more in subsidiary silver coin. But he could be told this just as well upstairs. The visits to the vaults would not give any one ocular or sensible confirmation of the statement, as he could neither see nor touch the coin. So it would only be a waste of the visitor's time as well as that of the government officials."

She was a girl from Holly, N. J., and she had a mouth which attracted general attention. As she leaned against the railing and watched the breakers, she suddenly exclaimed: "O, James, but how grand! Seems as if I could open my mouth and take it all in?" "But you won't, will you?" entreated a boy who stood by. "Yes, and I have come 300 miles to see the ocean, and we don't want to lose it the first day."

A sliding telephone is the latest. It is a movable telephone that can be run up or down to any floor of a large building, so that a person on one story who is wanted at the telephone need not come down or go up to another floor, but can pull the instrument up or down, as is required.

A rubber ball, two inches smaller than the pipe, was placed in one end of a new natural gas main in McKeesport, and five pounds pressure suddenly turned on. A man in a small New England village has just been brought up before his church for encouraging the use of profane language. He owns a dog which he has named "damage," and of course all the young people in the village naturally call the dog "Dam," to the great scandal and annoyance of the church pillars, especially as the dog always answers to "Dam."

A German company of actors that recently appeared at Brussels produced a sensation with a bear, which pursued a terrified man across the stage and up and down the mountain passes, the man appearing to the spectators to be in iminent danger of falling into the deadly embrace of the animal. A bear lacking the necessary dramatic intelligence, and being a costly expense, the management has substituted a dog clad, tail, legs and body, in bearskin, with a well-executed bear mask. The dog has taken to the part with a good will, and terrifies the spectators.

A gentleman named Lord, from Alabama, some days ago had a fly suddenly enter his ear, from which it was promptly extricated. The insect then as suddenly disappeared. That night Mr. Lord experienced a sensation of itching in his ear. This grew in intensity and pain until it was unbearable. He went to athens for relief, but remedies applied failed to afford it. Going to Woodville he stated his case to a doctor. The acute pain had by this time nearly thrown the gentleman into convulsions. The doctor after applying an anæsthetic to his ear, inserted a copious drouch, which brought out no less than 11 well-developed maggots, wriggling with robust life.

The following comes from St. John, New Brunswick: A huge bull strayed on the Grand Southern Railway (Russell Sage's road) and seeing an engine with a picnic train approaching concluded he would try what kind of metal Russell's locomotive was made of. With lowered head and tail switching from side to side he charged upon the iron horse. There was a bellow, a cloud of dust and a hissing of steam for a minute or two and then all was still. When the smoke of the conflict cleared away it was found the locomotive had been thrown off the track and was lying in a ditch. Alongside the engine was the body of the brave bull, his horns locked in the bars of the cowcatcher. None of the excursionists were injured.

One day a full round voice was heard in her room singing: "He rose, he rose, he rose from the dead." The sick girl was found sitting in the bed singing the words quoted. She asked to be helped to her feet, saying she felt that she could walk, and she did walk across the floor. She said she felt as though she had risen from the dead.

Death of Richard A. Proctor.

The startling announcement is made that the eminent astronomer, Richard A. Proctor, died in New York, of yellow fever. He reached that city on Monday, Sept. 10, having traveled by rail from his farm called Oak Lawn in Florida. His family remained at Oak Lawn and he came alone. It was his intention to sail for England in the steamer Umbria on Saturday, and his passage on the vessel had been engaged. Upon his arrival in New York he went to the Westminster hotel, where he had been a guest on many previous occasions. He was assigned to room 88, a large apartment of the second floor. He was not feeling well when he went to bed in the evening, but he thought his indisposition was the result of his long railroad journey. On Tuesday morning he was much worse, and Mrs. Schenck, the wife of the landlord, advised him to consult a physician. Prof. Proctor said he did not think such a step was necessary.

Knowing that Prof. Proctor had traveled directly from Florida, Mr. Schenck became suspicious and summoned Dr. George S. Conant, who examined Prof. Proctor and said he would like to call in another physician to assist in the diagnosis. Mr. Schenck said he would advise consulting the health board, and Dr. Conant sent word to Dr. Edson, chief inspector of contagious diseases, who responded promptly to the summons. The two experts made a careful examination and also called Dr. Jacobs in consulation, knowing that he had experience in yellow fever cases. Prof. Proctor had a high fever and his skin had a yellowish color. He also vomited at intervals, but the physicians could not be certain that he was suffering from yellow fever. He told the physicians that he had not been near Jacksonville nor any other yellow fever center, and so far as he knew had not been exposed to the disease. A clean bill of health had been given to him when he left Florida.

The physicians knew that if he had yellow fever he probably was passing into the condition known as "remission" when the patient seems to be getting well. They thought it would be safe to remove him to a hospital while he was in a favorable condition of strength before an expected relapse occured. When informed of the decision to remove him to a hospital Prof. Proctor cheerfully consented. He had been told of the suspicions which the physicians entertained, but he did not seem to lose his cheerfulness and expressed the belief that his trouble would not prove to be yellow fever. Next morning Dr. Priest, the resident physician at the Willard Parker hospital, noticed a change for the worse in Prof. Proctor's condition. Eminent physicians were in attendance on the invalid all day, and every possible effort was made to save or prolong the life of the gifted astronomer. Late in the afternoon the physicians had decided that he was a victim of the yellow fever. There was no more room for doubt when the black vomit made its appearance. Until he lost the power of speech Prof. Proctor did not lose his nerve or give up hope. His death was preceded by convulsions peculiar to the disease.

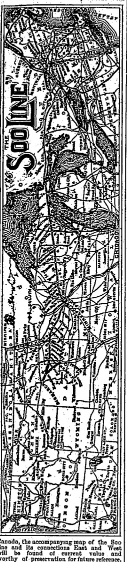
The Sioux Treaty.

The commissioners have secured about two hundred and fifty of the Indians at Lower Brule in favor of the Sioux bill, and it is expected that a number more will sign. Not many have signed the red paper, and several who have done so are now anxious to have their names transferred to the black paper. The commissioners expect to remain a week longer. At the end of that time they are certain to obtain virtually every signature on the reservation in favor of the bill. A young Indian named Edward Ashley arrived in Chamberlain with the intelligence that 280 names had been enrolled at Crow Creek in favor of the bill. There are only 290 adult Indians on the Crow Creek reservation. Ashley says that the Indians have been coming in daily in goodly numbers for the purpose of signing. Chief White Ghost holds out; but is weakening greatly, as almost all his relatives and friends have signed. It appears White Ghost feels deeply grieved on account of the break the younger element has made, and says that they should have waited for the chiefs to act first. Gen. Armstrong is at the agency. He is making a tour of the agencies, looking after the young people who have attended school at Hampton, and is greatly pleased with their conduct since returning to the agency. He feels positive that the reservation matter will be settled by spring, and is of the opinion that the Sioux bill will greatly benefit the Indians, as it will place the several tribes on separate reservations and bring them in closer contact with the white settlers. The general is greatly pleased with the progress the Indians have made at Crow Creek and lower Brule under the administration of Maj. Anderson. The general is of the opinion that the work of the Sioux committee would have been comparatively easy if the remuneration clause in the bill had been more explicit and states to this point the greatest objections are raised at Standing Rock, and the Indians seem to fear that a great share of the land opened to settlement will not be taken up and that the Indians will consequently receive no compensation for it. It would appear by the bill, however, that there is no cause for apprehension on this score. It is expected that the foothold gained at these two agencies will have a great influence upon the balance of the reservation.

THE GREAT SOO LINE.

A Section of an International Railroute Recently Traversed by the Minnesota Editoral Association.

The editors and publishers of Minnesota, after the recent annual meeting, accepted an invitation of the Minneapolis, St. Paul & Sault Ste Marie, to make a trip over that road from St. Paul & Minneapolis to Sault Ste Marie. As this promises to become a prominent section in a great trans-continental highway, and as unusual interest is felt in this route in view of complications with Canada, the accompanying map of the Soo line and its connections East and West will be found of current value and worthy of preservation for future reference. It is worth while observing, at the same time, that the Soo road is completed, well equipped with the best railroad appliances, and is now successfully competing for its proportion of the carrying business between the great Northwest and all the cities on the Atlantic seaboard.



Judge Greer Declines.

Judge James Greer, has addressed a letter to the National Committee of the American party declining the nomination for Vice-President of the United States. He says:

I feel constrained to resign. I am in favor of restricting both immigration and naturalization, but I cannot go the extent of the convention in believing it was to unconditionally repeal our naturalization laws.

The effect of this would be to prevent any foreign-born person from ever becoming an American citizen. It cannot be a healthy thing for any nation to have a large part of its population made up of resident aliens who can never hope to take any part in the making of laws under which they must be taxed and to which they must submit their personal liberty. I hold that the immigrant who has renounced all allegiance to any foreign power, who accepts the spirit of our constitution and laws, should have held out to him the proud honor of American citizenship, by keeping out all who do not furnish evidences before they come of probably adopting in heart and mind this ambition and by requiring them after they come and have resided some years among us to make this probability a judicial certainty by proof in a court of justice. We will keep America for Americans. The convention leaves the public to infer it is immaterial whether we reduce the tariff taxation to the basis of the actual need of the nation or whether we shall let the principle remain of accumulating an idle surplus in the treasury. To this I cannot subscribe. I have been taught that protection, rightly understood, simply means a payment of a bonus by all our citizens to a few of our citizens to engage in certain industrial pursuits. Under the name and guise of protecting workingmen, we are paying to their employers a premium and filling the treasury with unused money without benefit to the workingman or to the nation at large.

Stricken Jacksonville.

Each succeeding day has seen a day of gloom and death, and what is worse, the outlook for the immediate future is gloomier still. Twenty-seven new cases were reported to the board of health for the last twenty-four hours. There were eight deaths from Yellow fever during the same period. Among the prostrations by fever are Hon. H. A. Lenkle, cashier of the State Bank of Florida, chairman of the committee on sanitation of the citizens' association, who has worked indefatigably since the outbreak of the fever. Total new cases to date, 511; total deaths, 60.

The committee on depopulation completed the census of the city to-day, and reported the total population remaining at 13,577—whites, 3,945; colored, 9,812; unwilling to leave, 10,375, mostly colored people; with means for self-support, 3,365; without means, 8,495; refused to answer as to means, 1,390. It is expected that 2,000 or 3,000 will leave in ten or twelve days. The complete depopulation of the city is impossible, and those without means can hardly be provided for in the refugees' camps under a month or six weeks, during which time it is feared the epidemic will have done its work and hundreds of lives sacrificed. The negroes are loth to leave, being told by politicians that they will lose their vote by change of residence.

Sir John and the Treaty.

A short meeting of the cabinet was held at Ottawa and the president's message and its probable results was again informally discussed, without any positive action being taken. Sir John Macdonald said that he will not recede from the position he has taken, and that he is in that fully sustained by the British government. He believes that out of evil good will come, as by adopting a policy of retaliation toward Canada the United States will be forcing the dominion to become self-reliant and dependent on her own resources, which would certainly develop under such a policy. The wily old premier is very reticent as to what line of action his government will follow, preferring to hold back and watch developments before declaring his policy for the future. Several members of the cabinet favor submitting the question in dispute between the United States and the dominion to neutral tribunal for settlement. Your correspondent was the first to convey the news of the passing of the retaliation bill in congress to the government here. Sir Hector Langevin express no surprise at the result, which turned out as he had expected. The government holds to the opinion that President Cleveland will enforce the retaliation bill in so far as it affects the transmission of goods in bond from Canada to foreign countries through the United States territories, or vice versa, as provided by the Washington treaty, without breaking the treaty existing between the United States and Great Britain. Your correspondent was informed by a prominent politician, and one who knows whereof he speaks, that any attempt to enforce this part of the retaliatory bill will lead to a formal remonstrance from Great Britain at once. "I have no fear, however," he continued, "that the bill will be carried into effect, as the dominion government will keep a sharp lookout now that no initiative to American citizens which might call for its enforcement, is given. Under the modus vivendi American fishing vessels secure all the privilges." Either Sir John Macdonald or Sir John Thompson, minister of justice, will proceed to England shortly to confer personally with the British government as a more direct and satisfactory way of discussing the situation than through correspondence, as at present.

Stabbed With an Umbrella.

A man was standing upon the Catherine market corner at Hone and Erie streets, a little after midnight, eating corn bought from a hot corn woman. He had his back turned toward the northwest corner, where two men were approaching each other. Three or four young men were smoking in a cigar store diagonally across the corners from these two, and the saloons in the neighborhood were full. The two men met and it is said that words passed. The man eating corn did not turn around until the sound of a blow was heard followed by a cry and a fall. Then he turned, and saw lying on the crosswalk, leading from Barnum's store to the corner, a man in dark blue overcoat, dark striped trousers. The man was writhing and holding his hands to his face. Between his fingers blood oozed upon his clothes and the stones. Somebody raised the fallen man's head and tried to make him speak, others ran this way and that for a policeman, and it began to be wondered who the assailant was and where he had gone. One of the spectators recollected seeing a man walk down Catherine street with an umbrella under his arm. Others said they had seen a man hand an umbrella to another man, who disappeared with it.

One of the young men who was leaning over the moaning victim started back with the exclamation: "He has the point of an umbrella sticking in his eye." Many got down on their knees in the wet to see. At the lower corner of the right eye, just escaping the eye and pressing it till it bulged out, was the broken shaft of an umbrella tip of yellow painted wood with the metal collar which holds the cloth still about it and broken off with it. Up to the collar the tip had been driven through the frontal bone into the man's brain. The blow had been struck from one side, and the shaft ran in at a considerable slant. The ferrule entered the man's brain. He is still unconscious and cannot live longer than a day or two. The victim was James Fogarty, a peddler, of 42 Oliver street. The assailant has not yet been caught nor even identified.

Minnesota Editors.

The Minnesota Editorial Association in session at Minneapolis finished their business. Resolutions were passed in memory of Louis E. Fisher, who died a year ago. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows:

President, Joel Heatwole, Minneapolis Tribune; second vice president, Frank A. Day, Farimont Sentinel; third vice president, H. O. Bassford, Austin Register; secretary, G. S. Pease, Anoka Union; recording secretary, T. M. Newson, St. Paul; treasurer, D. Ramaley; executive committee, H. R. Hall, St. Paul; E. H. Dearth, Le Sueur News; G. W. McGrew, Crookston Chronicle.

The committee on prizes reported the awards which seemed as much as anything to go by contraries. H. P. Hall, of St. Paul, carried off the prize as the handsomest man; Joel P. Heathwole was awarded the prize as the homeliest. L. P. Hunt, of the Mankato Press, in the opinion of the committee, was the tallest man present J. W. Todd, of the Hastings Gazette, took the prize as the shortest; J. W. Glass, of the Waconia News, was the fattest, and Samuel S. Lambert, of the Otter Tail County Farmer, drew a prize as the man with the biggest head. E. H. Dearth, of the Le Sueur News, was the youngest; M. L. Vought, of the Wadena Tribune, the thinnest; Dr. R. Manley the oldest, and Hon. H. E. Hoard, of the Montevideo Leader, the man with the biggest feet.

At 2 o'clock in the afternoon of the 7th the editors departed in a very happy mood, on the "Soo" railroad, for their three days' outing. "Bill" Nye did not go, but Secretary Byron, of the Exposition, acted as his substitute. The night of the banquet Mr. Byron, it seems, let his old capabilities as a comedian have full swing and in consequence the editors were heartily amused; they therefore insisted upon his company on the excursion.

Looks Like War.

The official announcement from St. Petersburg that previous to the departure of the czar for Southern Russia he gave an audience to a number of Abyssinian priests in indisputable evidence of the close relations existing between France and Russia, and is regarded in diplomatic circles as an answer to the recent sharp reply of Signor Crispi, the Italian premier, to the French note respecting the capitulations at Massowah. Those European statesmen who contended that the net result of the correspondence between France and Italy in relation to Massowah was to establish more completely than ever the isolation of France in Europe have had their confidence in the maintenance of peace through these means rudely shaken by the action of the czar, which evidently means that Russia will encourage Abyssinia to maintain her claims over Massowah, as well as to Zula, another Red sea port, which Italy has taken possession of. The relations of France and Italy have never been cordial since the first indications of a French movement eastward from Algeria. Italy regarded Tunis as part of her own future sphere of influence, and France has all along disliked the growth in the Mediterranean of a navy which, with the assistance of a single ally, would be able to seal up all the French ports. The entry of Italy into the German alliance, and perhaps still more, the understanding which, of late, has so often and so loudly been declared to exist between Italy, Austria and England, naturally enough aroused French sensibilities.

The Trade Review.

Special telegrams to Bradstreet's show an active movement of staple merchandise generally throughout the country, with improving tendencies at cities where relatively less improvement had heretofore been shown, notably at Cincinnati, Detroit, Savannah, Galveston and Pittsburg. Leather has been firm, with an upward tendency, reflected on boot and shoe prices. Sales and shipments of shoes are heavy. Cooler weather has helped to stimulate a seasonable retail demand East and West, which is reflected in favorable advices from jobbers and commission agents at most distributing centers. The demand for funds to move the crops is beginning to make itself felt, as declines in deposits at almost all leading Eastern and Western money centers show. This brings about an upward tendency in the loan rates, notably on call accommodations at New York and at other cities. The Western and Southern advances in iron have not shown themselves in the East except in that quoted prices there are no longer cut. Old rails are in demand and firmly held. Steel rails are dull and within $1 per ton of the lowest price on record. Business failures reported to Bradstreet's number 157 in the United States this week against 116 last week and 119 this week last year; Canada has 22 this week against 28 last week. The total of failures in the United States, Jan. 1 to date, is 6,878, against 6,531 in 1887.

Heavy rain did corn a vast amount of good in the vicinity of Yankton, Dak., and gave a new lease of life to fruits and very late small grain. The weather for the past two weeks has been dry and warm, and the largest crop of corn for five years is assured.

THE PATRIOT VETERANS.

One of the Most Successful National Camp Fires Ever Held by the Order.

Early on the morning of the second day of the great veteran camp fire at Columbia, Ohio, the Grand Army men in uniform, and led by drum corps, began to form for the parade, which was one of the grandest ever witnessed on a similar occasion. There were eighteen divisions, eight of them comprising the Ohio department, which was out in full force. The ninth division was made up of the Veteran Crippled Soldiers' association, Mexican veterans and Andrews' raiders, naval squadron and the Fifth United States Colored volunteer infantry. The department of Illinois constituted the tenth division, Wisconsin and Iowa combined to make the eleventh, Indiana divided into the twelfth and thirteenth divisions, Kansas came in the fourteenth; the fifteenth included Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut, Massachusetts, Missouri, Minnesota, Maryland, Maine, New Jersey, Virginia; Michigan was the sixteenth division, the seventeenth comprised California, Rhode Island, New Hampshire, West Virginia, Vermont, Arkansas, New Mexico, Utah, Tennessee, Georgia, Dakota, Potomac, Colorado, Delaware, Oregon, Kentucky, Washington Territory, Florida, Montana and Texas, and the Sons of Veterans came in as the eighteenth division. Gen. W. T. Sherman appeared on the stand and was received by the crowd with cheers. Mrs. Gen. Logan, Mrs. Gen. Alger and Mrs. Gov. Foraker appeared soon after and were welcomed in the same way. Judge Thurman also occupied a seat on the stand. During the parade Gov. Foraker, Generals Alger and Fairchild, Commander-in-Chief Rea, ex-President Hayes and wife, Gov. Thayer of Nebraska and many others took seats reserved for them on the stand. Naturally this Ohio town cheered the Ohio boys, but they did not stop there. When the other states began to pass greeted them. And this was not alone because they were welcome visitors, but because their soldierly bearing and their general excellence of drill would in many cases win applause from an enemy. Illinois came first after Ohio and a very hearty greeting was accorded that state's noble representatives. Mrs. Logan was evidently their special pet, for the veterans passed by their old leaders on the reviewing stand and cheered and saluted the wife of their gallant Black Jack, and as she stood with glistening eyes and waved back a response the kindly smile on her beautiful face gave evidence of how much she loved those who had braved danger with her beloved husband. Besides banners, Wisconsin announced herself with a banner, which was carried just behind Gov. Ruskas he marched on foot with his comrades. The Lincoln post drum corps received much deserved praise for the quality of the music made on the drums and fifes. Commander Curtis and Senator Miller headed New York's well-drilled veterans. The sight of a small delegation from Maine called forth long continued cheers. Missouri, marching in strong lines, as if just ending four years' active service, received something of an ovation, St. Louis and Kansas City being especially and deservedly applauded. Michigan was headed by Farquhar Post, of Detroit, in which Gen. Alger marched on foot to the great delight of his comrades.

THE SONS OF VETERANS,

nearly all in uniform and many carrying arms, deserved all of the continued applause that greeted them. After the parade about ten thousand people crowded up the reviewing stand to call for speeches. Gov. Foraker took charge of the meeting and one after another introduced the distinguished people who stood around, the crowd cheering each name. More were added and, although the meeting lasted but a few minutes, over thirty thousand were shouting and cheering, before the crowd dispersed, for Mrs. Logan, Mrs. Alger, Mrs. Johnston, Mrs Foraker, Mrs. Fred Grant, ex-President Hayes, Col. Fred Grant, John A. Logan, Jr. and others. This evening the officers of the national organization dined at the Commercial club.

In the evening Gov. J. B. Foraker delivered the address of welcome, which took hold of the audience, and cheers and clapping of hands punctuated his remarks. Gen. W. T. Sherman was introduced, and after a minute of most tumultuous applause he started by calling them "comrades by the acre." After expressing his love for them he said they had given their "old uncle" a supreme place by their noble and soldierly bearing during the day. He remarked "of course we were right. I would not question the fact by discussing the subject which has been settled right by the god of battles." After stating that he was the last of the old commanders, but that he proposed to stay as long as possible, he thanked them and sat down. Another storm of applause closed his speech.

Commander-in-chief J. P. Rea, in his speech said the welcome given by Ohio was never equalled by any other welcome, and the pageant of the day was the grandest of the century, excepting only the final grand review at the close of the war. He paid a glowing tribute to the veterans of Ohio and to the women who suffered in silence while their children or husbands or lovers were fighting and dying at the front. He had attended encampments for years, but in Columbus he had heard less grumbling than anywhere else, and he had never seen more people together. He believed the Grand Army had done more than any other organization to bring about the time when war shall be no more. They had given the world this republic. He reminded them that the Grand Army was a fraternal organization, and told them to be true to each other and their organization.

Gen. Fairchild was introduced as an Ohio boy, now of Wisconsin, and he said:

His adopted state equaled the best for loyalty, and it is to-day true to the same principles. None fought for their own states, but for the United States. They had fought for every state; they fought for the Southern states and got them. He denounced as a lie the published statement that they had fought for the North, saying again that they had fought for the nation. He joined with others in speaking of the immensity of the encampment. Encampments are schools of patriotism and he loved them. He did not love those who did not love the Grand Army, which he said attended strictly to his own business of caring for the old soldiers. In Wisconsin, he said, there is not today an old soldier, nor the wife of an old soldier, in any poor house. He closed by saying the Grand Army was an organization he loved and he believed it would continue its work notwithstanding the criticism of any one.

Gov. Thayer of Nebraska, Gov. Hovey of Indiana and several others addressed the veterans, who gave close attention to all to a late hour. Department Commander J. W. Feighan of Kansas presided at North Neil camp, and an enjoyable reunion was held. The local Woman's Relief corps gave a successful reception to the members of that order who are in the city at the deaf and dumb asylum this evening. Estimates of the number of men in the parade are close to the same figure and range from 65,000 to 70,000, even then all the Grand Army men in the city were not in line.

Political Pointers.

At the New York Democratic State convention. Daniel Lockwood of Erie placed Gov. David B. Hill in nomination for governor. Col. Fellows seconded the nomination. Gen. Roger A. Prior also seconded the nomination. Mr. O'Brien of Jefferson moved that the rules be suspended and the nomination be made by acclamation. The motion was carried and Hill declared unanimously nominated mid cheers and the waving of flags, banners, hats, umbrellas, etc. Charles O'Brien of Broome renominated Hon. Edward F. Jones for lieutenant governor. The nomination was made unanimous. Senator Canter then placed Judge Clinton Gray of New York in nomination for judge of the court of appeals. The nomination was seconded, and finally made unanimous. The convention soon afterward adjourned.

Oliver Ames was renominated for governor of Massachusetts.

The people living in the vicinity of the Sioux reservation in Dakota and the Cheyenne reservation in Montana have been taking active steps this year to put a stop to the custom through which these Indians make annual visits to each other, on the plea that it is necessary for them to look after the condition of their cattle. The savages make this a pretence for long absences, which are no less than plundering and marauding expeditions. Gen. Brooks, commanding the department of the Platte, has given public notice to the effect that the cavalry companies of his post would not go on a summer encampment, as previously announced, but that they would follow up the Indians who had left the reservations, and wherever they found them, would take them in charge and escort them to their agency.

DOINGS IN MINNESOTA.

A dwelling house at Faribault owned and occupied by J. R. Winton, was burned. Loss about $600, insurance small.

John Clements, a section hand living at Prescott, Wis., was killed near Hastings by a train on the Burlington road, opposite this city.

The people of Adrian threaten to annihilate the dog-poisoning fiend unless he ceases his operations. Of course it will be necessary to capture the gentleman first.

An explosion in the gas works at Fergus Falls set fire to the building, destroying all the wood work. The damage to the machinery is not known.

N. Stein, living near Cannon Falls lost his barn, granary, two horses, some farm machinery and a large amount of grain by fire. A little boy playing with matches did the mischief.

Constaner Fredler of St. Joseph, Stearns county, while leading a bull to his barn beat the animal until it turned on him and tore his abdomen open with its horns, inflicting a probably fatal wound.

Sheriff Henry Spaulding is lying very ill at his residence at Brainerd, the result of a slight kick from a colt on his ankle. The injury extended to the thigh and blood poisoning ensued and fever.

The chamber of commerce at St. Cloud, allowed Kropp Bros. $2,800 on the bonus voted to the Tileston flouring mill. It was also reported to the chamber that negotiations had been opened with two Michigan gentlemen who wish to locate saw mills there.

Two freight trains on the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul road collided near Minnesota City, seriously injuring a brakeman named John Graves and badly bruising the engineer. Graves is at the hospital at Winona in charge of the surgeon of the company.

J. E. Shipman, a traveling man from St. Cloud, was very badly burned at Owatonna by throwing a match into a gasoline barrel which he thought was empty. There proved to be some gasoline in the barrel, which exploded, burning Mr. Shipman quite badly about the face, arms and hands.

A dog belonging to George Steele, of Hay Creek township, Goodhue county, "went out of his head" and fell to killing the chickens of a neighbor, who put an end to the animal with a shotgun. A few days thereafter, three of Mr. Steele's cattle exhibited positive symptoms of hydrophobia, and were promptly killed to prevent their doing damage.

While playing on the prairie near St. Cloud a young son of Mike Steinbauer pointed a small revolver at a companion, August Steffis. The boy told him to shoot, and then dodged and young Steinbauer obeyed the challenge. The ball struck a third boy, Peter Steffis, beside the eye. The ball was small to cause a fatal wound, but will probably occasion the loss of an eye.

St. Cloud burglars entered Noyes' shop, opened the safe which Mr. Noyes had to force open some time ago and had not had repaired, and went through the papers, but got no cash. At A. Raymond's carpenter shop they got a bit, drill, etc, then forced the back door of Thielman's hardware store, where they stole two revolvers and about six dollars in money.

A strange freak of lightning occured in the recent very heavy storm at Brainerd. A shaft very narrowly missed the court house, and falling upon the railing of the surrounding stone wall, ripped it down seventy-five to one hundred feet, and falling upon the wall itself laid that low for nearly as great a distance. The force of the bolt was terrific.

Sheriff Anderson of Red Wing, on warrants sworn out by A. Chapel of St. Paul, arrested J. J. Dack, James Lynn and Thomas Tranch of Goodhue county and J. J. Camon of Rice county, on the charge of selling adulterated milk. There was a preliminary hearing in the justice's court. State Chemist Eberman was present. Several other parties will shortly be arrested on the same charge.

Mr. Lind has secured the establishment of a new mail route in Martin county, and an advertisement for bids was issued for carrying the mail from Fairmount by Tenhassen, Lake Bell, Dunnell, Minn., and Lakeside to Estherville, Iowa, thirty-six and a half miles, three times a week, by a schedule of twelve hours running time each way, from Oct. 20 to June 30, 1889. Lake Bell has been re-established as a postoffice, with E. J. Wiltze as postmaster.

How Oil Rockets are Made.

The use of oil to calm troubled waters is well-known, and the latest invention, that of scattering it abroad through the medium of rockets, seems likely to prove invaluable. Lieut. Cottman, of the Hydrographic office, thus explains how the rockets are made:

"Above the rocket composition the shell is prolonged an inch and a half to receive the oil cylinder which contains within it an exploding chamber filled with powder. Some loose powder is poured on the top of the fuse composition and the cylinder then slipped on the rocket. The stick is weighted with lead to balance exactly so as to prevent trembling. All being ready the rocket is set off from a tube, and follows the direction given it. The burning composition finally reaches the loose powder and the flame is communicated through a small hole in the bottom of the cylinder to the bursting charge of powder within the exploding chamber, the cylinder is thrown forward and exploded, and the oil spread upon the surface of the water."

Duluth Herald: The alleged affidavits charging bribery in the interests of Mr. Merriam, which are being published by the Minnesota democratic press, are so manifestly absurd that they have fallen flat and are reacting. That kind of campaign literature is no longer popular.

Duluth Herald: The only objection thus far advanced to Mr. Merriam's candidacy for governor by the democrats is that he is a good business man and as such has amassed a fortune. Had Mr. Merriam shown an inability to manage his business affairs and in consequence of that inability been a poor man instead of a rich one, how much better would he have been qualified to conduct the business of the great state of Minnesota?

The St. Paul Globe says: "The republican party insists on a tariff to protect the manufacturers and the mine owners and wealthy corporations, but it insists that imported pauper labor, which helps to cut down the wages of the laboring man, shall come in free." In making this statement the Globe knows it is uttering a deliberate lie. Republicans absolutely prohibiton the importation of contract labor and further recommend a vigorous restriction of emigration which will in any way tend to increase the labor supply of this country. Gen. Harrison was very positive in the position he took on this question in his letter of acceptance.

He Admits It's a Lie.

CHICAGO, Sept. 7.—An Indianapolis special to the Inter-Ocean says Ed. Gould, who is largely instrumental in circulating the story concerning Gen. Harrison's position during the strike of 1877, some time ago practically admitted to members of fire company No. 3, in this city, that he and the democrats were using such statements purely for campaign purposes, and that no one of sense believed that Gen. Harrison ever said that $1 a day was good enough for a working man. Yesterday six members of the company swore to a statement that Gould had said to them about August 7th, in substance, about as above stated.

Merriam for Governor.

Duluth Tribune.

The work of the republican state convention has been completed, and the party can point with pride to the result of its labor.

The triangular fight for the gubernatorial nomination has been happily solved, and the Tribune takes pleasure in congratulating the republicans of Minnesota upon the nomination of a candidate about whose election there can be no question.

William R. Merriam will, in November next, lead the republican hosts of Minnesota to a glorious victory. The endorsement of the high license law was naturally expected from a party which has always taken the initiative in all legislation for the restriction of the liquor traffic.

With such a platform and with such a leader the republicans of the state will see that Minnesota records her old time majority in November next for Harrison, Morton, Merriam and protection.

Making the State Solid.

St. Paul Dispatch.

After exhausting all the resources of a powerful politician and all the arts of the most skillful of political manipulators, Hon. Loren Fletcher, in the state convention, with grace and completeness, yielded to the inevitable. There is something more sought for by republican constituencies to-day than the skillful marshalling of forces, or completeness of grasp on political machinery. Of all such was Gov. McGill the beneficiary, and yet, even with the prestige of official character surrounding him he was forced to succumb to a young man who has to commend him only the stainless career of a successful business man and a brief official existence, distinguished by the commonplace desire to discharge official responsibility without reference to future contingencies. The promptness with which Gov. McGill and his adherents have accepted the result of the convention is evidence of their loyal republicanism and of the recognized wisdom of the choice made. There is no trace of bitterness or dissatisfaction, but there is the determination to co-operate in the work of the defeat of a political enemy whose hopes of success had mounted high on the wings of possible republican disaffection. Minnesota is destined to remain in the column of republican states. The nomination for governor, just made, removes all doubt. Free trade orators, like Mr. Frank Hurd, will now readily find elsewhere more fertile soil on which to sow the seed of their free trade propagandism.

Fools in Front.

Duluth Tribune:

The campaign in Minnesota has begun after the usual fashion. The republican newspapers nearly all refer in complimentary terms to the democratic candidate and call him Hon. Eugene M. Wilson. On the other hand, the St. Paul Globe is about the only democratic paper in Minnesota which speaks even respectfully of the republican candidate, Mr. Merriam. So far as observed, with this single exception, the democratic organs refer in the most bitter, partisan, malicious and contemptuous manner to Mr. Merriam as "Banker Merriam," or "money-bags Meriam," or "Merriam and his barrel,"

Mr. Merriam has a character which is unimpeachable. The character of Mr. Wilson is not one whit better. Mr. Merriam made his money in an honest and legitimate manner. The attempt to create a prejudice against him by contemptuous and insinuating reference to his business, because that business happens to be unpopular with a certain class of voters, is an attempt born of meanness, jealousy and political hate. It is a demagogical piece of bluff, misrepresentation, and personal abuse none but small-souled politicians will resort to and none but small-brained voters will be deceived by.

The cleaner and more sensible element of the democratic party must be heartily ashamed of such despicable political trickery. They must see that a party which is not manly and generous enough to deal fairly with its opponents, or to treat with common decency opposing candidates of known and acknowledged respectability is not the party which can hope to succeed in this country.

Yet these narrow-minded politicians appear to be at the front and in control of the party, not only in Minnesota but thoughout the United States. Had they been required to take a back seat in democratic counsels early in the campaign, the democratic success would have been greatly improved. The brains and decency of the party have been marching in the rear of the procession all summer.

This fool's leadership it is which is piloting the party to certain defeat in November.

STATE PRESS SAYINGS.

INGERSOL'S AN "ORATOR."

Moorhead News: The St. Paul Globe designates Mr. Merriam's speech of acceptance as "poor oratory." We beg to inform the Globe that the convention did not nominate Mr. Merriam for oratorical gifts, but for other good qualities—his good business record, his good legislative record, his honesty, his freedom from the influence of rings and monopolies, and his ability to get votes.

TO THE WILL OF THE PEOPLE.

Blue Earth City Post: Mr. Merriam was not the choice of the Post for governor, but the Republican party is greater than a dozen Posts would be, and we bow in submission to the action of the supreme council of the party in the State, acknowledging that the candidate selected possesses fine executive qualities, and that the selection is a worthy one.

A VICIOUS RULE.

Lanesboro Journal: It is to be regretted for his own sake that Gov. McGill appealed for a renomination so purely on the basis of a personal endorsement. While in many respects he gave a good administration the doctrine of a renomination by rule and only for courtesy is a vicious one. A candidate should be able to bring as well as receive strength and support.

STRONG WITH THE RURALISTS.

Duluth Herald: Albert Scheffer has loudly boasted that he was the candidate of the farmers. Perhaps he was, but his farmers did not get into the convention, for it was the farmers who nominated W. R. Merriam. Not a friend did Mr. Merriam have on either the St. Paul or Minneapolis delegations. All of his strength came from the rural districts.

JOVE'S AWFUL NOD.

Lake City Republican: When you whip a dog well he likes you all the better. It is just so with the Democratic party. "Me and Mike" have given them a good whipping. They laid the party lash on the backs of Democracy and made them come to time. Now the Democrats all over the State are bowing meekly at the nod of the "two bosses."

A THOROUGHBRED MINNESOTIAN.

Windom Reporter: Mr. Merriam has grown up in Minnesota and is familiar with her wants and necessities, and in his public acts in the past has shown an ability and fearlessness in the discharge of duty that has demonstrated that he is in sympathy with the people.

UNDER THE SNOW.

Duluth Herald: Eugene Wilson will receive as many votes within 30,000 as Ames did two years ago. His defeat by the old time Republican majority will be a grand victory for the Minneapolis mayor, whose relegation had been decided upon by the Democratic bosses.

A STRING TIED TO IT.

Fergus Falls Journal: Albert Scheffer says he has appeared for the last time before the electors of Minnesota as a candidate for any State office. This declaration will not prevent him from entering the legislature again and becoming a candidate for United States senator.

YOUNG HUSTLERS.

Montevideo Leader: The very fact that Loren Fletcher did not favor Merriam was sufficient grounds for many delegates to champion his cause, and the same was true as to many others of the old war horses in the party. Not all the young men were thus enlisted, but the management of the Merriam campaign was largely in the hands of young men, and they "hustled" for all that was in them.

WILL HONOR THE POSITION.

Rock County Herald: Never in the history of the state have the republicans of Minnesota placed in nomination for governor a candidate more creditable to the party and better fitted to serve the state with profit to its every interest.

Austin Register: Mr. Merriam is the friend of every interest of Minnesota, and can do more for our commonwealth, we believe, than any man in the state.

A CLEAN TICKET.

Pipestone Star: Mr. Merriam is a strong man among the growing element of the republican party, and will give the state, if elected, one of the best administrations it has ever had. There is no republican who need hesitate in casting his vote for the ticket nominated at St. Paul. It is clean-cut republican from top to bottom.

THE BOSSES DOWNED.

Sherburne County Star-News: About the most ridiculous statement made anent the late republican convention is that it was a triumph for the bosses. Any one who knows anything about it knows that it was just the reverse, and that the bosses were downed instead of triumphing.

Verndale Journal: The nomination of Hon. W. R. Merriam is well received by all republicans except a few sorehead politicians, who had their schemes thwarted by the younger members of the party. They ought to be willing to grant the boys one victory without showing their jealousy. Mr. Merriam's nomination will bring the republican party a grand victory and an old time majority.

Stillwater Gazette: The Gazette is pleased to inform its thousands of readers that a clean cut gentleman, honest and manly, has been nominated for governor of Minnesota, and his name is W. R. Merriam, of St. Paul.

Moorhead News: We are heartily for Merriam. He has been fairly nominated. He is a straight republican, a man of sterling integrity, of great executive ability, of large magnetic qualities, frank and outspoken, and makes friends of all who are worthy to be his friends.

Fergus Falls Journal: The short speech of acceptance made by Mr. Merriam is universally recognized as having been a model for such an occasion. It was modest and courteous in tone, brief and impressive. It gave to many who had hitherto opposed Mr. Merriam a most favorable opinion of his good judgment and ability.

Red Wing Republican: W. R. Merriam is entirely competent to fill the office worthily; he is young, intelligent, educated, energetic, liberal-minded, honorable and, in our opinion, far above the corrupt practices which democratic papers are beginning to charge upon him. There never was a man so pure that they would not slander him for the party advantage. And as they throw mud upon every opponent their slanders do mighty little harm.

FROM THE TOP DOWN.

Owatonna Journal: Maine sends the first answer to Cleveland's letter. We have commenced at the top and will go all the way down to the solid south.

MINNESOTA BIGGER.

Renville News: The state of Minnesota is still bigger than Hennepin and Ramsey Counties. Hennepin demanded McGill; Ramsey demanded Scheffer; the state demanded Merriam and got him.

ABLE AND HONEST.

Wilmar Republican Gazette: W. R. Merriam for governor and the other state officers renominated is the ticket placed in the field by the republicans of Minnesota. It is a strong ticket, a ticket that is going to poll an old time republican vote. Mr. Merriam is an able, honest, upright man, and is with the people. His record proves it.

A CLEAN SWEEP.

Kenyon Leader: Mr. Merriam's republicanism has never been doubted, and his name at the head of the ticket will give such strength to the republican cause that Minnesota is no longer a doubtful state. The entire state ticket will be elected by a large, and we believe that Minnesota will be represented in the next congress by five republican members instead of two.

Wisdom in Convention.

St. Paul Dispatch.

In the excellence of its candidate and of its platform, and in the wisdom and harmony of its general conduct the republican convention of 1888 is certain to become historic.

Looking back over a period of three months and estimating the force of the contending influences which played so potent a part in determining the action of that convention, it will be readily seen that the outcome is magnificent. Beset by the contending demands of high and low license, of a high and low tariff, of radical and conservative convictions as to the extent and character of the public supervision to which railroad administration should be subjected; confronted by the moral responsibility of ratifying the conduct of the present state administration, in the face of occurrences which aroused grave dissatisfaction, the convention, in the transaction of its principal work, has acquitted itself admirably.

William R. Merriam is a young man, of a type which is all too rare in the public life of the country. Trained in mercantile pursuits, he possesses sufficient scholarship to make him a polished and refined gentleman. While he is a man of wealth, the sturdy self-reliance and democracy which inheres in him is manifest in all that he says and does. Essentially a man of business, both by training and natural bent, Mr. Merriam has always shown that business cares or business success have never permitted him to play the churl toward those less fortunate or less gifted then he.

Those egotists of politics who, four years ago, foolishly accepted Grover Cleveland as their embodiment of purity and capacity in official life, never tire of preaching the necessity of educated young men playing their parts in politics. A few other such young men have appeared in the persons of Theodore Roosevelt, Seth Low, Alfred C. Chapin and some others whom we will not name, and with a single exception they have come from the ranks of the republican voters.

The appearance of such a man as William R. Merriam in the politics of any state is an event to rejoice over. At an age under forty years he has won a success in business life which seldom comes until the closing years of life and he has won it by his own endeavors. Subordinating public life to the demands of his family and his vocation, he has held public office sufficiently long to make manifest his fitness for its most arduous tasks. The man who can preside over the deliberations of a legislative body, reconcile contending interests and protect the public welfare, as Mr. Merriam did two years ago, has already demonstrated his capacity to serve his country or his state in any civil station.

The man chosen is conspicuous among the four gentlemen whose names were before the convention as a leader whom his democratic adversary has good reason to fear. His private and official character is impregnable and he is in accord, in sentiment and antecedents, with the party which has chosen him. With farmer, artisan and merchant he is deservedly popular, while republicans of other callings, who know, or know of Mr. Merriam and his brief public career, will not need much of an argument to be convinced that he is thoroughly representative of his party, its principles and its mission.

Peterson's magizine for October comes along, looking fresh and bright. From an artistic point of view, the number is of exceptional merit. The steel-engraving, "a Reverie," is one of the loveliest girl-faces we have seen in a long while. The full page wood drawing, "A Wind of Fate," is charming, and so is the story by Georgia Grant, which illustrates it. "A London Success" is concluded—it has proved a capital serial; and the second installment of Miss Bowman's "Esculapius in Acadia" is a gem of word-painting. Indeed, any one article in Peterson this month is worth the year's subscription. "La Belle Meduse," by Miss Elizabeth Phipps Train, is as original as it is striking; and "At Break of Day," by Frank Lee Benedict, is a very powerful tale. "Talks by a Trained Nurse" is a valuable contribution. There are fashion plates and descriptions without stint, and valuable information on household and medical subjects. In short, it is an admirable number of a most excellent magazine, and we advise all our readers who are not subscribers to examine it; they will be sure to take Peterson next year. Send for a sample copy. Terms: Two dollars. Address Peterson's Magazine, 306 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

A Herd of Thorouhbred Jerseys for Business.

Hoard's Dairyman.

There are so many farmers who have no faith in the value of "specific purpose" blood, who think their native scrubs would average just as well as the best bred cattle in the world if as well fed and cared for that the progress in improved breeding is greatly retarded in most communities. Then again they have an idea that thoroughbred cattle are "fancy" cattle and that all they are kept for is to breed from. They have no idea that such animals are profitable for straight business. As a correction to this false notion, "so grievous to gain and so costly to keep," we append the business record of the Beech Grove Farm herd of Jerseys in Indiana for the year ending march 1, 1888. The herd consisted of twelve cows, three of them past 19 years, and 15 years old. The average gross yield was $125 per cow. The cost of keep is given at $40 a head, leaving a balance of $85 per cow. The principal use these cows were put to was the production of cream which was sold in the city, thus avoiding the expense of butter making. Each of these cows raised a thoroughbred calf worth from $50 to $100 in addition to the dairy product. As can be easily seen each cow earned, above the cost of keep, $85 which would represent the interest earnings of $1,214 at 7 per cent. The average cows of Wisconsin, kept as a large majority of farmers keep their cows, cost, for keeping, about $30 a year. In truth they produce about 125 lbs, of butter a year. The average price at which it is sold is 16 cts. We can see by this that, reckoning everything, the scrub cow, on the average, does well if she pays for what she eats. There is no other road out of this low result but to improve the chatacter of the cows by better blood.

Silo Filling.

Said to Be the First in the Red River Valley.

The editor of the Moorhead News one day the past week went out to the Tanner Farm to witness the interesting work of filling a silo, the first one probably ever filled in Clay county, if not in the Red River valley. W. R. Tanner last spring planted about twenty acres of ensilage corn, with the express purpose of raising fodder for his stock. It has attained a vigorous growth, and although the frost of the 17th inst, browned the leaves, the stalks are green and unhurt. The corn is cut near the ground by hand, loaded into a hay rack and hauled to the place where the cutter is stationed. We may describe the work as follows: The silo, or place where the ensilage is stored, is built inside the barn. The floor is taken out and a tight bin built up from the ground to near the roof. Its dimensions are 10 feet wide, 32 feet long and 18 feet high, and it is estimated to hold 150 tons. It is boarded up with a duble thickness of boards lapping the cracks on the inside, with building paper between. The ensilage cutter which is made by the Belle City Manufacturing company, Racine, Wis., and costs about $50, without the elevator which costs $1.75 per feet, is set up on a platform outside the barn, at a heigh even with the wagon, so that a man can conveniently pass the corn therefrom to the man who feeds the machine. The cutter is run by a threshing engine. The corn is cut in pieces hardly an inch long, and it runs on a belt in the elevator into the barn and is emptied at the top of the bin. The capacity of the cutter is from six to

TEN TONS AN HOUR

The bin is divided into two parts to facilitate the filling. The ensilage is packed at the bottom on the ground and the first day only three feet can be put in safely. It requires thirty six hours to heat, and reaches a temperature of 125 to 130 degrees. The next filling may be five feet, and so continuing, alternating the bins filling five feet per day. It is said that the ensilage will come out of the bin in the winter when it is extremely cold out of doors at a temperture of ninety degrees. The heating process which it undergoes when first put in preserves the material, and it will remain green and fresh for a long time. Forty pounds a day is about what a single animal will eat, All kinds of stock are fond of it, and it will save large amounts of hay. The stalks have to be handled by the armful. Therefore a device for getting into the wagon conveniently is esential. Mr. Tanner read in some book that this can be done by putting the forward wheels of a wagon on behind and the hind wheels forward, which lowers the rear end. To this is arranged a plank, one end of which is held at the tail of the wagon by a rope, the other resting on the ground. Thus a man with his arms full of ensilage can walk up into the wagon and load it. It works very successfully.

Mr. Tanner will only put a portion of his ensilage in silo, and will cut and shock the remainder. He is much pleased with the working of the machinery and the genral result so far obtained of his first attempt at the business.

Lake City Republican: We place at the head of our editorial columns to-day the name of our next governor, Hon. W. R. Merriam, of Ramsey County, a true and tried republican, a man of unblemished reputation, and one who can and will lead the party to victory in Minnesota next November. Mr. Merriam has occupied positions of trust in this state and so far as we have been able to learn has always kept his faith with his party. We bespeak for him and the whole ticket the hearty support of every republican throughout the state.

Uncle Sam.

(Tune "Uncle Ben.")

There was an old Yankee and his name was Uncle Sam,
And he farmed long, long ago.
He raised lots of wool, on the back of sheep and lamb,
On the place where the wool ought to grow.

But lay down the shuttle and the reel;
Hang up the spindle and the wheel;
There is no more wool for poor Uncle Sam,
"Gone to grass," so the good farmers feel.

A confidence man named Mills, he came along,
Got Uncle Sam to pass a tariff bill,
That hereafter wool would be sold for a song
Protection and profits for to kill.

So knock the mutton, let it drop;
Cut up the shoulder and the chop;
There's no more money to be made in raising sheep,
Let them fatten to fill the butcher shop.

JOHN PATERSON,
City Clerk.

Duluth Tribune: Some of the democrate arguments for free trade are brilliant. Puck has one containing a supposed workingman's reply to a protection orator, in which the working man is made to say that although his wages are higher in this country, yet the things which he consumes cost him so much more. To illustrate this the workingman proceeds to show how much more it costs him to build his house in this country than in England. This is put forward in all seriousness as an argument in favor of free trade. It will be noticed at once that this attempted argument unwittingly admits that American workmen are prosperous enough to own their own homes. This is the pith of the argument in favor of protection. How many English workingmen ever think of figuring on building their own houses?

Duluth Evening Herald:—Duluth Repubublicans are generally well pleased with the result of the state convention and the news of the nomination of W. R. Merriam was gladly welcomed. Gov. McGill was not popular because of the course pursued by the railroad and warehouse commissioners and Albert Schefer could not be thought of because of his views on the tariff and liquor question. No one mentioned could, then have been more acceptable to Duluth and St. Louis county with the possible exception of Charlie Gilman. As Albert Scheffer's political career has been one of many surprises no one will feel surprised at any course he may elect to pursue. It is now quite generally thought that he will bolt the nomination and possibly run as the candidate of the Farmer's Alliance. Such action on his part would not be inconsistant with his political record. He has a strong German following, but his strength with the people lies more in the Democratic party than it does in the party of which he professes to be a member. Mr. Schefer's principles are Democratic and had he believed that the Democrats could possibly have carried the state he would have sought the nomination from them. It is good for the Republican party that a decided stand was taken on the tariff and such a stand could not have been made had Mr. Scheffer been nominated. Even though there may be in Minnesota a few men, who have heretofore been identified with the Republican party, who will sulk because of the decided stand taken on the tariff, it will be better for the party to lose them. Free traders do not belong in Republican ranks and the sooner they get into the party to which they do belong the better. Republican victory in Minnesota is now assured beyond the shadow of a doubt and all the free trade nonsense with which it has been handicapped in the past has been stricken from its code of principles.

Convenience for Stock Raising.

Western Rural: As is well known to many of our readers, Pennsylvania is noted for its immense barns. The farm house may be decidedly inferior, but the barns loom up grandly. Nearly all of them are expensive structures, or comparatively so; and it is this thought of expense that probably deters many of our Western farmers from providing suitable shelter for their stock. It is not necessary to go to great expense, however. Comfort is the thing to acomplish, and not ornament. It is true a good substantial stock barn is a farm ornament, and when it can be afforded, certainly it should be erected with perfect appointments. To make the barn substantial is very desirable, if it is within our means to do it. But if we cannot, and must do the best we can. There should be shelter for all the animals, even if it must be built of sod or straw, or anything else that will possibly answer the purpose. Posts stuck in the ground and the top and sides made of straw will do better than nothing, and that is certainly primitive enough and cheap enough. But except in the new sections, there barns of some description. But many are bare apologies for barns. It is about as cold inside of them as it is outside, and very often it would require but slight expenditure to make them quite comfortable. The cracks might be easily stopped up, and every crack that is stopped means a saving of hay and grain. Provide good bedding for the stock, and let it have it in abundance. Make an effort to get the water into the barn, if it is not already there. Watering stock at inconvenient places is about as disagreeable an experience as man ever has in Winter. If changes can be made in the barn that will make the feeding more convenient, do not rest until they are made. We have sometimes made changes in the line of these suggestion, and after they have been made we have wondered at our unprofitable stupidity which prevents them from being made before.

On all loans we make, interest payable at our office in Crookston.

To Anti-Saloon Republicaans.

Important Assistance that Every Republican can Render by Prompt Action.

The Anti-Saloon Republican National Committee has removed its headquarters to No. 1 Broadway, New York City, and desires to hear from temperance republicans in every part of the country in reference to all matters of interest in their respective localities. It is especially anxious to know who are willing to do something to help the cause of temperance and republicanism. All such will oblige by writing at once, giving a short statment of the condition of sentiment in their respective localities, with suggestions as to what should be done to improve matters. Mere common scolds and pessimistic grumblers will oblige by not trespassing on our time.

Duluth Herald:—Charles Canning was nominated at Fergus Falls by the Democrats of the Fifth District for congress. His nomination suits Duluth Republicans. He is supposed to be strong in the western part of the district, and the Democrats look for a large vote for him from the farmers. Of course his election is impossible. Duluth and St. Louis County will bury him under a majority of 3,000 or 4,000 and the large vote which will be given Mr. Comstock here will be given Mr. Comstock here will entitle this county to a very large representation in the next Republican Congressional convention, and may result in the nomination of a Duluth man as Mr. Comstock's successor.

Little Falls Transcript:—It is a well known fact that Charles Canning was not the choice of the choice of the delegates who attended the Democratic district convention at Fergus Falls, and that he received the nomination only because others would not take it. Mr. Comstock is by far the best man for the place, and will ably represent this great district in Washington. He will poll his full party strength in all partsof he district, and his majority will not be far from 8,000.

Canning's Candidacy.

Moorhead News:—Hon. Charles Canning has been nominated for Congress to oppose Mr. Comstock. This is as it should be. Mr. Canning is an honest man in everything except policics. In politics it cannot be claimed that he is honest. His record will not substantiate such a claim. If our memory serves us he was elected to the State Legislature in 1884 as a Republican. In 1886 he ran for the Legislature as a Democrat or sort of Mugwump, and was defeated. Only a few weeks ago he was a Scheffer Republican. To-day he is a straight Democrat. These are the reasons why Mr. Canning is not honest in politics. A man whose opinions can be changed like a shuttle cock is either not honest or else his mind is so formed that it is incapable of distinguishing the genuine from the spurious. Sometimes an itching for public office will have this effect on a man who intends to be honest and sincere in his political belief, but whose judgment is warped by the blandishments and promises of those who pretend to be able to secure his heart's desire. We would be willing to take Mr. Canning's promise in any business transaction, but we cannot accept his views on political questions, because his record on that line is so vacillating. Mr. Canning will receive as many votes perhaps as any man who would accept a nomination from the Democratic party, but they will be a long ways behind the winner—Mr. Comstock.

Third Party Methods.

Minneapolis Journal:—It is a favorite theme of the third party Prohibitionists that the Republican party is no more a party of temperance than the Democratic. Although the record of the Republican party has been to stand for the highest temperance Legislation the people demand, yet because it has not tried to effect reforms faster than the people demand, it has been charged with being unfriendly to the advancement of that reform for which it has done what has been done by Legislation. The temperance resolution of the Chicago platform has been the special object of hypercritical and hypocritical criticism and denunciation. It has even been charged, and no doubt will be charged again, that the temperance plank of the Republican National platform, adopted amid great enthusiasm by an honorable body of representative Americans, who had just chosen for their leader in the pending political contest one of the most honorable Christian gentlemen in the country—it has been charged by the third party Prohibitionists that that resolution means no more for temperance than a declaration of the Liquor Dealers' Association.

Such a charge is an insult to the intelligence of the American people. It was most appropriately said by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, in a recent speech at Woodstock, Conn., that "as well might comparison be drawn between a straightforward avowal of devotion from an honest man to a good woman, and the protestations of a libertine to the poor creature he would make his prey."

What a healthy influence, indeed must that school of politics exert which teaches by such example as this that a good reputation, good character, long years of invaluable service to the country, loyalty and fidelity in the hour of trial, and the unmeasured sacrifice of life and treasure for the maintenance of the Union count for nothing, and are to be no protection against vile slander and the bearing of false witness!

Chisago County News:—Our candidate for governor, the Hon. W. R. Merriam, seems to be the universal choice of the Republican voters of the State. He is a man whose honor can not be questioned, whose ability is of the very best, and who as a legislator proved himself true to the most honest principles of good government. What more can be said? Only this: He is the young men's candidate, and the young men intend to come to the front and elect him by a majority of such magnitude as to make Democracy in Minnesota tremble for its very life.

The Minneapolis Evening Journal, o Sept. 17th, says: Ever since the charges of attempted bribery in the late republican convention were made against G. O. Dahl, of Fergus Falls, by Izak Johnson, an Otter Tail delegate, Mr. Dahl has been hustling to refute the charges. Today he returned to St. Paul with affidavits from Johnson and all the witnesses of the alleged attempt, which it is claimed completely and entirely disprove the charge. The republican authorities have not yet determined whether to take any notice of the charges by the publication of these affidavits or not. The fact that G. H. Ackerman, appointed as member of the state central committee from Carver County, has refused to serve while these charges hang over Merriam's nomination, may cause the republican authorities to give the refutation a wide circulation.

STATE PRESS SAYINGS.

Mankato Free Press:—The disreputable sheets at St. Paul which began to charge corruption in connection with Merriam's nomination have been a trifle more sparing of their dirty insinuations since it was given out that they would be called upon to substantiate their charges.

Mankato Free Press:—The St. Paul News, which started the lie about the bribery of the "man of the name of Johnson," says it has more of the same kind of lie in reserve to use "if necessary." Well, it will be "necessary" enough, but all the untruths you can conjure up between now and election day won't prevent the people electing Mr. Merriam governor by a good-sized majority.

Le Sueur News:—In Mr. Merriam the young men have a candidate for whom they will enter into the campaign with a degree of enthusiasm never before known in the history of the State, and will roll up a majority for him in November next that will "surprise the natives." Even "Uncle Loren" will feel very tired to think that he hadn't sagacity enough to have been one of the original Merriam backers.

Fergus Falls Journal:—The St. Paul News seems to have suddenly abandoned its plan of publishing "boodle affidavits." Is it possible that all its stock of ammunition was expended when it had printed its bogus statement dragging the name of G. O. Dahl into the mire? Or has the vigorous and unqualified denials of that gentleman suggested to the News that it would better make sure it is right before going ahead any further.

Le Sueur News:—The News was one of the very first to advocate Hon. W R. Merriam for governor, and in his nomination we have the satisfaction of a hearty indorsement. The Republicans of Southwestern Minnesota are going to pull off their coats and roll up an old fashioned majority in November next. This is to be a campaign of work, and it is to be hoped that there will be no laggards in any section of the State.

Duluth Herald:—The Democratic bosses nominated their candidate, Eugene Wilson, for governor. William R. Merriam was opposed by the so-called Republican ring. Wilson was nominated by professional politicians and Merriam was nominated by the people, and the people are doing the voting this year.

Duluth Herald: When William R Merriam was speaker of the house of representatives, and appointed his committee with a view to aiding farmers in securing needed legislation, he was commended by all parties for his fairness. Now that he is the Republican nominee for governor he is the object of the most shameless personal attacks by the Democratic press. The bitterness of these attacks would alone insure his election.

Sauk Center Herald: William R. Merriam is a young man, not yet 40 years of age, and has held the position of speaker of the legislature very acceptably. He is a stirring business man, president of the Merchants' National bank, of St. Paul, and president of the State Agricultural society. He is what is ordinarily termed a "rustler," and represents in full measure the spirit of young Republicanism. His election will insure to the State a vigorous, safe and judicious administration.

St. Cloud Journal-Press: Mr. Merriam will make a strong and a popular candidate. Success has marked his career both in business and politics. He is alert, vigorous, keen and brim-full of energy, a man of affairs, able to take and hold a leading place among the business men of the capitol city of the State. His administration will doubtless be characterized by the same qualities of mind and habit which have produced such fortunate results in the direction of his private affairs. In public matters he has shown a disposition to deal fairly with all interests.

A CHANCE FOR ALL.

Lake City Republican: There is a chance for every young man who is sober and industrious to get on in the world and gain for himself riches and honor. Such a man is W. R. Merriam, our candidate for governor. He is a self-made man, and will make a good governor.

IT WAS NO MISTAKE.

Little Falls Transcript: The nomination of Merriam for governor was no mistake; papers throughout the state express entire satisfaction with the work of the convention, and predict the election of the full ticket by a good majority.

NEXT GOVERNOR.

Heron Lake News: W. R. Merriam will be the next governor of Minnesota. He is a representative man, and will give us a clean administration. Best of all he will not be hampered by ante election pledges.

Thirteen Towns: Prof. A. D. Wishard, whom the democratic county convention had the audacity to nominate for county superintendent, after repeated and unqualified refusals on his part to accept a nomination on that ticket, as soon as the matter was brought to his notice, at once sent his declination of the nomination to the democratic county committee. The professor is a thoroughbred republican, and having made an honorable fight for the nomination on that ticket, possesses too much manhood to bolt the ticket and seek to defeat the regular nominee, either by running independent or as the candidate of another party. During the campaign he will be found in the foremost ranks, fighting for the success of the ticket, and each and every candidate thereon.

WORK HAS BEGUN.

A Party of Engineers in the Employ of the Duluth & Winnipeg Road Has Been in the Field Over a Week.

Capitalists Interested in the Road Meet in New York to Complete Arrangements.

Duluth Herald.

A party of engineers in the employ of the reorganized Duluth & Winnipeg railroad company have been at work for the past week on certain preliminary surveys from Cloquet northwestward. They were sent out by the new directors of the road to make a few examinations of the line before the meeting of the reorganized company. As the line of the old Duluth & Winnipeg, as surveyed several years ago, does not touch Cloquet, going direct from Duluth several miles to the northward, these engineers were sent out to make connection between the St. Paul & Duluth line at that place and the old surveyed line. The company knows all it wants to in regard to the character of the country and the cost of building a road along their old line, and is perfectly satisfied with its knowledge. They now want to find out what the cost will be of connecting with this line at Cloquet. It is understood that their engineers have found a line up the St. Louis river feasible and inexpensive. By this means the tremendous expense of building down the divide into the city over the line as originally surveyed will be obviated, an expense which caused the abandonment of the project six years ago.

At the meeting of those interested in the new scheme, which was held in New York two days ago, business of great importance was transacted. It is understood that A. W. Wright, of Saginaw, Mich., president of the Merchants National bank of this city, head of the lumber firm of Wright & Davis, and interested in the Wells Stone company, will be the president of the new road, while W. H. Fisher, late of the St. Paul & Duluth railroad, will be the general manager, and C. F. A. Morris, late of the St. Paul & Duluth, will have charge of the engineering department of the road. H. J. Boardman, one of the Boston capitalists, for a long time interested in the road will, it is stated, become the vice president. Though these elections have not yet been divulged and may be changed, the probabilities are that they will not be.

This gigantic project, the greatest which Duluth has looked upon for many years, seems now taking definite shape in the hands of men abundantly able to build the road and run it. Duluth is to be congratulated.

Married.

Miss Jessie Wilson and William R. Sweatt Join Hands for Life.

Pioneer Press, Sept. 19.

There was a pleasant gathering at the home of Geo. P. Wilson, 2108 Third avenue south last night, the occasion being the marriage of Miss Jessie M. Wilson to William R. Sweatt, of Crookston. The ceremony took place at 7 o'clock and was performed by Dr. R. N. McKaig, of the Hennepin Avenue M. E. church. The bride was attired in white silk trimmed with duchesse lace, the ornaments being pearls and diamonds. Miss Lizzie Brack, of St. Paul, acted as bridesmaid and William Frary, of Fargo, Dak., as groomsman. About seventy-five guests from Winona, St. Paul, Fargo and Minneapolis attended the reception. The music was furnished by Danz's orchestra. Conspicuous among the numerous presents was a check for an amount sufficient to delight the hearts of the most ambitious couple. Mr. and Mrs. Sweatt left for the East last night to be absent for some time. They will make their home in Crookston.

St. Paul Pioneer Press: Edwin Barbour gave a splendid portrayal of the character of Ignatious Foxglove. He is a man of remarkable versatility, an artist who could do nothing badly. There is a tenderness in his pathos and a rare delicacy in his humor. The transitions were so quick that one was laughing while tears trembled in the eyes. The performance was rounded, finished, complete.

The Morning Post, London, (Eng.) says: M'lle Rhea has a happy grace of expression and winning piquancy of manner which, combined with her brilliant personal attractions, go far to fit her for the character of Beatrice. Nor are other qualifications wanting, for she has also such festivity of fancy and such delicacy of humor as enable her to give apt illustration to all that is most bright and joyous in the merry-spirited lady who bewitched Benedick. Her gaiety is sparkling and spontaneous, and her smile is always delightful.

Mr. Edwin Barbour, America's favorits character actor, who makes his appearance at our Opera House next Friday evening, is the same gentleman of whom so much praise is given in all the Minneapol papers, he being the leading actor of the People's theatre, in that city, for over two seasons. Besides being an actor, he is also an author, as "A Legal Document" is one of his latest successes. Mr. Barbour has, in order to be the more successful, placed a cast of unusual brilliancy around him, foremost among which is Miss Ethel Hodgson, the beautiful emotional actress, Mr. George W. Paige, the funniest of all eccentric commedians, who as an old boy with an eye to business, keeps the audience in roars of laughter from the rise to the fall of the curtain; also the celebrated character actress, Miss Emma Forsyth who, with her wonderful impersonation of "Mrs. Foxglove, alias Surepty Padsnap" has praises from Maine to California. See all the favorites Friday evening at the Opera House.

STEENERSON & MCMANUS.

The Times got off what it considered a witty article on the repairs going on at the round house, saying that "at last the company had redeemed its pledges," &c. This may be all right for a funny business, but we are convinced that it does not echo the sentiment of a majority of our citizens, as we have heard many remarks condemning his freshness. We interviewed Mr. Guthrie as to what the company proposes to do, and he said that owing to circumstances beyond their control they could not do this fall all they had proposed to do, but that they had by no means abandoned their projects in relation to Crookston. The round house is not located where it will eventually be, and it became necessary to fix it up some for the coming winter. The company intends to build a large brick round house on the new site just as soon as they can get to it, probably next spring, and the other promises we have had will be all fulfilled. In the position in which we are placed it strikes us as a very injudicious thing for us to do to antagonize the company needlessly. It does us no good and might do serious injury. The same will apply to other business interests that have been needlessly attacked.

She had a pleasant visit with Mr. and Mrs. Ansel Bates who are doing well in their new home and like the country. Mrs. B. has returned to dispose of her business here with a view to going to Spokane Falls to live.

It is very seldom that our city has an opportunity of hearing so celebrated an actress as the renowned Rhea, who will appear before a Crookston audience on Saturday evening and the reason for it is that as the company play at Winnipeg next week they thought it best to put in one night somewhere enroute to break the long "jump" so selected Crookston as the point to favor. Rhea is too well known to the theatrical world to need an introduction to Crookston theatre goers who will all be anxious to see and hear her. She has one of the finest wardrobes of any actress on the stage, all furnished by Worth, one dress alone costing $2,600. This opportunity is not often presented and will no doubt be improved by all lovers of the drama. At the opera house Saturday evening.

The committee on permanent organization recommended that the temporary organization be made permanent. Carried.

The committee on resolutions submitted the following resolutions:

Whereas, The Republican party of the 45th Legislative District in Convention assembled, recognizing the propriety of that time-honored custom which leads political parties, when presenting their candidates for the support of the people, to at the same time proclaim the line of policy in governmental affairs which they seek to establish or perpetuate, do

RESOLVE, That, ascribing all praise to the Infinite Being who has honored us in the past as His instrument in advancing the prosperity and welfare of the people, we point with pride to our record in former years as a guarantee of the faithful discharge in the future of every public trust committed to our care.

That we heartily endorse and ratify the Republican National, State and Congressional ticket and pledge our earnest endeavors for their success. That in local affairs, we stand for the enforcement of all laws, and especially those tending to promote temperance and morality and to suppress vice and crime, a liberal expenditure for our public schools, the conscientious care of all public property, a wise economy in the expenditure of public monies: an impartial valuation and assessment of all property, that each, whether rich or poor, may bear their just burden of taxation.

IN MATTERS OF STATE

we hold ourselves to be the only practical temperance party. We declare ourselves to be in hearty sympathy with, and to be working for PRACTICAL PROHIBITION of the manufacture, sale and use of intoxicating liquors, but believe our end can only be accomplished by educating public opinion and moral sentiment to that eminence which we strive to attain; and recognizing the fact that the term "license" as we apply it in its relations to the liquor traffic, is not (as some claim) permissive, but restrictive.

But we would not rest satisfied at what has been accomplished, but earnestly appeal to the coming legislature to submit the question of prohibition to a vote of the people, and demand of our representatives from this district that they labor for this end.

We demand of the next legislature such reapportionment of legislative districts as shall give a just and equitable representation to all portions of the state.

We denounce the unjust extortion from the people by railroad, express and telegraph companies by means of exhorbitant tariff, and demand that the legislature fix a maximum rate that while it compensates the companies for services rendered shall not pay interest upon millions of fictitious and watered stock.

We demand that the laws governing our public warehouses and elevators be so amended as to reduce maximum charges and rates of inspection at terminal points.

We demand "State Aid" in the opening of our natural drainage channels that the work of draining sub-districts may be made possible, and within the financial reach of county, municipal and individual enterprise.

We demand a thorough revision of the tariff, and a simplification of its classifications based upon the principle of protecting such of our industries as will by so doing build up our home markets and protect American labor; and we believe that such a revision can only be had at the hands of the Grand Old Republican Party, which by its wise and patriotic action has made this nation and brought it to its present state of liberty and prosperity.

The report was adopted and the name of C. J. McCollom presented by P. H. Konzen, seconded by A. Kaiser. The name of Geo. H. Roberts was presented by Ira C. Richardson.

Upon motion of Levi Myers Mr. McCollom and Mr. Roberts were invited to the floor. Mr. McCollom arose and endorsed the platform in a few well chosen remarks. Mr. Roberts did likewise. A motion to proceed to ballot prevailed with the following result:

MARRIED.

CORNELIUS—THUNE.—At the residence of the bride's brother, Mr. W. E. Thune, in this city, on Sunday, Sept. 23d, 1888, by the Rev. J. J. Edwards, Mr. Matheas Cornelius to Miss Christina J. Thune, all of Crookston.

The happy groom, "Mat.," as he is familiarly called, is one of our well-known young business men and has hosts of friends. For a long time he has been employed in the office of the county auditor and his genial face has become such a fixture that his absence therefrom would seem a personal grievance to hundreds who have been so long accustomed to his cordial greeting. Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius have gone to housekeeping in "Mat's" cosy residence on Jerome's Addition. THE JOURNAL offers its sincere congratulations together with hosts of friends.

To-Night.

Toledo Blade: At the Opera House, M'lle Rhea comes heralded by all the praise the press can bestow. All the week she has played to Cleveland houses, and the papers there have gone into ecstacies of compliments over her fine form, fair face and intense dramatic powers. "Never fairer form was model for a Grecian sculptor," says one. "Bernhardt is not her equal for intensity, and Modjeska and Clara Morris are comparative tyros in dramatic art," says another. We shall see for ourselves to-night.

A Good Detective.

Last week we advertised the loss of a team by A. N. Hixson, and this week we are enabled to chronicle their return and the capture of the thief. Mr. H. all the while entertained the idea that the man who took his team was one who had worked for him during harvest and, becoming fully convinced of it he started out, thinking the man would strike the Northern Pacific road at some point and make his way east; so he went down, intending to strike the trail ahead of his man and rig. On Friday, at nearly dusk, as he came upon the road between Lake Park and Audubon he saw a rig about a quarter of a mile ahead that reminded him very strongly of his own. Riding ahead rapidly he soon came near enough to see that it was indeed the very outfit he was after; so he quietly followed the man to Audubon, saw him put the team in a barn, then he quietly showed up and arrested his man. He then telegraphed Sheriff Paulsrud, who went down and got the man, arriving on Monday. Meanwhile Hixson brought his rig home overland. The man, who gave his name as Frank Clayton, was taken before Justice Spendley and committed to jail in default of $1,000 bail. He says that he was not alone in the matter, but that two others were in it, helping to get the rig out and start him off. Says he drove to Fisher, crossed the bridge and went to Caledonia, thence to Hillsboro, and from there to Fargo where, he says, he stayed two nights and two days. From there he started on Friday morning, going through Moorhead, Glyndon, and other villages along the N. P., until he was caught at night. He is probably in for a term at Stillwater, but does not seem to care very much. The men he claims as his accomplices have skipped out.

The Territorial Fair.

The territorial fair, which wound up with a grand sham battle on Saturday is said to have been a great financial success. As to the display made that was a success plainly apparent to every one present. The display of stock was the finest and most extensive we ever saw in the Northwest, representatives of some of the finest herds in Minnesota and Dakota being present together with many of the best horses. The horse display was especially fine, and he is indeed dull who cannot comprehend the advantages derived from good stock, so plainly illustrated by comparison. The chief entertainment was the sham battle which event occurred on Saturday afternoon. It is estimated that over 500 men engaged in mortal combat on that mimic stage. Col. Cobham Post covered itself all over with glory by capturing the battery. "The colored troops fought nobly" and to this fact is due in a great degree the glorious victory won. One agreeable feature of the case was the fact that the "bloodless battle" was indeed such, no one being hurt which is quite unusual on such occasions. Taken as a whole the fair was a grand success—an event long to be remembered by the good people of Grand Forks.

TO MAKE A CHAIN.

Dr. Talmage Says The Chain of the Influences, Made Up of the Good or Bad Links, Controls the Courses of Our Lives.

The Chain, for Good or Evil, Forged by the Parents---One Poor Link May Ruin All.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Sept. 10.—Today was sacramental day at the tabernacle, and the more than 4,000 communicant members were joined by thousands from all parts of this country and from other lands in the sacred commemoration. The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., preached from Ezekiel vii., 23: "Make a Chain!" He said:

At school and in college in announcing the mechanical powers, we glorified the lever, the pulley, the inclined plane, the screw, the axle and the wheel, but my text calls us to study the philosophy of the chain. These links o metal, one with another, attracted the old Bible authors, and we hear the chain rattle and see its coil all the way through from Genesis to Revelation flashing as an adornment, or restraining as in captivity, or holding in conjunction as in case of machinery. To do him honor, Pharaoh hung a chain of gold about the neck of Joseph, and Belshazzar one about the neck of Daniel. The high priest had on his breastplate two chains of gold. On the camel's necks as the Ishmaelites drove up to Gideon jingled chains of gold.

The Bible refers to the church as having such glittering adornments, saying, "Thy neck is comely with chains of gold." On the other hand, a chain means captivity. David the psalmist exults that power had been given his enemies "to bind their kings with chains." The old missionary apostle cries out, "For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain." In the prison where Peter is incarcerated, you hear one day a great crash at the falling off of his chains. St. John saw an angel come down from heaven to manacle the powers of darkness, and having "a great chain in his hand," and the fallen angels are represented as "reserved in everlasting chains,' while in my text for the arrest and limitation of the iniquity of his time, Ezekiel thunders out: "Make a chain!"

What I wish to impress upon myself and upon you is the strength in right and wrong directions, of consecutive forces, the superior power of a chain of influences above one influence, the great advantage of congeries of links above one link, and in all family government and in all effort to rescue others, and in all attempt to stop iniquity, take the suggestions of my text and make a chain!

That which contains the greatest importance, that which encloses the most tremendous opportunities, that which of earthly things is most watched by other worlds, that which has beating against its two sides all the eternities, is the cradle. The grave is nothing in importance compared with it, for that is only a gully that we step across in a second, but the cradle has within it a new eternity, just born and never to cease. When three or four years ago the Ohio river overflowed its banks and the wind freshets swept down with them harvests and cities, one day was found floating on the bosom of the waters a cradle with a child in it all unhurt, wrapped up snug and warm, and its blue eyes looking into the blue of the open heavens. It was mentioned as something extraordinary. But every cradle is, with its young passenger, floating on the swift currents of the centuries, deep calling to deep, Ohios and St. Lawrences and Mississippis of influence, bearing it onward. Now what shall be done with this new life recently launched? Teach him an evening prayer? That is important, but not enough. Hear him as soon as he can recite some gospel hymn or catechism? That is important, but not enough. Every Sabbath afternoon read him a Bible story? That is important but not enough. Once in a while a lesson, once in a while a prayer, once in a while a restraining influence? All these are important, but not enough. Each one of these influences is only a link, and it will not hold him in the tremendous emergencies of life. Let it be constant instruction, constant prayer, constant application of good influences, a long line of consecutive impressions, reaching from his first year to his fifth, and from his fifth year to his tenth, and from his tenth year to his twentieth. "Make a chain!"

Spasmodic education, paroxysmal discipline, occasional fidelity, amounting to nothing. You can as easily hold an anchor by one link as hold a child to the right by isolated and intermitten faithfulness. The example must connect with the instruction. The conversation must combine with actions. The weekday consistency must conjoin with the Sunday worship. Have family prayers by all means; but be petulant and inconsistent and unreasonable in your household and your family prayers will be a blasphemous farce. So great in our times are the temptations of young women to dissipation, and young women to social follies, that it is more important that the first 18 years of their life be charged with a religious power that will hold them when they get out of the harbor of home into the stormy ocean of active life. There is such a thing as impressing children so powerfully with good, that 60 years will have no more power to efface it than 60 minutes. What a rough time that young man has in doing wrong, carefully nurtured as he was! His father and mother have been dead for years, or over in Scotland, or England, or Ireland; but they have stood in the doorway of every dramshop that he entered, and under the chandelier of every house of dissipation, saying: "My son, this is no place for you. Have you forgotten the old folks? Don't you recognize these wrinkles, and this stoop in the shoulder, and this tremulous hand? Go home, my boy, go home! By the God to whom we consecrated you, by the grass-grown graves in the old country churchyard, by the heaven where we hope yet to meet you go home! Go home, my boy, go home!" And some Sunday you will be surprised to find that young man suddenly asking for the prayers of the church. Some Sunday you will see him at the sacrament and perhaps drinking from the same kind of chalice that the old folks drank out of years ago when they commemorated the sufferings of the Lord. Yes, my lad, you do not have such fun in sin as you seem to have. I know what spoils your fun. You cannot shake off the influence of those prayers long ago offered, or of those kind admonitions. You cannot make them go away, and you feel like saying: "Father, what are you doing here? Mother, why do you bother me with suggestions of those olden times?" But they will not go away. They will push you back from your evil paths, though they have to come down from their shining homes in heaven and stand in the very gates of hell, and their backs scorched of the fiery blast, and with their hand on your shoulder and their breath on your brow, and their eyes looking straight into yours, they will say: "We have come to take you home, O, son of many anxieties!" At last that young man turns through the consecutive influences of a pious parentage, who out of prayers and fidelities innumerable, made a chain. That is the chain that pulls mightily this morning on five hundred of you. You may be too proud to shed a tear, and you may, to convince others of your imperturbability, smile to your friend beside you, but there is not so much power in an Alpine avalanche after it has slipped for a thousand feet and, having struck a lower cliff, is taking its second bound for 2,500 feet more of plunge, as there is power in the chain that pulls you this moment toward God and Christ and Heaven. Oh! the almighty pull of the long chain of early gracious influences!

But all people between 20 and 40 years of age, yes, between 40 and 50—aye, between 50 and 60 years, and all septuagenarians as well, need a surrounding conjunction of good influences. In Sing Sing, Auburn, Moyamensing, and all the other great prisons, are men and women who went wrong in middle and old age. We need around us a cordon of good influences. We forgot to apply the well-known rule that a chain is no stronger than its weakest link. If the chain be made up of 1,000 links and 999 are strong, but one is weak, the chain will be in danger of breaking at that weak link. We may be strong in 1,000 excellences and yet have one weakness which endangers us. That is the reason that we sometimes see men distinguished for a whole round of virtues collapse and go down. The weak link in the otherwise good chain gave way under the pressure.

The first chain bridge was built in Scotland. Walter Scott tells how the French imitated it in a bridge across the River Seine. But there was one weak point in that chain bridge. There was a middle bolt that was of poor material, but they did not know how much depended on the middle bolt of the chain bridge. On the opening day a procession started, led on by the builder of the bridge; and, when the mighty weight of the procession was fairly on it, the bridge broke and precipitated the multitudes. The bridge was all right except in that middle bolt. So the bridge of character may be made up of mighty links strong enough to hold a mountain; but if there be one weak spot, that one point unlooked after may be the destruction of everything. And what multitudes have gone down for all time and all eternity because in the chain of their character there was lacking a strong middle bolt. He had but one fault and that was avarice; hence, forgery. He had but one fault and that was a burning thirst for intoxicants; hence, his fatal debauch. She had but one fault and that an inordinate fondness for dress, and hence her own and her husband's bankruptcy. She had but one fault and that a quick temper; hence the disgraceful outburst. What we all want is to have put around us a strong chain of good influences. Christian association is a link. Good literature is a link. Church membership is a link. Habit of prayer is a link. Scripture research is a link. Faith in God is a link. Put together all these influences. Make a chain!

Most excellent is it for us to get into company bitter than ourselves. If we are given to telling vile stories, let us put ourselves among those who will not abide by such utterance. If we are stingy, let us put ourselves among the good-natured. If we are given to tittle-tattle, let us put ourselves among those who speak no ill of their neighbors. If we are despondent, let us put ourselves among those who make the best of things. If evil is contagious, I am glad to say that good is also catching. People go up into the hill country for physical health; so if you would be strong in your soul get yourself up off the lowlands into the altitudes of high moral association. For many of the circumstances of our life we are not responsible. For our parentage we are not responsible. For the place of our nativity, not responsible; for our features, our stature, our color, not responsible; for the family relation in which we were born, for our natural tastes, for our mental character, not responsible. But we are responsible for the associates that we choose and the moral influences under which we put ourselves. Character seeks an equilibrium. A. B. is a good man. Y. Z. is a bad man. Let them how voluntarily choose each other's society. A. B. will lose a part of his goodness, and Y. Z. a part of his badness, and they will gradually approach each other in character and will finally stand on the same level. One of the old painters refused to look at poor pictures because he said it damaged his style. A musician cannot afford to dwell among discords nor can a writer afford to peruse books of inferior style, nor an architect walk out among disproportioned structures. And no man or woman was ever so good as to be able to afford to choose evil associations. Therefore I said, have it a rule of your life to go among those better than yourselves. Cannot find them? Then what a pink of perfection you must be! When was your character completed? What a misfortune for the saintly and angelic of heaven that they are not enjoying the improving influences of your society! Ah, if you cannot find those better than yourself, it is because you are ignorant of yourself. Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites.

But, as I remarked in the opening, in sacred and in all styles of literature a chain means not only adornment and royalty of nature, but sometimes captivity. And I suppose there are those in that sense deliberately and persistently making a chain. Now here is a young man of good physical health, good manners and a good education. How shall he put together enough links to make a chain for the down-hill road? I will give him some directions. First, let him smoke. If he cannot stand cigars, let him try cigarettes. I think cigarettes will help him on this road a little more rapidly, because the doctors say there is more poison in them, and so he will be helped along faster, and I have the more confidence in proposing this because about 50 of the first young men of Brooklyn during the last year were, according to the doctors' reports, killed by cigarettes. Let him drink light wines first, or ale or lager, and gradually he will be able to take something stronger, and as all styles of strong drink are more and more adulterated, his progress will be facilitated. With the old-time drinks a man seldom got delerium tremens before 30 or 40 years of age; now he can get the madness by the time he is 18. Let him play cards, enough money put up always to add interest to the game. If the father and mother will play with him that will help by way of countenancing the habit. And it will be such a pleasant thing to think over in the day of judgment when the parents give account for the elevated manner in which they have raised their children. Every pleasant Sunday afternoon take a carriage ride and stop at the hotels on either side of the road for Sabbath refreshments. Do not let the old foggy prejudices against Sabbath breaking dominate you. Have a membership in some club where libertines go and tell about their victorious sins, and laugh as loud as any of them in derision of those who belong to the same sex as your sister and mother. Pitch your Bible overboard as old-fashioned and fit only for women and children. Read all the magazine articles that put Christianity at disadvantage, and go to hear all lectures that malign Christ, who, they say, instead of being the Mighty One he pretended to be, was an imposter and the implanter of a great delusion. Go, at first out of curiosity, to see all the houses of dissipation and then go because you have felt the thrall of their fascination. Getting along splendidly now!

Let me see what further can I suggest in that direction. Become more defiant of all decency, more loud-mouthed in your atheism, more thoroughly alcoholized, and instead of the small stakes that will do well enough for games of chance in a lady's parlor, put up something worthy, put up more, put up all you have. Well done! You have succeeded. You have made a chain—the tobacco habit one link, the rum habit one link, the impure club another link, infidelity another link, Sabbath desecration another link, uncleanliness another link, and altogether they make a chain. And so there is a chain on your head and a chain on your foot, and a chain on your tongue and a chain on your eye, and a chain on your brain and a chain on your property and a chain on your soul. Some day you wake up and you say: "I am tired of this and I am going to get loose from this shackle." You pound away with the hammer of good resolution, but cannot break the thrall. Your friends join you in a conspiracy of help, but fall exhausted in the unavailing attempt. Now you begin, and with the writhing of a Laocoon, to try to break away, and the muscles are distended, and the great beads of perspiration dot your forehead, and the eyes stand out from the sockets, and with all the concentrated energies of body, mind and soul you attempt to get loose, but have only made the chain sink deeper. All the devils that encamp in the wine flask and the rum jug, and the decanter—for each one has a devil of its own—come out and sit around you and chatter. In some midnight you spring from your couch and cry: "I am fast. O God, let me loose! O ye powers of darkness, let me loose! Father and mother and brothers and sisters, help me to get loose!" And you turn your prayer to blasphemy, and then your blasphemy into prayer, and to all the din and uproar there is played an accompaniment, not an accompaniment by key and pedal, but the accompaniment is rattle, and the rattle is that of a chain. For five years, for 10 years, for 20 years, you have been making a chain.

But here I take a step higher and tell you there is a power that can break any chain, chain of body, chain of mind, chain of soul. The fetters that the hammer of gospel have broken off, if piled together, would make a mountain. The captives whom Christ has set free, if stood side by side, would make an army. Quicker than a ship chandler's furnace ever melted a cable, quicker than a key ever unlocked a handcuff, quicker than the bayonets of revolution pried open the bastile, you may be liberated and made a free son or a free daughter of God. You have only to choose between serfdom and emancipation, between a chain and a coronet, between Satan and God. Make up your mind, and make it up quick. When the King of Sparta had crossed the Hellespont and was about to march through Thrace, he sent word to the people in the different regions asking them whether he should march through their countries as a friend or an enemy. "By all means as a friend," answered most of the regions, but the King of Macedon replied: "I will take time to consider it." "Then," said the King of Sparta, "let him consider it, but meantime, we march—we march." So Christ, our King, gives us our choice between his friendship and his frown, and many of us have long been considering what we had better do; but meantime he marches on, and our opportunities are marching by. And we shall be the loving subjects of His reign, or the victims of our own obduracy. So, I urge you to precipitancy, rather than slow deliberation, and I write all over your soul the words of Christ I saw inscribed on the monument of Princess Elizabeth in the Isle of Wight, the words to which her index finger pointed in the open Bible when she was found dead in her bed after a lifetime of trouble: "Come unto Me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Is there a drunkard here? You may, by the Savior's grace, have that fire of thirst utterly extinguished. Is there a defrauder here? You may be made a saint. Is there a libertine here? You may be made as pure as the light. When a minister in an outdoor meeting in Scotland was eulogizing goodness, there were hanging around the edge of the audience some of the most depraved men and women, and the minister said nothing about mercy for prodigals. And a depraved woman cried out: "Your rope is not long enough for the like of us." Blessed be God, our gospel can fathom the deepest depths and reach to farthest wanderings, and here is a rope that is long enough to rescue the worst. "Whosoever will."

But why take extreme cases, when we all have been or are now the captives of sin and death? And we may through the great Emancipator, drop our shackles and take a throne. You have looked at your hand and arm only as being useful now, and a curious piece of anatomy; but there is something about your hand and arm that makes me think they are an undevolped wing. And if you would know what possibilities are suggested by that ask the eagle that has looked close into the eye of the noonday sun; or ask the albatross that has struck its claw into the black locks of the tempest; or ask the condor that this morning is descending to the highest peak of Chimborazo. Your right hand and arm and your left hand and arm and two undeveloped wings, better get ready for the empyrean.

"Rise, my soul, and stretch thy wing,
Thy better portion trace."

There have been chains famous in the world's history, such as the chain which fastened the prisoner of Chillon to the pillar, into the staple of which I have thrust my hand on the isolated rock of the lake of Geneva; such as the chain which the Russian exile clanks on his way to the mines of Siberia; such as the chain which Zenobia, the captive queen, wore when brought into the presence of Aurelian. Aye, there have been races in chains, and nations in chains, and there has been a world in chains; but thank God, the last one of them shall be broken, and under the liberating power of the omnipotent gospel the shackles shall fall from the last neck and the last arm and the last foot. But these shattered fetters shall all be gathered up again from the dungeons and the workhouses and the mines and the rivers and the fields, and they shall again be welded and again strung link to link, and polished and transformed until this world, which has wandered off and been a recreant world and a lost world, shall by that chain be lifted and hung to the throne of God, no longer the iron chain of oppression, but the golden chain of redeeming love. There let this old ransomed world swing forever. Roll on, ye years, roll on ye days, roll on, ye hours, and hasten the glorious consumation!

Fire-Eating Toads.

The author of "Canoe and Camp Life in British Guiana" is responsible for a remarkable toad story. One of his men Alexander Paulie, who had seen a good deal of bush life, was acquainted with the habits of many birds and quadrupeds, and about animals, especially tigers, could tell wonderful tales.

His stories of the fabulous "water-mules" and "water-monkeys" prepared me to accept just as much of his stories as I liked, so that one night in camp, when he asked me if I had ever seen a toad eat fire, I conscientiously replied in the negative, and added that I did not believe that any one else had seen them do so either. He said that when he next saw a toad he would show me that it could swallow a live coal without any apparent inconvenience.

When, therefore, one evening in an open-sided house on the Upper Demerara a number of large common toads came hopping about on its clay floor, Paulie said that he would prove his words. He got a few small live coals about the size of dice from the wood fire, and threw them on the ground in front of a toad, while I closely watched the result.

The toad hopped up to one of the red-hot pieces of wood ember, leant forward, darted out its tongue, to which the coal adhered, and drawing it in hastily swallowed the tempting morsel seemingly to its entire satisfaction. It remained stationary for a short space of time, and then hopped merrily away. Paulie then informed me that though red-hot wood ember did not hurt these creatures, a piece of red-hot nail was too much for them. He made the experiment once with a short piece of red-hot nail, which the unsuspecting toad swallowed, but the iron burnt its way out, and the toad went into convulsions which terminated in death.

The Fall of the Mustache.

Barber in Kansas City Star.

There is a constantly growing fashion in favor of smooth faces, and many are the mustaches long well cared for that are going before the razor. It is only a return to the fashion of eighty or one hundred years ago, when no gentlemen would ever have thought of appearing in public with a beard. The fashions in whiskers go and come like fashions in anything else, but the mustache has too firm a hold in the masculine affections to allow the fashion for smooth faces to ever become as general as it was in the days of Washington. If a man has a strong, square face like Napoleon's it is a shame to spoil it with a beard or mustache, but most men, it must be confessed, look better with hair on their face.

How Mrs. Turtle Packs Her Eggs.

From the Atlantic constitution.

A Georgia man who has been roughing it on Green Island this summer has devoted much time to studying the habits of the turtle and to gathering her eggs. He says that no one having taken the eggs from a turtle's nest can get them all back in again. Those who have tried it find that after filling the nest they have enough eggs remaining to fill one or two more just such holes in the sand. When Mother Turtle lays an egg she paddles it in tight with her feet and so, egg by egg, until the nest is full, and the elasticity of the shells permits some extremely close packing that no man has been able to duplicate.

Walter Grantham, a salesman from Chicago, and his two sisters were drowned at Cary, Ill., by the capsizing of a boat from which they were fishing in the Fox river.

A YANKEE IN ENGLAND

It was a cold, bright night in the early part of February, and the limited mail was speeding its way north. The passengers had settled down to a long ride, and made themselves as comfortable as circumstances permitted. Those within range of the light had pulled out there evening papers and begun to peruse the rechauffe of the morning's news, which they had already devoured.

"Not much in the papers to-night," remarked Mr. Barker to the company in general. He was a stout little gentleman, evidently communicative.

A stranger here joined in the conversation. He was tall and spare; he looked the typical Yankee.

"Have you the last edition?" he asked. "If so, you'll find as pretty a little story as you'll meet with in a month's reading."

"The escape of that convict?" inquired Mr. Barker.

"Yes; he's a plucky fellow."

"He's a consumate scoundrel, at all events," remarked Mr. Smithson; "a well-known burglar, and more than suspected of being a murderer."

"Yes, I'm afraid he's a bad lot," said the American. "If he gets away he saves himslf ten years' penal servitude."

"How did he manage it?" asked Mr. Barker. "I haven't read the particulars."

"Broke out of the prison van, replied Mr. Smithson. "Watched his opportunity and stunned the policeman inside, got the keys, let himself out and bolted."

"Will they catch him?"

"That remains to be seen; the police are on his track," replied he from over the herring-pond. "I should like to have a try at him myself."

Nothing could have been further from his thoughts than the possibility of his having to take part in the capture himself. The three men settled down to their papers again in silence.

"What's that?" suddenly exclaimed Mr. Barker.

"What is there?" inquired the others.

"I'm certain I saw a face outside the window," he replied.

"The reflection of one of us," suggested his friend.

"Perhaps 'twas the guard going by," said the Yankee.

"If so, the guard isn't wearing a cap," said Mr. Barker, moving towards the window.

"Got it blown off perhaps," said Mr. Smithson. "Pray don't open the window; we shall be frozen to death."

But Mr. Barker let down the strap and peered out into the darkness.

The engine was throwing up a shower of sparks, and the blaze from the fire illuminated the tender. Those windows which had no blinds drawn threw a dim light on the hedges, but otherwise there was nothing but darkness.

"Anything there?" queried Mr. Smithson.

"I fancy I saw something."

"Well, do settle about it one way or the other, and shut the window."

Mr. Barker withdrew.

"I'm certain I saw a man's head," he asservated, "and I'm nearly sure I caught sight of something moving when I looked out."

"Hadn't you better call the guard and stop the train;" asked Mr. Smithson, ironically.

Mr. Barker did not reply, but looked uneasily into the darkness.

He had not been mistaken. A man, hatless and coatless, had passed along the footboard of the carriage, and seeing that compartment occupied by four men, had passed on. The next compartment but one was labelled "Ladies," and was tenanted by one lady. The convict, for it was he, stopped in front of this. With a dexterous movement he opened the door, and before the lady knew what had happened she saw a desperate-looking ruffian standing before her.

"Don't be frightened, miss," he said, "I ain't going to harm you; I've no time. I want money. It's life or death to me, and I must have it. Your purse, quick."

She glanced at the little handle which was the means of communication with the guard; the convict was standing between her and it. There was nothing to be done. She drew her purse from her hand-bag and gave it to him. He put it into his pocket, and in a moment was outside the door again.

Instantly she flew to the handle and pulled it with all her might again and again. Then, and not till then, her fright overcame her, and she sank back on to her seat.

The convict had acted with the sagacity and daring which had made so many of his enterprises successful. He had calculated that the victim would give the alarm directly he left her. This was what he wanted.

It would have been madness for him to go on to the next town. He knew that men were watching for him at every station. He had mounted the train at the risk of his life as it passed slowly through one of the tunnels in the north of London, before it was free from the network of interesting lines. He must escape somehow before it reached a stopping-place.

But to leap from the limited mail was almost certain death. If, however, the train could be stopped he could make his escape with a fair chance of success.

It is not usual, however to stop a train on a signal by the communicator. The bell aroused the attention of the guard, but all he did was to lean out of the window to see if there were any sign that it was necessary to do more. He was on the point of drawing in his head when he saw a white shawl being waved from a window. The lady had recovered sufficiently to drag herself to the side of the carriage and open the sah. This was enough. The guard put on his brake and signalled the driver to slacken.

In half a minutes the pace was perceptibly slower.

"What's up now?" exclaimed Mr. Barker, springing to his feet. The others followed him to the window.

They had not hitherto noticed the fourth occupant of the apartment. He was a tall, well-built, but apparently very uncommunicative man. He pushed his way forward and looked out. He uttered an exclamation, and to the surprise of his companions flung open the door, and began making his way along the footboard. The others started at him in wonder. What did it mean?

He had seen the shawl hanging from the window, and he knew to whom it belonged. He was traveling north with his sister, and, rather selfishly, though with her full consent, had put her into a ladies' compartment, while he went to smoke a cigar in another carriage. He had intended rejoining her at the first stopping-place. No wonder, therefore, that he was anxious when he found the train stopping, and saw his sister's shawl.

The pace grew slower. The convict bided his time. What was the use of hurrying? No one would follow him in the dark.

But he reckoned without his host. In a few words Miss Morton (for that was the lady's name) told her brother what had happened. He looked round as she spoke, and distinctly saw a man drop on the rails, and make off from the other end of the train.

In an instant he leaped to the ground and followed him. The Yankee soon followed suit, and the excitement of the chase siezing him, he was soon at the heels of Mr. Fairburn.

Nothing could have surprised the convict more than the fact that he was pursued. He soon saw, however, that he was. Still having the weapon with which he had stunned the policeman he determined to put it to further use as he saw Fairburn gazing on him.

The country was too open for concealment, and the morning was beginning to brighten the horizon. The convict grasped his weapon and prepared to receive his pursurer. What would have been the result it is useless to guess. At any rate, Fairburn would not have stopped. But the American caught up to him, and put his hand on his arm.

Don't you go for him" he said. "Tisn't worth while your getting damaged. I think I can persuade him."

Fairburn tried to shake his adviser off, but in vain. The convict, seeing that it was a case of two to one, was about to make a fresh bolt for liberty, but a strong voice called to him to stop.

"If you don't I'll fire," he cried, and the click of his revolver showed that his threat was by no means a meaningless one. There was no choice; the runaway jail-bird had to obey.

"Throw down that thing," was the next order, and the short iron bar was dropped.

"Now march back to the frain, and no games, or 'twill be worse for you."

A few minutes later the fugitive was in a luggage van, securly bound. At the next station he was handed over to the authorities for re-conveyance to London.

Needless to say the American was welcomed effusively by his companions, who congratulated him warmly on his success.

"Well, perhaps it was not so much I as this little toy," he said, complacently. "It's a bad habit I got into when I used to live among a wild lot out West."

"Is it loaded?" asked Mr. Barker, nervously.

The American smiled, and there was a merry twinkle in his eye that suggested more than his words. "Well, now that you come to mention it, sir, I really don't believe that it is."—London Tid Bits.

An Expensive Blunder.

In looking over the printed copy of the river and harbor bill, one day, an engineer officer discovered an item that fairly made his eyes bulge out of his head with astonishment. It was nothing less than an item of $25,500,000 for the improvement of a little harbor in Maine and, although it is clearly a typographical error, if the strict letter of the law is to be complied with the river and harbor bill will carry an apropriation of $47,000,000. The item in question reads as follows: "Improving harbor at Black Cove, Portland Harbor, Me.; continuing improvement, $25,000,000." When the engineer officer read this item he saw at once that it was a typographical error, but he had curiosity enough to look at the enrolled bill. The blunder was there, so that the bill, which was allowed to become a law by the refusal of the President to sign it, really contains an appropriation of $25,000,000 for this insignificant little harbor in Maine. It is very strange that an error of this kind could creep into a bill of such importance as the river and harbor; when it is remembered how many hands it passes through. It was engrossed and read very carefully by the engrossing clerks at the Government Printing office. It was read half a dozen times by as many proofreaders. When it reached the capitol it was enrolled on parchment and read for errors. Then it was examined by the chairman of the Senate and House committees on enrolled bills; again examined presumably by Senator Ingalls and Speaker Carlisle before they signed it on the part of the respective houses; equally carefully read by Gen. Casey, the chief of engineers, and his assistants, to whom the bill had been referred by the President. Senator Frye of Maine is chairman of the Senate committee, which had the river and harbor bill in charge. Still no one believes that he would have sanctioned quite as large an appropriation for Black Cove harbor as $25,000,000. However, it won't have to be spent, for the Secretary of War can exercise discretion in all the expenditures authorized by the bill.

ELEGY.

Through all the silent rooms, from far away,
The light comes softly, seeking for my love,
Through all the silent rooms day after day—
And goes up sorrowing to its home above.

With sad dumb look, with speechless questioning,
It steps so softly through the open doors,
Where all day long the mapleshadows swing,
Alike as speechless, o'er the vacant floors.

I wonder much that through the whole round year,
Patient and sad, but hopeful as before,
It still comes seeking that which is not here,
The dear bright face which we shall see no more.

I wonder much the sunlight doth not know
Or may not guess—the mute and wondering light—
That she hath gone now where the lilies blow,
By living waters, far beyond the Night.

O sunlight, go up higher! In the blue
With harp and crowns and white robes—close by Him.
Thy master—thou wilt surely find a new
And glad young angel with the cherubim.

Her sweet face still the same we loved, but bright
With glories which we saw not; and her brow
Crowned with the light which Jesus gives—a light
Burning and radiant and immortal now.

WHY I HATE A BLAZER.

A man spends a year of his life getting ready for a wife, and after the courting and ceremony are over he finds that even those first few days are not the dream of bliss that he anticipated. His blushing bride brushes her teeth and looks absurd with her mouth full of foam, and has no hesitancy in letting him see that a few of her curliest locks grew on somebody else's head. He resigns himself to the enevitable, and after he gives up expecting unalloyed bliss he settles down rather happily after all.

I had arrived at that state. I had been head over ears in love with Julia, and had worked like a beaver to make a home for her that would not let her be to homesick for the luxuries of the paternal mansion. She was not my first love by any means. I had always a sweetheart or two since I could remember, and had been engaged once or twice, but I never had been an abject slave of the blind god until I met Julia.

Yet now, as I sat out in my vine-shaded veranda and blew my cigar smoke toward its pale green pointed ceiling, I was glad that Julia and the children were enjoying themselves at Seabright, and that I could have a taste of bachelor quiet and freedom for a couple of months longer. I didn't care to go anywhere, but when I saw my old friend, Dr. Marsh, coming up the walk I was very glad to see him, and drew up another comfortable chair and rang the bell for John to bring out a box of cigars and to put some bottled beer on the ice. George Marsh and I had been boys together.

He sat down rather heavily. The dignity that he had assumed very early on account of his profession seemed to have got into his joints and burdened his limbs. Still there were only faint touches of it here and there in his conversation usually, but to-night he seemed almost lugubrious, and if it had been anybody else but George Marsh I should have said that he was embarrassed. Presently he said he had a piece of news fer me.

My aunt, Mrs. Saltor, was back at the Beeches.

It seemed a little odd that I should first hear of a relatives return from her physician, but considering all things it was not.

"Your cousin, Miss Nelly, is, with her," George went on, looking intently at his cigar, which he held in his fingers.

"And is she as pretty as ever?" I asked idly. "I must go over and see them."

"You were engaged to Miss Nelly at one time, were you not, Dick?" George said:

"Yes, I believe I was, "I said, laughing. "But that was ten years ago. Little Nell was only 16 years then. It was long before she began to read Herbert Spencer and Schopenhauer and to write magazine articles. As soon as her mind begun to bud she dropped me."

"She has been terribly ill," Marsh said, and to tell you the truth, Dick; that is why I came to see you this evening. She has been studying too hard, and it resulted in a sort o brain fever, which has temporarily destroyed her memory of the time since she began studying. She has thrown off the overload, and in mind she is the little Nelly of 10 years ago."

I sat staring at him in horrified amazement. Nell Saltor, the pride of the family, insane!

"It is of course only a temporary thing," Dr. Marsh said, hastily, "and nobody must know of it, but she requires the most delicate treatment. That is why Mr. Salter has brought her down to her country home. Miss Nelly imagines they have never left it, and the physicians want gradually to lead her mind onward just as nature did in the first place. Of course there will come a point where she will recognize the fact that she has been over the path before, and then her memory will return and she will be cured."

"That is a very clever idea," I said.

"We think it the natural treatment. And I came this evening to ask you to help us. I knew your wife would be away for some time yet, and except for your daily visit to the factory you had considerable time on your hands."

"Yes, indeed," I said, eagerly, "you may rely upon me to do anything in my power."

Dr. Marsh pulled at his cigar for a few minutes and then he said again: "You were engaged to her about then."

I felt startled.

"She thinks you are still. Remember, these ten years are a blank. Her mother tells me that she is fretting and pining because you have not been to see her."

"But——"

"Of course, I understand your feeling," Marsh broke in, "but after all she is your cousin that you were brought up with, and it is only a temporary thing, and if you could humor her for a little while—"

"Humor her! Do you think she she would see the Dick Edgar of ten years ago in me?" I asked almost angrily.

Marsh looked at me critically.

"Well, I don't know," he said. "It is your beard that changes you and the way you brush your hair and your clothes. If you could change all that—"

A momentary picture of myself of ten years ago came up before me. And I think Marsh saw it too, for we both laughed.

There is no use in going over the rest of our talk. Suffice to say, that before the iced beer was gone I had promised for the sake of humanity and the love I bore my sweet aunt and afflicted cousin to do my best to turn back the wheels of time for ten years and go out to the Beeches the next day as the rather dudish young lover of my pretty cousin.

After I went up stairs I stood at the mirror in my dressing-case a long time. Was it true that Dick Edgar of ten years ago was only hidden under a suciperfial layer of hair and dress? I took up the comb and drew a part down the center of my head. It was becoming. I had only given up wearing my hair like that on Julia's account. She thought it foppish. Her little basket stood on a table near with the scissors gleaming temptingly. I had promised, and it had to be done; but I didn't half mind seeing my cherished whiskers drop. I felt oddly, as though I were getting rid of some sort of a disguise, and in the course of a half hour I stood before the mirror with smooth, plump cheeks and a little upward curved mustache.

I undressed and got into bed with the nimbleness of 25 and forgot to wish for Julia at all.

The next morning I spent an hour in combing my mustache down and parting my hair very much on the side before I could muster courage to go down to breakfast and face the servants.

"I hardly knowed ye, sir," old John said, with the familiarity of long service.

"It is cooler so," I said. "And, by the way, John, take this telegram down and have it sent off at once."

It was to the tailor who had arrayed me in the gorgeousness of my youth, and whom I had cut for economic reasons since I had been a benedict. I told him to send down on the noon train anything in the way of collars, hats, ties or coats that was new and suitable for summer wear in the country. And then I went off for my usual morning at the factory. The box was waiting for me at 1 o'clock when I came home, and I told old John to have the dog cart ready at 2. At half-past 2 I drove out at the gate, and old Mr. Morehouse, who had the opposite place, looked up and gave me a sort of gasp as I lifted my hat to him.

I had on a pink and white striped shirt, a high collar and big white tie, a yellow and white blazer and a sailor hat with a polkadotted band. I knew people would talk, but it was nobody's business how I chose to dress, so far as I could see. As I drove into the handsome beech avenue that gave its name to the old house where my aunt and cousin lived it seemed almost as though I had suffered a loss of memory as well as poor Nelly. My heart had quite a youthful throb. My aunt had none of Mr. Morehouse's astonishment. See had not seen me since my marriage, and she had been living among people to whom blazes of gaudy hues were as the sands of the sea. Her eyes were tired with weeping over her cherished child, but she brightened with hope at the thought of my helping her to lead Nelly into the light again.

While we were talking of her she came in, and then I always thought it was the rest of us who were bewildered. Surely ten years had not gone over her head. She had on a short white frock, with elbow sleeves and a scarlet sash. Her yellow hair was in a big golden cable down her back and waving in a fringe across her pretty white forehead.

There was the same seashell color in her cheeks, the same roguish look in her eyes that was there before she began to think with Herbert Spencer and get a shadow in their blue depths by looking on the dark side with Schopenhauer.

When she saw me, she gave a little cry, and flew straight into my arms.

"You naughty boy," said she. "I don't think I ought to speak to you. Where have you been these two days?" And as I kissed her sweet firm lips, I said in my soul, "She is my cousin after all."

Presently she looked me over.

"Dick," she said anxiously, "you have been working too hard. There are wrinkles all around your eyes."

"You know I have the factory now," I said faintly.

"You!" and she fairly screamed. "You! What in this world do you know about a factory?" Alas! I couldn't tell her of those weary years of working for my present position. My aunt made signs to me over my cousin's head, and I changed the subject.

I don't attempt to explain it, but by the end of a week all sense of the strangeness of my position had vanished. I went to the factory in my blazer, and I am afraid that sometimes I transacted my business very much as though I were the inexperienced boy of 25 that I looked.

But the Beeches was a large estate and my aunt and cousin rarely left it during their visits to the place. So there was little chance for gossip connecting me with my cousin in any unpleasant way.

The only times when I was bound to grow old was when I wrote to Julia, and before a week was over, and I was in the full swim of my newly acquired youth, an accident happened that put me out of that. I sprained my right thumb and could not hold a pen. I telegraphed and told her and added that I would telegraph every other day, which I religiously did. Or rather Mr. Smith, my bookkeeper, did it for me.

Nelly and I wandered about through the old groves, finding here and there truelovers' knots that we had cut in the smooth back of the beeches long ago. We used to carry a little basket that held our lunch and a volume of poems or a new novel.

There were a great many clever little novels that Nellie had not read. Of course we had to keep magazines and everything with a date out of her way. One day in going over the library shelves I came across an old book that gave me the shivers. It was Mallock's "Is Life Worth Living?" It was that that had first started Nellie on the path that had led her away from me long ago. Instinctively I hid it behind a row of encyclopedias. And then I knew that I was playing the part of a traitor. I had been excusing myself from my perilously pleasant position by the assurance that I was the only person who could lead Nellie into her true lite. And when I saw the door open before her I ran to close it.

I took the book out again and took it with me when we went on our morning ramble. When she saw it I trembled. But instead of picking it up as I expected her to, she looked at it scornfully and flung it down.

"Dick," she said, poutingly, "you are too tiresome! What do you suppose I want with stuff like that?"

There was a great guilt of throb of joy in my heart.

"—I—It has a red cover," I said, lamely; "I thought it was a story."

Just then she saw the corner of an envelope sticking out of my pocket. It was Julia's last letter that I had received that morning, and had not even opened. She gave it a little jerk and pulled it out. Julia writes the Eastlakey ultra feminine hand of ten years ago. And the thick letter lay proclaiming itself from a lady.

Nelly looked at it and then she looked at me, and there was the sarcasm of inexperience in her eye and voice. "You have no sisters, I believe she said icily.

"This—" I said in my quietest tone —"is from the wife of a friend of mine. A lady 30 years old and the mother of two children. She writes to me sometimes and gives me good advice and tells me little anecdotes about the children. I will read you some of it if you like."

Bless her heart! She turned and kissed me on the cheek and said pityingly:

"Poor boy! How you do let your good nature make a martyr of you. Don't you find them awful bores?"

"Yes," I said candidly. "When the advice is extra good I do."

"And do you answer them?"

"Well," I said, "this is the tenth I have had since I answered one." Which was the truth. I don't call a telegram that is sent by a book-keeper an answer to a letter.

Going home across the fields we came to a ditch.

"I don't seem to remember this ditch here," Nelly said. "And how are we ever going to cross?"

"I'll jump it," I said, "and lift you over."

"Oh, but Dick, dearest, you can't," she said. "I am too heavy."

"Heavy!" said I. "Yes, you are. Why, my boy Johnny could jump this with you in his arms."

"Your boy Johnny? Who are you talking about? You do say some of the funniest things!"

"Oh," I saik, airly, "I mean the little son of the lady whose letter I was showing you. He is a great pet of mine."

We walked along silently for a little while after th ditch was jumped and then Nelly said in a dreamy sort of a way:

"Dick, sometimes you seem different. You don't laugh as much as you used last Summer." Dear heart! Last summer was eleven years old!

"And you seem more brusque some way. I am afraid you are working too hard, dear Dick. And—some way you seem fond of me in a different way. You don't" —and the clear red of a sweet young girl's blush went all over her cheeks and brow—"kiss me as often as you used—and you act like you thought I was going away presently."

She finished the sentence with her head on my breast and I kissed her often enough to make up for any lack that had gone before, and cursed myself in my heart for a black scoundrel, and doubly cursed Marsh, who had got me into this scrape.

As I went home that night I made up my mind to end it one way or another. She would have to be told sooner or latter that I was 35 years old. That I had been deceiving her, that I had a wife and two children. The sweat stood out on my face as I thought of it. Julia would be coming home in a few weeks, and I felt that I would rather drown myself than face poor Nelly with my wife, in her present state of mind. As I entered my own door John met met me. I was conscious that he looked with much disfavor upon my youthful appearance and dress and judged that my habitual absences were for no good.

He handed me a card on his tray and told me that the gentleman was in the library.

The card read:

"John William Abernathy, Andover."

John William Abernathy I knew as a professor of mental philosophy at a noted seat of learning. I could not imagine what he could want with me.

As I entered my pretty little library a tall, gaunt, grizzled gentleman in a long tailed coat rose to meet me. His forehead was bald and shiny, and his small eyes glimmered behind glasses.

He evidently was surprised to find so youthful a host. Some of my innovations in the factory have been talked about, and may have even penetrated mental philosophy circles.

He began at once to tell me his business. He wanted to ask after my cousin Nelly ("Miss Helen," he called her); if she had sufficiently recovered to see her friends. Mrs. Saltor had written him several weeks before that her daughter's health was still in a very precarious state, and she could not be disturbed by letters or visits, but Professor Abernathy had heard in some way that she had been out, and before he attempted to seek her he would like to know her true state. And then he smiled a little and gave me to understand that "Miss Helen" had given him the hope that she would eventually give her life, in sickness or health, into his keeping.

In the most polite manner I could muster I told him that I thought he had beter wait until Mrs. Saltor signified her willingness to allow her daughter. As yet she had seen no one but her physician and myself.

After promising to ask Mrs. Saltor's permission for the elderly love to see her daughter I bowed the professor out, and; sitting down in my hands and groaned aloud. And then I walked the floor.

In the midst of my agony there was a ring at the door bell. I composed my face as much as possible and sat down.

My visitor was Mr. Smith, the bookkeeper at the factory; and he had a telegram in his hand. It only needed that to make my position past endurance, it seemed to me, for the telegram was from my wife, and said: "Will be at home Tuesday at 6.30."

To-morrow was Tuesday. I did not spring up and clap my hands for joy.

I wondered why Mr. Smith had thought it necessary to bring the telegram instead of sending it by a messenger; but presently I discovered.

After numerous very embarrassed apologies, he said that he thought it his duty to warn me that there had been a great many remarks made by meddlesome people concerning my changed manner and appearance, and some of the conservative old stockholders in the factory were becoming alarmed. "Although it seems a pity," Mr. Smith said laughing shortly, "that a man can't buy a new coat without laying himself out to a charge of insanity."

Good heavens! had it come to this! I must have looked like a fool. I got Mr. Smith out of the house, and I went up stairs and took three times as much brandy as was good for me and went to bed. I felt that if I didn't have sleep I would blow my brains out.

It was 11 o'clock next day when I awoke.

I told John to bring me in some strong coffee and I sat miserably down.

I sipped my coffee, and the clock was just on the strpke of 12 when John came in again bringing a note in his hand.

I took it feeling that it made no difference what happened to me. Wasn't the end of the world coming at 6.30 P. M? My head was whirling. It was a severe looking little note on commercial paper, and this is what it said:

"I can not find words to express my sense of horror at the base advantage you—a relative, and a man who bears the name of gentlemen—have taken of a woman defenseless through illness. To-day while walking I encountered Professor Abernathy, and at one rush my memory returned, making me horror-struck at the ignominious position you—abetted by Dr. Marsh and my mother—have striven to place me in. I only hope that your poor wife may never know the circumstances. She must have enough to bear in her daily life. I can not long live with my mother and shall marry Professor Abernathy at once. To him you will be good enough to return my ring which you wear. Yours unforgivingly, HELEN JANE SALTOR."

I dragged myself upstairs and took out my razors. I lighted a match and burned Helen's letter, and then I shaved off that frivolous little mustache and left my face clean and bare.

I bundled up all the new shirts and collars and hats and coats and told John he might have them on condition he took them out of the house and sold them at once, and then I parted my hair just over my right ear and put on my shabbiest old clothes and went to the factory.

I had nearly as many stares as greeted me when I first appeared in my yellow and white blazer, but my looks encouraged no remarks. That night when Julia saw me she gave a little scream.

"What have you done to yourself?"

"Only shaved to strengthen my beard," I said. "I thought it would grow before your return."

"I rather like it," she said.

The next morning at breakfast she took in my shabby gray suit, and said: "Dick, why don't you wear a blazer— around here— all the men at the shore—"

"Hang a blazer!" was all I said.

The Protest and the Reformation.

There sometimes appears to be a woful confusion, in the minds of those who ought to know better, of the Protest with the Reformation. Historically the connection between the two does not by any means appear so very plain. In fact, for some years the Protestant Church of England was still completely unreformed. Henry VIII. wrote against and persecuted reformers; yet Henry VIII. was undoubtedly the first Protestant monarch of England, the first who asserted, to its full logical conclusion, the independence of Papal authority which had been claimed by English kings as early as William the Conqueror.

According to the "Dictate" of Gregory VII., the famous Hildebrand, kings only reign as fiefs of the Pope —he is set over the secular powers, and is liable to dethrone sovereigns and to absolve subjects from their allegiance; he can depose bishops without synodical sanction. It is curious to notice, from a recent sermon of Cardinal Manning, that this eminent ultramontane holds that such powers still divinely inhere in the bishopric of Rome, though the stress of external persecution prevents their exercise. Protestants, as such, merely repudiate these claims. The Reformation in England owed much of its success to the Protest, but it is not an identical, it was scarcely even a contemporary movement. It was, humanly speaking, a distinctly intellectual reaction. It resulted immediately from the new light brought by the revival of letters, particularly from the study of Greek, and the new means of interpretation which a knowledge of the original tongue of the New Testament supplied.

In the light and liberty of the Renaissance men's minds, on a review of Christian antiquity, turned away from error and superstition just as naturally as a renewed acquaintance with the models of the Augustan age, and the sources of Greek speculation in Plato and Aristotle, caused thinkers and scholars to repudiate monkish Latin and monkish philosophy. —The Churchman.

DAKOTA NEWS.

The first invoice of Mankato stone for the construction of street crossings arrived at Yankton.

A camp-meeting at Lead City has been obliged to finish its session in the M. E. church on account of cold weather.

The Deadwood flouring mills will begin grinding soon. Some 8,000 bushels of wheat are on hand for a starter.

The new city water-works pump at Grand Forks has been tested. It has a capacity of 3,000 gallons of water per day.

Dakota papers are publishing the law in regard to setting fire to the prairies, hoping that some individual will be benefited thereby.

The harvest home festival idea has seized the inhabitants of Spring Valley and the occasion promises to be one of uncommon interest.

The mayor of Aberdeen has sent for a number of balls and chains, and a chain gang will soon be doing duty on the streets of that city.

A careful estimate made by an old traveling man places the average amount of money left daily in Aberdeen by traveling men at $250.

"Three of the leading churches in Yankton have excellent pipe organs, a fact which cannot be noted by another Dakota town," says the Press.

A small herd of buffaloes swimming the Missouri river north of Bismarck is the latest novelty reported. No affidavits accompany the report.

At a meeting held in Yankton a resolution was adopted censuring the newspaper correspondents of that city who give away the open secrets of the community.

Two freight trains collided two miles west of Mandan. There was considerable damage to rolling stock, the engine and four cars being badly smashed. No one was hurt.

Howard citizens offer any couple who will get married on the fair grounds the last day of the Miner county fair the following special premiums, viz: A cook stove, set of bed clothing, suit of clothes, silver caster and an elegant cradle.

The stock shipments from the Black Hill ranges to Chicago and Omaha are now in progress, and are proving the heaviest ever yet made in any single season. Not far short of 100,000 head have been shipped out and the country is richer by about $3,000,000.

A prairie fire swept down upon the bluffs southeast of La Grace at a rapid pace to within half a mile of town when it was intercepted by Spring river. People along its course by hard fighting managed to save their property, except in three instances. Parties fought and back fired until 3 o'clock in the morning. Two men became completely exhausted.

The prosecution for violation of the local option law in Union county, has developed a new feature in the war. Sheriff Bovee of that county arrived in the city with three prisoners for the penitentiary, two of whom were sentenced for the violation of the local option law, by selling liquor without a license. The names of the local option victims are William Gillen and John Teller, Jr. The former was unable to liquidate a fine of $200 and the latter $300.

The Insurance Company of Dakota, which has been in a precarious condition for several months, was knocked out by Judge Garland, who, upon complaint of foreign creditors, appointed A. M. Crosby, recently of Mankato, Minn., receiver of the company. The liabilities are about $200,000, exclusive of the obligations incurred by the recent absorption of the Western Fire and Marine. The assets are about $20,000. The company was always a rotten concern.

The county jail at Deadwood, is full of prisoners, many of whom have been sentenced to the penitentiary for terms running from one year to a life sentence. They have not looked forward to Sioux Falls with pleasure, but on the contrary they sigh for outside, mountain air. They decided to try and break jail, and had succeeded in cutting partly through several of the bars of the north side window. The sheriff made the discovery and has consequently placed a guard in the corridor.

J. S. Alloway, territorial veterinary surgeon, in Yankton investigated the epidemic among cattle which has prevailed and from the effects of which several cattle have died. Local veterinarians were unable to diagnose the disease medicinally, but Dr. Alloway pronounces it anthrax, or, vulgarly, blacking. The disease is an affection of the third stomach and death comes within twenty-four hours after the first appearance of symptoms, but not necessarily fatal. The cause is ascribed to the extreme dry term of the last few weeks. The disease is contagious. It is believed that the progress is now stopped.

A Strange Hereditary Peculiarity.

The duke of Simonetta, an Italian nobleman, who is making a name as a musical composer, is the descendant of a long line of dukes who have a strange peculiarity. They have jet black hair, and just above the forehead a white tuft. This they had for a long series of years, until the father of the present duke was born some sixty years ago. He had a thick curly head of brown hair, without a particle of white, and with him it was supposed there was an end of the special mark. But his son is a tall, handsome man, with a head of black hair, and he has exactly the same white tuft.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

There is one time when a bank teller doesn't tell—and that is when he is comtemplating a trip to Canada,

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria,
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria,
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria,
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

A Permanent Discovery.—"And so," said he bitterly, when he realized that she had rejected him, "and so you have been flirting heartlessly with me all the while. Well, thank Heaven, I have found you out at last!"

"Yes," he replied, "you have; and what is more, I think you will always find me out hereafter when I call."—Somerville Journal.

Citizen to Merchant—How is it you seem to be flourishing so well of late? Last time we met you complained bitterly of dull times.

Merchant—True, my friend, but soon afterwards a conflagration visited our store and so injured the stock that we were able to realize large and quick profits by working them off on the public at a great "fire sale."

The Poor Little Ones.

We often see children with red eruptions on face and hands, rough, scaly skin, and often sores on the head. These things indicate a depraved condition of the blood. In the growing period, children have need of pure blood by which to build up strong and healthy bodies. If Doctor Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is given, the blood is purged of its bad elements, and the child's developement will be healthy, and as it should be. Scrofulous affections, rickets, fever-sores, hip-joint disease or other grave maladies and suffering are sure to result from neglect and lack of proper attention to such cases.

A report is current in New Orleans to the effect that the late United States marshal, R. B. Pleasants, was a defaulter to the amount of $53,000. Gen. W. J. Behan, one of the late marshal's bondsmen, stated that a deficiency existed, but it was not as large as had been rumored.

Republican Hot Shot.

That Jingo Message.

I'll twist the British lion's tail,
I'll make the Canucks fear me;
We've got to fish, and they cut bait—
By jingo, boys, you hear me!

I'll pile the earth with English dead,
If you will all stand near me,
And capture every Irish vote—
By jingo, boys, you hear me!

I'll crush the Senate at a blow,
And those who always jeer me;
I'll make it break it's party's neck,
By jingo, boys, you hear me!

I had not thought to call a turn
That would as this endear me;
But Providence protects its own,
By jingo, boys, you hear me!

Now let us all rejoice and sing,
And Democrats come near me;
If I come back you take the earth—
By jingo, boys, you hear me.
—Washington Critic.

No Gains in the North.

No "Democratic gains" will be heard of in any state of the loyal and industrial North in this year of grace.

The People Know Him.

It is entirely useless for the President to talk now about protecting the interests of labor. The people know him and will vote accordingly.—Cleveland Leader.

Campaign Contributions.

With a ten-thousand dollar check, and a three-column stump speech, Mr. Cleveland may be credited with having done something in the campaign.—Des Moines Register.

Determined to Have a Sure Thing.

Arkansas politicians seem disposed to keep that state solid for Democratic reform if they have to steal the ballot boxes of every Republican precinct in the state.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Where They Gain.

The American workingmen and farmers gain more through protection as producers than they lose as consumers, and everybody else shares in their prosperity through increased business activity.—Cleveland Leader.

Was Never Beaten.

The Democrats find encouragement in the fact that Grover Cleveland was never beaten. The same was true of Martin Van Buren until he ran for President the second time against the grandfather of the man who is making it very interesting for Grover just now.—Denver Evening Times.

The Democratic Idea

If there is one man between the St. Croix river and Puget sound whose vote for president will be affected by the whines of Dakota, we should be glad to publish his name. The roll of states is well filled up already. New candidates for admission must present stronger credentials than Dakota can as yet bring.—New York Sun.

Gain Control of Congress.

Mr. Nelson's advice is good. Let every friend of the American industrial system work for the election of Harrison this year, "and strike for tariff reform afterward." But let them see to it that the Republicans are placed in control in Congress, also, without which tariff reform worthy of the name is impossible.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

Again the Witnesses Disagree.

President Cleveland weakly says, "We have entered upon no crusade of free trade." The London (England) Chronicle triumphantly says, "Cleveland may give it any name he likes, as long as we know it is in fact a crusade of free trade."

There is no better authority in the world in the matter of identifying a free-trade crusade, than the average Englishmen.

"Thou Hypocrite!"

In his letter of acceptance President Cleveland pleads for a "generous regard and care for our surviving soldiers and sailors and for the widows and orphans of such as have died."

For particulars as to his sincerity, read any one of his scores of messages vetoing pensions which Congress, after due deliberation and investigation, had granted, to worthy old soldiers and soldiers' widows.

As towards the boys in blue the President is Janus-faced if ever man was.

The People and the Pensioners.

The people of this country do not look upon the applicants for pensions as so many persons who may be abused with impunity by a democratic president who sent a substitute to the war, and sympathized with secession, and was sorry when Lee, instead of Grant, surrendered at Appomattox. They cannot be made to believe, under any circumstances, that men who were equal to the highest efforts of patriotic courage and sacrifice when the life of the government was in danger are now generally capable of wronging that government and degrading themselves by acts of criminal deception.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

It's a Boomerang.

The venemous attacks made by the copperhead and free trade organs of a conscienceless party upon General Harrison in reference to certain falsehoods attributed to him in regard to railroad employes are working with a contrary effect. Instead of influencing the railroad men of Indiana against the General they have enlisted their hearty sympathies in his behalf, and no class is so well organized and so much in earnest in their work for him as the railroad men of Indiana. They know how false and how malicious these assertions of irresponsible editors and politicians are, and they are endeavoring to show by their organization and action what little regard they have for a party that stoops to such methods. When General Harrison's plurality comes rolling up in Indiana in November not a little of it will be due to the railroad employes whom the Democracy thought they could catch with chaff.—Cleveland Leader.

The Contrast Is Very Marked.

When I asked a strong blacksmith in Brussels, Belgium, says a New York Mail and Express writer, how much he got he wiped the steaming sweat from his brow on his shirt sleeve and said:

"I get fifty cents a day."

"Is this enough to support you?" I asked.

"I have a wife and five children," he said sadly, "and we do not starve."

When I asked the proprietor of the machine shop why he didn't pay those skilled men more, he said:

"Because I'm handicapped. I sell my car springs in America, and when I get into New York harbor with one hundred dollars worth of car springs I have to salute your American flag and give up $50 as duty. I only get $50 for what your manufacturer gets $100."

"Where does this $50 that you pay as duty come from?" I asked.

"Why, it comes from my men's wages. That is why I can only pay fifty cents per day, while you Americans pay a dollar and a half."

"But suppose our government should take off this tariff and let your car springs come in free?" I asked.

"What!" he exclaimed, "let me secure $100 where I now get fifty?"

"Yes, that's it."

"Why I'd flood you with car springs. I'd double my works here. I'd fill New York harbor with them," he continued enthusiastically.

"But would not this break up our workmen who are getting a dollar and a half a day for making these same car springs in America?" I asked.

"Yes, it would break them up for a while, but—"

"But how long would it break them up?" I interrupted.

"Why, sir, until they were willing to work for fifty cents a day like our men."

Progress of the Plague.

Jacksonville has now sunk into a perfect state of apathy. There is absolutely no business, and even the doors that were open a week ago are closed and their owners going away. The only place where any life is seen is at the Travelers hotel, which has been turned into the headquarters of the medical and relief bureau and the various commissary stores of the relief committee, which latter has had W. B. Owen at its head since the departure of J. G. Jones. The citizens' association meets daily, but the attendance is very small, only members of the various committees and a few others being present.

In East Jacksonville the fever has been pretty well through all the white families and it is now working on the colored folks. In fact, there are very few white families in the city that have not been attacked by the fever. Dr. J. Wise arrived to take charge of a government fumigating station. He has delivered over the charge of the hospital tent at Camp Perry to Dr. Faget of New Orleans.

On his way down he tried to go to Fernandina to see how things were there, but received the following telegram from H. E. Dotterer, president of the board of health:

No yellow fever, no suspicious cases. We invite investigation, and would be glad to have you with us but that you are just from a yellow fever hospital, and your calling here would alarm our people. Send a surgeon who has not been in the hospital and we will gladly welcome him. For reasons given we cannot avail ourselves of your valuable services.

A conference of delegates from the boards of health of many of the Southern states and Illinois was held at Nashville for the purpose of discussing the yellow fever situation. An exhaustive interchange of ideas was had and resolutions adopted declaring it the sense of conference that ten days' detention of yellow fever refugees should be enforced against those destined to points south the northern boundary of Tennessee, but in view of the lateness of the season it is recommended that the healthful refugees whose baggage has been disinfected should be permited to go north of that line without retention. It is further declared the sense of the conference that the appearance of one case of fever in a town should not be sufficient to warrant quarantine against that town until other case have made their appearance.

A train load of refugees reached Atlanta. They were all from Gainesville, Fla., and all had health certificates. Nine remained in Atlanta, and the others went on north. A few days ago James L. Lengle jumped from a refugee train from Jacksonville intending to stay here. He was in the city three days before discovered, and was then sent forward to Hendersonville, N. C.

The secretary of the treasury has received the following telegram from Surgeon General Hamilton, dated at Camp Perry, Fla., Sept. 17:

Dr. Posey has yellow fever, contracted at McClenny. Three cases are reported at Gainesville, and there are rumors of cases at Wellborne and Fernandina. I have sent Wise to investigate. Dr. Guiteras returned Saturday night. Refugees had a hard time on special train, and the whole seaboard is alarmed on account of the refugees breaking their parole at Henderson. I do not think it advisable to send any more special trains.

Mormons at Work.

Attention has been called to the arrival at New York of a party of Mormon converts from Sweden by the rescue of a young girl from the party by her sister. Emma Nilson, aged fifteen, and a typical Swede as to purity of complexion and yellowness of hair, had been sent on her way to Salt Lake City by her parents, who intended to follow her later; but her elder sister Ida, who had lived in Brooklyn a year or two, induced the Castle Garden authorities to deliver the fair convert into her charge temporarily, but Emma declares her unswerving devotion to Mormonism and means to get off for a completion of her journey to Utah as soon as possible. "Are you engaged to marry Elder Hagsberg, the man who tried to keep you with the Mormon immigrants?" she was asked. "I cannot answer that question," Emma replied. "We were all pledged not to say anything to outsiders about matrimony while on the journey." But Ida Nilson asserted positively that Emma was affianced to Hagsberg, as were two other young women in the party. There were seventy-two of the Swedish converts, and they were accompanied by 149 freshly made Mormons from other countries, principally England. They have gone on their journey to Salt Lake. The Swedes were from the province of Blekinge, and were brought to an acceptance of polygamy by the preaching of Hagsberg, a native of that section, who has been two years there at the work. He had left Sweden a widower about twenty years before, but he had taken three wives in Utah. Five of the women whom he converted, according to Emma's confession, were to become members of his household, really his wives, although in order to evade prosecution they would purport to be hired workers. A curious instance of conjugal irregularity was in the English contingent. Elder Abram Johnson, who had charge of the entire company, had been six months proselyting in the southern counties of England, and about half a hundred of the immigrants were his personal converts. Most of the dozen families brought over by him to the faith had come with the understanding, between the husbands and wives, that polygamy was not to be indulged in. But there was one remarkable exception. John and Charles Laird, brothers, were accompanied each by a wife. John did not propose to practice the Mormon doctrine of polygamy, but Charles accepted it as obligatory. It happened that Charles' wife would not consent to sharing a husband with other women, while John's wife had no objection to it. The arrangement was therefore made that John and Charles should swap wives, and they did so upon setting out upon their voyage to America.

The Cuba Cyclone.

The aggregate loss by the disastrous cyclone which ravaged the Island of Cuba is now estimated at many million of dollars. The loss of life is variously stated at from 500 to 1,200. Havana presents the appearance of a city which has been terribly bombarded. The cyclone entered the city by way of Sagua, and, taking a westerly direction, with a slight northerly inclination, its center passed almost over Havana. For fifteen hours it raged with desperate fury, and wreaked fearful havoc on life and property throughout the island. It demolished the principal buildings of the large cities, and wiped out entire villages situated near the starboard. The water flooded large districts of fertile land richly planted with sugar, tobacco, fruit and vegetables, destroying the valuable machinery of the plantations and irretrievably ruining the crops. Going out to sea the storm imparted its fury to the ocean, which rose to a great height and inundated the water fronts, breaking down the wharves and occasioning great loss to shipping and commerce. The water overcame all obstacles and made its way into the storage and manufacturing houses near the coast. Some buildings gave way under the great pressure, and in all cases their contents were seriously damaged. In some instances craft were carried half a mile into the cities, whole blocks of houses and trees being battered down as the vessels cut their passage through the streets. The northern part of Havana was converted into a Venice and many streets were submerged. Throughout the city many lives have been lost. Women and children have suffered most. The poor people, who, for the greater part, lived in the low land near the bay, have lost everything. The rich Vuetta Aunjo tobacco has been ruined, and it is said $2,000,000 cannot cover the losses. Not a single house is left standing at Guanajavao. Many vessels were lost and their crews drowned.

Robert Arola, a Fin, shot and killed his father, five miles south of New York Mills, Minn. There does not appear to have been any provocation. They had been on the best of terms. The son had been at work in the field. The father was sitting at a bench in front of the house shaving spokes for a wagon wheel. Robert came into the house, took down a rifle, put a revolver in his pocket, stepped outside and deliberately shot his father through the heart in the presence of his mother and sister, and immediately fled to the woods. The marshal and posse are now in pursuit of the murderer.

At Ville Platte Prairie, Louisiana, a crowd of armed men rode to the houses of two negroes named Jean Pierre Salet and Didaere and, after leading them a short distance away, riddled them with buckshot, killing them both instantly. The killing is supposed to have been brought about by incendiary language recently used by these two negroes. The affair created intense excitement in the neighborhood where it occurred.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Saturday, Sept. 15.

SENATE.—The senate does not appear disposed to take hurried action in the matter of the retaliation bill. All that has been done is to refer the bill to the committee on foreign relations. The committee postponed action to await an answer from the president to the resolution of Senator Hoar as to the question of the fact whether there had been any recent outrages committed upon American fishermen and whether there had been any seizures of American fishing vessel during the season which has just closed.

HOUSE.—There is a contest in the house between the appropriations committee, which has in charge the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the friends of the Oklahoma bill.

Monday Sept. 17.

SENATE.—The senate, by a very scanty majority of one, settled the Chinese exclusion bill which has been sent to the president, Blair's motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed being defeated—20 to 21.

Mr. Sherman offered a resolution directing the committee on foreign relations to inquire into and report at the next session of congress the state of the relations of the United States with Great Britian and the Dominion of Canada, with such measures as are expedient to promote friendly commerce and political interest.

Senator Plumb reported from the committee on public lands a bill to provide for the revocation of the withdrawal of lands made for the benefit of certain railroads in Minnesota and Iowa. The secretary is authorized to make an adjustment of all land grants giving all persons interested three months notice to show cause why the adjustment should not be made.

HOUSE.—On motion of Mr. McMillan, of Tennessee, Mr. Cox, of New York, was elected speaker pro tem, to act during the absence of Mr. Carlisle.

The house bill to transfer to the state of Louisiana the possession of a certain tract of land for quarantine purposes was reported and passed.

Mr. Weaver, of Iowa, introduced a bill to prohibit the deposit of public money in the national banks except for their continued disbursement of public funds. Referred.

Mr. Morrill, of Kansas, offered a resolution calling on the secretary of the interior for information, and directing him to ascertain whether undue influence has been used to secure the signature of any of the Indians to the Sioux treaty. Referred.

Mr. Dingley, of Maine, offered a resolution calling on the presidents for information as to whether the rights of American fishermen have been violated by the Canadian authorities within the past year, and, if so, whether he had retaliated, as he had authority to do under the act of March 3, 1887. Referred.

Tuesday Sept. 18.

SENATE.—There is no longer any serious question as to the position of the senate foreign relations committee with respect to the house retaliation bill. Senator Sherman, the chairman of that committee, has declared himself as irrevocably opposed to the policy contemplated by that bill and as in favor of a policy the ultimate object of which shall not be retaliation but political as well as commercial union between the United States and Canada.

Mrs. Foster said she had been into the mills and workshops of New York and New England and invited some of the female employes to come to Washington with her and tell the committee how they were situated. These were the ladies present, all of whom upon examination testified to that their wages in America were immensely greater than in Europe.

The feature of the House proceedings today was Mr. Cannon's political speech. The speaker pro tem. laid before the House a communication from the postmaster general in refference to complaints of illegal mailing of the tariff reform advocate at Columbus, O. The postmaster general says no such illegal distribution through the mails has occurred, therefore there is nothing to investigate. The communication was referred to the postoffice committee.

HOUSE.—The Democrats of the house, at their caucus, refused to support the relation of Oates of Alabama to adjourn Oct. 1, and designedly adjourned the caucus sine die without taking a vote.

The proceedings of the senate subcommittee on the tariff were in refreshing contrast with the average of the last two months. About fifteen well-dressed, fresh-looking ladies made their appearance at the doors of the commitee room at 11 o'clock, headed by Mrs. J. Ellen Foster, president of the Women's Temperance Union of Iowa, and were introduced by Senator Allison to his fellow members as a delegation who wished to be heard in respect to woman's especial interest in the protective tariff. They were heard.

Mr. Barnes, of Georgia, introduced a bill offering a reward of $100,000 for the discovery of the true cause of the germ of yellow fever, or certain means of its prevention, destruction or material modification. Referred.

A conference was ordered on the bill amending the interstate commerce law.

Wednesday, Sept. 19.

SENATE.—The senate passed the senate bill forfeiting the lands of the Marquette & Ontonagon railroad. The bill is similar to the one which passed the house last session. The rights of settlers and purchasers are very well guarded. The company has formally given notice to the general land office of its withdrawal of all claim to a land grant opposite the unconstructed parts of its road. This is understood to be a final abandonment of its claim to over two hundred thousand acres of land to which the company has heretofore stoutly maintained rightful title.

The members of the tariff subcommittee of the senate say is in not true that they have changed their purpose to report a tariff bill this session, or that they have ceased work upon it. They have some important hearings for the last of this week and the first of next. Their bill is nearly complete.

The house bill giving the secretary of war control of navigation in the St. Clair flats canal passed the senate to-day, and will go to the president to-morrow. It empowers the secretary to make the same rules and regulations that he is now empowered to make for navigation on the Des Moines rapids canal, the St. Mary's falls canal, the Portland canal and others. The bill provides a penalty of $500 for infractions of the regulations.

HOUSE—Immediately after the reading of the journal, the House resumed the consideration of the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill. And after a long debate an adjournment followed for want of a Quorm.

Thursday, Sept. 20.

SENATE.—The senate passed the bill ratifying the agreement made with the upper and middle bands of Spokane Indians, the Coeur d'Alene, the Pend d'Oreilles and the Kootenais in Washington, Idaho and Montana. This bill really ratifies four separate agreements, but as the provisions were almost identical, and as they consolidated seven of the above mentioned bands of Indians, they are all put into one bill.

The deficiency bill as reported by the senate committee carries $4,518,862. It came from the house with $3,227,518. Among matters added by the senate is $150 for United State District Attorney Baxter of Minnesota for services in the case of Beaulieu vs. Sheehan.

HOUSE—Democratic representatives of the house, notwithstanding the action or the nonaction of the caucus the other night, persist in the statement that a speedy adjournment of congress is not only probable but certain.

The house refused, 32 to 47, to agree to the conference report on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

He saved 3 Cents.

A man, his wife, and three children walked up to one of the drop-a-penny-in-the-slot-and-ascertain-your-correct weight-machines is one of the North river ferry-houses, and after examining it told his three children to stand on the platform of the scale, which they did. He then drooped a cent in the slot and the hand moved around to 203. He then told the largest child to step off, and as soon as he did the hand moved back to 118, thus by subtracting 118 from 203 he ascertained the weight of the child. In this manner he also ascertained the respective weights of the other two children. His wife and himself got on the scales and were weighed in a like manner. He saved 3 cents.—New York Sun.

FROM THE SHORE OF ETERNITY.

FREDERICK WILLIAM FABER.

Alone! to land alone upon that shore!
With not one sight that we have seen before;
Things of a different hue,
And the sounds all new,
And fragrance so sweet the soul may faint.
Alone! Oh, that first hour of being a saint!

Alone! to land alone upon that shore!
On which no wavelets lisp, no billows roar,
Perhaps no shape of ground,
Perhaps no sight or sound,
No forms of earth our fancies to arrange.
But to begin alone that mighty change!

Alone! to land alone upon that shore!
Knowing so well we can return no more,
No voice or face of friend,
None with us to attend
Our disembarking on that awful strand,
But to arrive alone in such a land!

Alone! to land upon that shore!
To begin alone to live forevermore
To have no one to teach
The manners or the speech
Of that new life, or put us at our ease;
Oh that we might die in pairs or companies!

Alone! the God we know is on that shore,
The God of whose attractions we know more,
Than of those who may appear
Nearest and dearest here;
Oh, is He not the life long Friend we know
More privately than any Friend below?

Alone! the God we trust is on that shore,
The Faithful One whom we have trusted more,
In trials and in woes,
Than we have trusted those
On whom we leaned most in our earthly strife
Oh, we shall trust Him more in that new life!

Alone! the God we love is on that shore,
Love not enough, yet whom we love far more,
And whom we loved all through
And with a love more true
Than other loves—yet now shall love Him more—
True love begins upon that shore!

So not alone we land upon that shore;
'Twill be as though we had been there before;
We shall meet more we know
Then we can meet below,
And find our rest like some retiring dove,
And be at home at once with our eternal love!

HANCOCK, THE SUPERB:

Reminiscences by His Wife of a Brilliant Military Career.

Messrs. Charles L. Webster & Co., publishers of "General Grant's Memoirs" and "McClellan's Own Story," publish the "Reminiscences of Winfield Scott Hancock," by his wife. The interest of the book is personal rather than historical. General Hancock took a conspicuous part in many dramas of national importance; but his biographer (one might almost say his autobiagrapher, so completly was Mrs. Hancock's life identified with her husband's) has described the scenes in which he acted with such distinction and narrated the events which led to them, with just sufficient fullness to make the General's relations to them clear and throw light upon his character.

The "Reminiscences" begins with the marriage of the writer to General Hancock at the residence of her father, Mr. Samuel Russell, in St. Louis, January 24, 1850.

In chapter 4 Mrs. Hancock describes vividly the discomforts to which she was necessarily subjected at Fort Meyers, Florida, during the trouble with the seminoles in 1856.

When the troubles in Florida were settled General Harney was transferred to Fort Leavenworth, Kan., where disturbances were expected. Hancock, who by this time had become a captain, joined him there, serving in the quartermaster's department until March 31, 1858, when he was ordered to accompany General Harney's expedition to Utah, where complication had arisen between the Mormans and the Gentiles. At the close Hancock was ordered to repeat to Colonel Andrews, commanding at Fort Bridger. "From Fort Leavenworth to Fort Bridger the distance is 1,000 miles," says Mrs. Hancock; "from Fort Bridger to Benecia, Cal., 1,119; total distance, 2,128 miles, and this was covered by Hancock on muleback."

On arriving at Benecia Captain Hancock found awaiting him a leave of absence and returned to the East, by way of the Isthmus, for the purpose of escorting his family back to the Pacific coast. A period of two months was delightfully spent in Washington. Mrs. Hancock digresses a little to describe this sojourn:

"Miss Harriet Lane, mistress of the White House, with her personal charms and courtly manners was a universal favorite, and did great credit to Mr. Buchanan's administration. Mrs. Davis, wife of the Secretary of war, Jefferson Davis, whom I well remember, was endowed with many remarkable qualities that made her eminently fitted to be a presiding genius, and her entertainments brought together the most cultivated class of Washington society. Mrs. Joe Johnston was another shining light in that great capital, a person of unusual intelligence and quick at repartee, which made her most fascinating in conversation. Her charming reunions are long to be remembered by those who were admitted within this charmed circle. * * * * How well I remember General Robert E. Lee, then a major, who was stationed there at that time. He was the beau ideal of a soldier and a gentleman. When bidding us 'good-bye' and 'god-speed' upon the eve of our departure, he said to me: 'I understand that you contemplate deserting your post, which is by your husband's side, and that you are not going to California with him. If you will pardon me, I should like to give you a little advice: You must not think of doing this. As one considerably older than Hancock, and having had greater experience, I consider it fatal to the future happiness of young married people, upon small provocation, to live apart, either for a short or long time. The result is invariably that they cease to be essential to each other. Now promise me that you will not permit him to sail without you.' The sequel shows how faithfully I sought to follow that noble man's admonition, and how often in my varied experience I had occasion to transmit to others his disinterested, truthful convictions. With many regrets we bade adieu to a host of friends, most of whom I never saw again. Not so with my husband, however. He met them face to face on the battlefield in less than three years."

After crossing the Isthmus of Panama, Captain Handcock and his wife embarked on the Golden Gate for San Francisco. There were 1,750 passengers in all, and those in the steerage were presumptious and aggressive and Handcock took a prominent part in suppressing an incipient mutiny.

The Hancocks were in Los Angeles when the election of 1860 approached. Their situation was equally dangerous and unpleasant. Fearing a personal assault upon himself, a very possible event, as he was the only United States official within a hundred miles of Los Angeles, he collected a small arsenal of twenty Derringers within his own house, in readiness for use at a moment's notice.

On the Fourth of July, 1860, Mr. Hancock made his maiden speech, a strong and impressive, if not eloquent, appeal to his countrymen not to separate themselves from the common memories and interests which had so long bound them together. Whether this Fourth of July celebration had any effect upon the disturbances I can not say, but it was generally considered to have quieted for a time the rising spirit of dissatisfaction, which was assuming an importance manifestly not illusory."

Referring to the painful scenes among old army comrades after Sumter was fired upon, Mrs. Hancock says: "Many conferences were held in our home in Los Angeles between my husband and the southern officers, who were urged by their relatives and friends to resign their commissions and offer their services to their own states, as otherwise they would be regarded as renegades throughout the south. They sought the advice of my husband, hoping to receive from him some comfort or encouragement, but he could give none, and would say to those dear friends, Armistead, Garnett, Pickett, and a host of others whom he loved: 'I can give you no advice, as I shall not fight upon the principle of state-rights, but for the Union, whole and undivided, as I do not and will not belong to a country formed of principalities. I can not sympathize with you; you must be guided by your own convictions and I hope you will make no mistakes.' * * * At that time I was in San Francisco and had occasion to visit the headquarters of General Albert Sidney Johnston, who was in command on the Pacific coast. He met me that morning and said, with tears in his eyes: "You are not aware that General Sumner was among the passengers who arrived on the steamer this morning, and who came to me unannounced, expecting to catch me in treasonable intentions. I have not yet seen him, but I understand that he has been sent out to relieve me of my command.' I replied; 'General, you are morbidly sensitive, I think, and hasty in your conclusions.' 'I hope that I have been, but why was the General's name omitted in the passenger list that was sent by the overland mail? If my suspicions are correct I shall at once resign, and God knows what then, I had intended to remain where I am, as my wife is so opposed to my giving up a certainty for an uncertainty.' It was soon known that General Johnston had resigned."

A dramatic scene—one of a thousand similar ones in those sad days—is set before the reader in the next passage,

A never-to-be-forgotten evening was the one spent at our home by the officers who were to start upon their overland trip to the South at 12 o'clock that night. General and Mrs. Johnston were of the party. * * * The most crushed was Major Armistead, who with tears, which were contagious, streaming down his face, and hands upon Mr. Hancock's shoulders, while looking him steadily in the eye, said: "Hancock, good-by; you can never know what this man cost me, and I hope God will strike me dead if I am ever induced to leave my native soil, should worst come to worst.'" Turning to me he placed a small satchel in my hand requesting that it should not be opened except in the event of his death, in which case the souvenirs it contained, with the exception of a little prayer-book, intended for me, and which I still possess, should be sent to his family. Oh the fly leaf of this book is the following: "Lewis A. Armistead. Trust in God and fear nothing." At the same time he presented Mr Hancock with a new major's uniform, saying that "he might sometime need it." This particular promotion never came to him as he jumped the grades from captain to brigadier-general. Armistead died in the way that he prayed for. I, as well as my husband, believed that he courted the death that finally came to him at Gettysburg, for I have often heard it related how bravely he came to the front of his brigade waving his sword and how he was shot through the body and fell within our lines asking to be taken to Hancock's tent. At the same moment my husband had fallen with what was supposed, at the time, to be a mortal wound. Three out of the six from whom we parted on that evening in Los Angeles were killed in front of General Hancock's troops and others wounded. The orders taking us from Los Angeles soon followed.

Captain Hancock made all haste to the Capital, which he erroneously fancied to be almost within the graap of the Confederate where he was soon appointed Brig. Gen. by President Lincoln.

Mrs. Hancock gives an interesting glimpse of "the Martyr President;" "Mr Lincoln's care-worn face I recall as vividly as then. At one of his levees in passing him I remarkek that it would be showing a greater consideration if I were to refuse his proffered hand, as he must be weary enough of handshaking. To this he replied in never-to-be-forgotten tones: 'Ah, if this were all I were called upon to do, how willingly would it be done for all time; but to say no to the poor unfortunate who come to me, in the belief that I am all powerful to pronounce that little word of only three letters, and who do not and will not understand that I can not act always as I wish, but have others to consult—this keeps me always unhappy.' Mr. Stanton frequently said to me: Mr. Lincoln has the biggest heart of any man in the world, and for that reason we have to watch him, or the Southern women, with their winning ways, would get his permission to carry with them enough contraband goods to supply the Southern army."

The battle of Williamsburg was Hancock's first triumphant success. He wrote to his wife: "On this occasion my men behaved beautifully and captured the first color yet taken. My loss was 126 in killed and wounded a great number showing hard and determined fighting." An interval of some months intervened between Williamsburg and Antietam General Hancock was engaged in every battle up to the time when the order was issued relieving General McClellan and appointing General Burnside to the command of the Army of the Potomac. In a letter to Mrs. Hancock she said: "The army are not satisfied with the change and consider the treatment of McClellan most ungracious and inopportune. Yet I do not symphtize in the movement going on to resist the order. 'It is useless,' I tell the gentlemen around me. 'We are serving our country.'" After Chancellorsville he wrote:

The day before the fight Hooker said to a general officer, "God Almighty could not prevent me from winning a victory to-morrow." Pray, could we expect a victory after that? He also told Mr. Lincoln that he would either win a victory or be in hell. The President told him to "carry plenty of water along." Success can not come to us through such profanity. I regret I can not ask now for leave; no general officer is allowed a leave of absence. General Couch asked for one, but was refused. I understand that the opinion of officers high in rank, at this time, would be unpalatable. Hooker's day is over. I have been approached again in connection with the command of the Army of the Potomac. Give yourself no uneasiness—under no conditions would I accept the command. I do not belong to that class of generals whom the Republicans care to bolster up. I should be sacrificed.

When Gettysburg was fought Mrs. Hancock was visiting her mother in St. Louis. On the morning of July 3, 1863, General Hancock telegraphed from the battlefield (as was his custom each day while the action lasted): "I am all right, so far." A few hours afterwards he sent a second dispatch, while lying upon the battlefield desperately—and presumably, fatally—wounded: "I am severely wounded, not mortally. Join me at once in Philadelphia. Parker and Miller, I fear, are gone up."

The surgeon objected to the wording of this dispatch, writes Mrs. Hancock, and asked permission to send one conveying intelligence of his critical condition. "But General Hancock would not permit the change, in view of the long journey before me, and the unhappiness that would result from knowing the full truth. After reaching Philadelphia the heat was found insupportable, and it was desirable to have my husband removed to his father's home at Norristown, but thirty days elapsed before his surgeons considered it prudent to permit the change. In the interval his wound showed no signs of healing, and his discomfort increased rather than diminished." It was not till sometime afterward that a minie ball was discovered imbedded in his leg. After this was removed he improved rapidly, and in December took command of the Second Army Corps.

An Old Story, But Worth Telling Just Once More.

From Things Seen.

Dumas, the elder, loved to laugh at the expense of English stiffness and reserve. One of his stories was this: One day Victor Hugo and I were to dine with the Duke of Decazes. Among the guests were Lord and Lady Palmerston—of course this happened before the February revolution. At midnight tea was handed around. Victor Hugo and I were sitting side by side, chatting merrily. Lord and Lady Palmerston had arrived very late, and there had consequently been no opportunity to introduce us before dinner; after dinner it seems it was forgotten. English custom, consequently did not allow us to be addressed by the illustrious couple. All at once young Decazes comes up to us and says: "My dear Dumas, Lord Palmerston begs you will leave a chair free between you and Victor Hugo." I hastened to do as he wished. We moved away from each other and placed a chair between us. Thereupon Lord Palmerston, holding the hand of his wife, leads her down to us, and invites her to sit down on the empty chair—all this without saying a word. "My lady," he said to his wife, "what time have you?" She looked at her watch, and answered: "Thirty-five minutes past twelve." "Well, then," said the great minister, "remember well, that this day, at thirty-five minutes past twelve, you were sitting between Alexander Dumas and Victor Hugo, an honor which you probably never will enjoy again in your lifetime." Then he offered his arm again to his wife, and took her back to her seat without saying a word to us—because we and not been presented.

What Cardinal Manning Says on Emigration From England.

Notwithstanding restraning motives there has been a steady and strong yearly stream of emigration from England, Ireland and Scotland. In the last thirty years, 3,000,000 have left our shores, writes Cardinal Manning in Murray's Magazine. From the last return of the Board of Trade, published by Mr. Giffen, it appears that the number of British-born subjects who left our shores in the first three months of 1886 was 30,700; in 1887, 44,446—that is, 14,000 more than in the previous year. Again, 44,000 in all left this country, and of these 30,000 went to the United States.

We must be glad that our people should find a home in the United States, and the growing number of English-born who mingle with the population of the States, will be, we may trust, a growing security for the amity and unity of the two countries. Nevertheless it must obviously be our desire that our people should find their homes within the bounds of our own lands. One of the aims of the movement in behalf of state-directed colonization is to guide the stream of emigration to our own channel, and to retain our brethren still as subjects with us of the British Empire.

Wife (indignantly)—Albert, here is a letter I found in your bocket. It is signed Mabel, and is, I must confess, the most sickening missive I ever read. Oh, you horrid monster! I will tell mother all about it.

Hubby—But my dear have you looked at the date?

Wife—No, but I will. Why it is dated, November 1, 1883.

Hubby (with a look of triumph)—Yes, darling; one of the loving letters you wrote me before we were married.—Judge.

NOT THOU, BUT I.

It must have been for one of us my own
To drink this cup, and eat this bitter bread,
Had not my tears upon thy face been shed,
Thy tears had dropped on mine; if I alone
Did not walk now, thy spirit would have known
My loneliness, and did my feet not tread
This weary path and steep, thy feet had bled
For mine, and thy mouth had for mine made moan.
And so it comforts me yea, not in vain,
To think of thy eternity of sleep,
To know thine eyes are tearless though mine weep;
And when this cup's last bitterness I drain
One thought shall still its primal sweetness keep;
Thou hadst the peace, and I the undying pain.

How to Keep well.

Boston Globe.

While undeniably a mixed diet is the best for man, there is a mistaken notion, which prevails to a great extent, that meat should largely enter into the same. As a consequence, much more is eaten than is needed or can properly be disposed of in the system. Never eat meat oftener than once a day, and very sparingly in summer. Men of sedentary habits might with safety for several days at a time during that season live on vegetables, fruits, milk, breadstuffs and foods of like character, which are easy of digestion. For those who have good reason to believe that their "kidneys are weak," a diet largely made up of meat is ill-advised. Those organs are intimately concerned in its disposal in the system, and hence are overtasked if it is taken in too great a quantity. There are very few people who are not fond of watermelons. It is rightly assumed that under proper conditions they are healthy. They should not, however, be eaten after a hearty meal, for they then tend to retard digestion.

Some drink too freely of water, especially during the heated term. There is, however, a class largely made up of women who do not at any time drink sufficiently of that eminent essential to health. As a rule they suffer from constipation. Everyone ought to drink about two quarts of water daily to meet the needs of the system, "Water is fattening" is an expression of some truth. Very fleshy people are proverbially thirsty, and when they attempt a reduction in weight, to lessen as much as possible the quantity of fluids habitually taken is one of the recognized rules of treatment. But a rigid adherence to it is dangerous for many, if not all. Unless advised by a physician to do differently, they should drink all they crave, within reason, excepting during the hour before and after meals. With the food only the smallest quantity of fluids possible is allowable. Much has been written for and against ice water. It is not only agreeable and refreshing, but harmless when used in moderation. In certain forms of dyspepsia characterized by flatulence—bloating, as it is properly called—very cold water acts as an agreeable tonic, and quickens gastric and intestinal activity in many cases if taken when the stomach is comparatively empty. If taken on a full stomach, it, as a rule, intensifies the trouble. Over-indulgence is always harmful, and it is especially so at meal times.

For a robust person in hot weather to reduce one-half the quantity of food he is habituated to eating would be a most salutary custom, for he would then not only suffer infinitely less from the heat, but be stronger and more active, both mentally and physically. Those especially who are wedded to their "appetizers" would do well to forego them at least until cooler weather comes, and leave nature, uninfluenced by the seductive cocktail, to direct the quantity of food necessary for the body's support.

Nearly all use black, but few red pepper on their food. It cannot be generally known that the latter is a remedy of no little value in certain cases of digestive trouble, especially those in which the liver is involved, and acts sluggishly. Old ladies' whims cannot always be laughed down. Here is one which a few dyspeptics can testify to be sound. Take before meals a pinch of red pepper in half a glass of milk. Some have cured themselves by this simple treatment. There are, of course, certain forms of dyspepsia in which it would be ill-advised. In just what cases it is needed, each sufferer from the trouble must determine for himself, unless he is under the care of a physician. One might safely try it for a few days, and then abandon it if no benefit results.

That berries are healthy food can in truth be said, and yet some kinds should be denied people who have certain forms of digestive disturbances. Blackberries, for instance, which contain small seeds, to some extent irritate the intestinal canal. It is in that way that they are useful in constipation; they stimulate and quicken activity of the bowels. But if the stomach and bowels are what is generally termed weak, then in such a case they are likely to do harm. Very young children should of course, be denied them.

New Jersey's Ugliest Man.

Philadelphia Record.

"Well, I reckon I kin her the wagon," said Rathole Loper, of Bridgeton, N. J., as he stepped up to Louis H. Dowdney, chairman of the Ugly Man's Committee, at the Cumberland County Agricultural Society's Thirty-fifth Annual Fair, which opened at Bridgeton. A wagon-building company somewhere out West had offered a prize of a pretty road cart to the ugliest man who presented himself. Loper was the first candidate.

Chairman Dowdney threw up his hands in horror. He feared there would be no chance for anyone else, but happily he thought of to-morrow's influx of Congressional candidates, and silently recorded Loper's name. Loper is known far and wide through Cumberland County. He gets his nickname from the strangely striking resemblance of his mouth to the dark retreat of the bead-eyed rodent. He has big, staring eyes of gentle Nile-green shade. The contour of his face is a cross between a cyclone-struck pumpkin and a dog-contortionist. Nobody in Bridgeton will have the hardihood to enter the contest with him.

Tennessee cannot be said to be a "gridiron of railroads." There are in the State thirty-six counties in which no railroads run.

The number of pilgrims who have visited the pope since January is nearly 200,000. The gifts exceed the value of £4,500,000.

When Queen Victoria went this year from Windsor to Osborne, she took a number of her favorite cats with her, and now every English lady when she travels must do the same.

A correspondent of the Liverpool Mercury says that he heard some cornet playing from a phonograph which had been repeated more than a thousand times, and all the notes were as clear and distinct as ever.

In a canoe race a contestant upset three times, once turning the canoe, sails, and all, completely over, and bringing everything up all standing on the other side. After each upset he bailed out and sailed ahead, and actually came in fifth.

Dr. Zambaco of Constantinople, who has lived for several years among the lepers of the far East, says that he has never met a single instance of contagion, although the malady is certainly hereditary, the children of lepers becoming leprous at the age of ten, fifteen and twenty years generally.

Senatorial five-minute speeches are timed by an old fashioned time-glass. When a senator begins his remarks the glass is turned so that the sands begin to run. When the last grain drops through the tiny opening the Speaker's gavel descends and the stream of eloquence is cut off short. This led Senator Ingalls to say," It takes sand to run the Senate."

Bismarck is suffering severely both in mind and body. The secret of his troubles is said to lie in the hasty and headstrong action of the young emperor, who has completely emancipated himself from the chancellor's control. The prince was particularly annoyed at the retirement of Count Moltke, his cherished friend and a great power in the court.

The roaring gas well back of Canonsburg, Pa., is said to have the greatest registered pressure of any in the world. The gas looks like a solid piece of blue steel for some distance after it comes out of the pipe. Solid masonry, twelve feet thick, surrounds the well to hold the cap on. When in drilling the gas was struck, tools and rope weighing 5,000 pounds were thrown out as though they were feathers.

"The Yankee school can make any poor boy rich," was the favorite saying of Henry Winkley, who went to Philadelphia sixty-five years ago a poor New Hampshire boy, and who died the other day a millionaire, having been one of the pioneers in developing the American crockery trade. To show his love for New England he distributed $300,000 among New Hampshire and Massachusetts institutions of learning.

Teller Marler, of the sub-Treasury Office, New York, says that "a certain way to tell good paper money from bad is by means of two small blue silk threads, which run through the good bill lengthwise and which may be plainly seen by holding the note to the light. These are woven into the paper by a secret process and have never yet been successfully counterfeited, the usual imitation being by means of a mark drawn across the paper."

Again the oldest man bobs up serenly, this time James James, of Santa Rosa, Mexico. As the tale runs he was born near Darlington, South Carolina, in 1752, went with his master through the revolution, was 40 when Washington became president, and 110 when he removed to Texas. Five years later he moved over to Mexico, where he still lives, aged 136, and though so bent and rheumatic as to live upon charity, evidently so in the habit of living he cannot bring himself to quit it.

This cheerful story, of course, comes from Georgia. Dr. Price had rheumatism and physicians were in vain. His son by some means learned that a Mexican hairless dog applied to the feet was a sovereign balm for the ill, and in spite of ridicule secured and applied it. The effect was magical. The pain fled and stiffness vanished whenever the dog could be persuaded to sleep; now, after six years the living prescription shows signs of age, and the patient swears he will have another at the cost of half his kingdom.

Washington Brieflets.

The large new silver vault in the treasury department at Washington is so damp that the canvas bags containing the silver stored there are actually rotting away. Measures are being taken to improve the ventilation of the vault and to substitute small rough pine boxes for the bags. These boxes will each hold 3,000 silver dollars, and it is proposed to store 80,000 of them in the vault. The silver is still coming in at the rate of $500,000 a day.

Another raid was made by the McCoys on the Hatfield settlers in Kentucky, and, as usual, the West Virginians were worsted. In the melee two of the West Virginians were killed and two more badly wounded. None of the Kentuckians were hurt.

Several places of business in Fargo were entered by burglars, but no large amounts were stolen. In C. J. Chalmer's grocery store they attempted to blow open the safe with powder, but succeeded only in tearing away the outer portion of one side of the safe. No arrests have been made.

Burglars entered the jewelry house of Sheldon, Swope & Co. at Terra Haute, Ind., and attempted to overpower Edward Patterson, who sleeps over the store, in order to force him to give them the combination to the safe. In the scuffle young Patterson was cut 17 times. The burglars escaped.

Mrs. Snell, the widow of the millionaire who was murdered in his own home at Chicago, by a burglar, doubtless the young scape-grace Tascott, offered double the amount of the original reward for the capture of the fugitive. It is not known that any definite clue to Tascott's whereabouts has caused this action.

John N. Wogan, aged about sixty, the most notorious desperado in Southern Illinois, who for ten years has figured in the criminal courts at Wabash county, was shot and killed by Constable Hall, of Belmont. Hall had arrested Wogan on the charge of attempting to kill his own son and daughter, and he was taking him to his boarding house to get his clothes. In a dark place Wogan turned sharply, and Hall, fearing violence, drew his revolver and fired.

After a year's search the police of Iowa city and the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railway secret detective have arrested the man who tried to wreck a passenger train on the above named railway near that city a year ago. The man is William Orcutt, aged twenty. He has made a confession, saying that his motive in trying to wreck the train was robbery of the passengers. The Sioux Falls, Dak., saloon keepers are much exercised over the action of Judge Carland in sentencing two Union county saloon keepers to the penitentiary for three and four months respectively for violating the local option law. Their names are William Gillen and John Teller. All the saloon keepers are under bonds to answer for from two or three to 15 or 20 violations each of the local option law, but have been expecting fines only, which would be equivalent to paying license, but penitentiary terms now stare them in the face and they are getting nervous.

Four days and nights of continuous search in the woods of Newton, Minn., finally resulted in the capture of Robert Arola, the young Finlander who is accused of shooting his father. He was taken to New York Mills, where he met his brothers and sisters, and quite an effecting scene was enacted. Young Arola says he knows nothing about the murder of his father, and maintains a stolid indifference, although he broke down a little when the sheriff started for Fergus Falls. His sister Mary accompanied him. She was an eye witness and it is she who must send her brother to the gallows. She is a very bright girl and seemed to fully realize the dreadful position in which she was placed.

W. G. Harley, a well know commission dealer and member of the firm of Peterson & Harley, was arrested at Minneapolis, on a warrant charging him with stealing 15,000 bushels of wheat from the Union elevator. This arrest comes as the sequel of a great deal of suppressed excitement among certain well-known wheat men. The arrest of Harley is probably but the beginning of a series of arrests, and the local wheat trade it likely to have some intensely interesting subjects for gossip. The stealing was done by overloading cars. The cars leaving the elevators were to have contained 500 bushels each. It is now positively known that they were overloaded, and that to the extent of 50, 100 and sometimes 150 bushels.

At Carthange, Tenn., as John Smith, a stone contractor of Nashville and Knoxville, and his bookkeeper, Mr. Shreiner, were between Gordonville and Lancaster, on their way to pay off the hands, they were stopped by two men who demanded the $1,000 which they had in a grip-sack. They fired at the robbers, but Smith was struck on the head and rendered insensible and Shreiner fled. The robbers escaped with the money, but were soon overtaken in the woods by a party of railroad men who had been notified by Smith as soon as he recovered consciousness. One of the pursuers named Johnson mortally wounded one of the robbers and shot the other so severely that he may die. The money was recovered and the robbers taken into custody. They were former employes of the road and knew when the payee would pass and the amount he would have with him.

Ernest Rice, a nineteen-year-old son of W. H. Rice of Elgin, Minn., was accidentally shot and killed by a five-year-old boy from a neighbor's family. A shotgun was left within the youngster's reach, and he managed to discharge it at the head of his victim.

A man whose name has not been made public, became intoxicated on liquor purchased at a blind pig establishment at Fargo, D. T., and while in that condition fell and injured himself so as to be disabled for work. His family, as a consequence, will probably be a charge on the county for several months. It is learned that his wife will institute suit against the saloonkeeper's bondsmen for $10,000 damages.

A collision between a Burlington passenger train south-bound and a gravel train on the Chicago & Northwestern road occurred at the crossing opposite Winona, Minn. A sleeper and day coach on the Burlington were ditched and the passengers badly shaken up and bruised. Mrs. Johanna Erve of La Crosse, a lady of sixty, was seriously cut about the eye and otherwise badly hurt. The other passengers were not seriously injured, and were taken to La Crosse by the Burlington engine.

A serious accident happened to J. W. Merrill, a lawyer and stock raiser of Rockford, Iowa, on the fair grounds at Mason City. He was watering a bull, when it plunged at him, picking him up with his horns, tossing him over a partition into another stall on the opposite side. The bull's horn's entered the flesh of the unfortunate man's leg about six inches below the groin, ripping upward and almost disemboweling him.

An elevator cage in the Bancroft building, at San Francisco, containing ten passengers, dropped five stories. A. Alexander of Oakland had a thigh fractured, ribs broken and is suffering from hemmorrhage of the lungs. He cannot recover. The elevator boy, William Umfred, had his back broken, and his injuries are thought to be fatal. Robert C. Bitcher, whose legs were broken, is also in a dangerous condition. Several others were severely injured, but will recover. The cable parted in the basement, where the wire goes over a wheel. Bancroft, the historian, owns the building.

The rumor that Prince Bismarck contemplates retiring from public life at an early date is semi-officially contradicted.

H. Strachan and J. M. McKay, employed in the Canadian Pacific ticket office, at Winnipeg were arrested on the charge of embezzlement. The auditor found a shortage in the cash McKay was accused by Strachan, but being telegraphed for came back and laid the charge at his accuser's door. Later he confessed to taking part of the money, but denied the balance. Six hundred dollars is the whole amount missing. Both bear good characters.

Late advices report great suffering and many deaths from starvation among the Indians of the Canadian Northwest Territories. Several cases of cannibalism are reported, where heads of families have killed and eaten their children. Last season parliament voted $354,000 for supplies for the destitute treaty Indians of the Northwest, but it appears that dishonest agents have appropriated the greater portion of the grant. Gabriel Dumont, Riel's lieutenant, has been attempting to stir up bad feeling among the Indians, with, it is said, considerable degree of success.

Gov. Rusk, of Wisconsin, has granted a pardon to Sarah W. Tyrell of Lancaster, who was sentenced to the penitentiary at Waupun for two years for killing her husband with a stick of wood, the deed having been committed during one of the domestic quarrels which the couple were wont to indulge in. Mrs. Tyrell has served one and a half years of her term.

A black bear weighing over two hundred pounds was killed in the village of Red Lake Falls, Minn., near Stile's drug store, in the center of the town. It had wandered into town and was surrounded by a number of citizens in a cluster of bushes near the street. The bear ran down Main street, and for a few minutes fifteen or twenty men indulged in a genuine bear hunt. Several other bears have been seen along the river near the business part of town the past few days.

Charles A. Percy, the whirlpool rapids navigator of Niagara Falls who had been preparing for a week to take a trip through the rapids, started from the old Maid of the Mist landing on Sunday, the 16th. When he struck the rapids near Manning's elevator his boat capsized, but righted below Buttery's elevator. He was twenty-one minutes going through. No damage was done to the boat. The woman who had intended to go through with him backed out.

Church circles in Livermore, Ky., have been in a state of excitement over a sensation in which a Methodist minister, Charles W. Hall, and Miss May, a pretty young member of his congregation, figured as the principal parties. The young woman charged the minister with having forcibly hugged and kissed her. Miss May, when placed upon the stand, gave a straightforward story, which was to the effect that Mr. Hall had on one occasion kissed her sister without the latter's consent while she and her mother were watching, and being unprotected they could do nothing. As to her own affair she said when they happened to be alone together with no one in sight he had seized her in his arms and kissed her squarely upon her lips. She spurned him from her and struck him a blow upon the nose. After the argument of the counsel, a vote was taken which resulted in favor of the minister.

The Rescue of Stanley.

Maj. Barttelot, in his last letter to the Emin relief committee, under date of June 4, just previous to the starting of the expedition, complains that Tippoo Tib had broken faith; that he promised to bring 800 men and had brought only 400, and that he showed a decided distaste for the affair and adopted tactics to delay the starting of the expedition, particularly insisting upon lightening the loads of the carriers, especially of ammunition. The loss of stores resulting from Tippoo's action and from the fact that only half the expected number of carriers were supplied was most serious. Barttelot speaks well of all the European officers concerned. Tippoo Tib has furnished an influencial headsman for the expedition in whom Barttelot appeared to have confidence. The expedition was largely composed of Manyemas. Barttelot says that to the best of his belief Stanley is not dead, but that he cannot get any news of him; that he intends to take the same route, and if he fails to hear of Stanley, to press on to Wadelai and ask Emin to join him in the search.

"Tippoo Tib," he says, "has not the remotest intention of helping us any more. But to withdraw now would be pusillanimous, and I will therefore proceed to the best of my ability." He asks the committee to suspend all judgment on his actions, past, present and future, until he or Jameson returns home. Jameson's diligence and cheeriness, he says, are beyond all praise. Tippo promised to send a messenger after Barttelot, if necessary, within a month after the starting of the expedition." Barttelot promises to send news when possible, but says he would not be surprised if the Congo route was blocked later on. He says: "There are many things I would wish to speak of. No doubt I will do so should I be permitted to return home."

The Land Laws.

Dr. Holman reported to the house his bill providing for a suspension of the land laws, with an amendment and favorable recommendation. As amended the bill read as follows:

That all laws providing for the disposal of the public lands, except the homestead laws and the laws in relation to mineral lands and the laws touching the selection of public lands by states for educational purposes, shall be suspended until the pending legislation affecting the public lands shall be disposed of or the present congress shall adjourn. Provided, however, that section 2,301 of the revised statutes and all laws in relation to the entry of coal lands shall be suspended during the period named. That during the pendency of the measures now before congress in relation to the forfeiture of certain lands heretofore granted by congress to railroad corporations and thereafter, no act done or performed by any such corporation shall in any wise enlarge the right or claim of any such corporation to any lands covered by any such grant or diminish any right now existing in the United States to declare the forfeiture thereof. This provision shall not be construed, to in any wise affect or diminish or waive any right now existing in behalf of the United States to declare the forfeiture of any of the lands embraced in such grant.

Important Railroad Decision.

The interstate commerce commission, through Chairman Cooley, filed an opinion in the matter of the Chicago, St. Paul & Kansas City Railroad company. This company in June last notified the commission that owing to the action of competing lines covering rates between Chicago & St. Paul and Minneapolis, it had been obliged to reduce its own rates between these points below the rates which it could afford to accept to intermediate points, so that upon its line there would be greater charges made upon the shorter haul than upon the longer in the same direction, and it is stated that if complaint should be made of this, it would undertake to justify its action under the interstate commerce law. The commission thereupon made an order for a hearing to be held at Dubuque as which the company would be called upon to justify its action and for public notification, so that other companies interested, and also any commercial organization or any other desiring to be heard, might have the opportunity. A hearing was accordingly had, and on the hearing the respondent company gave evidence tending to show that the action it had taken was forced upon it by the Burlington & Northern railroad company, which had made a rate between Chicago, St. Paul and Minneapolis below that which would be compensatory and below what it was possible for any competing lines to make without actual loss, and it produced evidence tending strongly to show that the Burlington & Northern on the rates it was making was not paying operating expenses.

The Burlington & Northern, it was contended, was in constant violation of the interstate commerce law in making rates so low that neither itself nor its rivals could accept them without a steady and destructive drain upon their resources. The principal question, therefore, raised before the commission at the hearing was whether it had the power to compel the Burlington & Northern to increase its rates to a remunerative point.

The commission disclaims possessing any such power. It holds that congress, in the provision requiring all rates to be reasonable and just, was legislating for the protection of the general public, and not for the protection of railroad companies against the action of their own managers or against the unreasonable competition of rivals, and that it was never in the contemplation of congress that it should be within the power of the commission to order an increase in rates which, in its opinion, ought to have been made higher than they were. In this respect it was supposed that the railroad companies had ample remedies in their own hands, in the authority which they possess to make rates, and the protection needed from the government was the protection of those who would be compelled to pay the rates that should thus be made. The further question was discussed whether the fact that the Burlington & Northern made rates which were unreasonably low made out the dissimilar circumstances and conditions under the fourth section of the act which would entitle the respondent company to make a greater charge on the shorter haul. The respondent contended that if the commission could not control the making of destructively low rates the competition of railroads which were subject to the act to regulate commerce was just as harmful as the competition of vessels or the competition of railroads not subject to the act, and therefore the competition of the Burlington & Northern at the terminal points of respondent's road established such dissimilar circumstances and conditions as justified its charging less at such terminal points than at intermediate stations.' The commission does not assent to this view. The showing of respondent is merely that a perverse rival makes unreasonably low rates to the termini of its road, but if this makes out the dissimilar circumstances and conditions intended by the fourth section of the act, then any one railroad manager in the Northwest may at pleasure, by a foolish tariff sheet, give to one or more points of railroad competition a preference and advantage over all others, and this would defeat one of the leading purposes had in view in adopting the act, which was to put an end to the discrimination which before were so common between different localities. The act itself would therefore, as to one of its leading purposes, be dependent on the will of any single railroad manager who, from policy or perversity, might see fit to nullify it. The effect of the doctrine contended for on the part of the respondent would be that, railroad companies, if they chose to do so, may at will build up a single point in the Northwest to a preponderating and conclusive ascendency at the expense of all others. Giving it rates which in proportion would be a mere fraction of what other localities must pay might fix its ascendency with little regard to natural or other advantages. It will not do to say that the rates to intermediate stations are just and fair in and of themselves. The question of what are just and fair rates is always relative. Low rates to one place may not be just and fair if still lower rates are given to a rival. The commission therefore finds and adjudges that the transportation of freights by respondent upon its road from Chicago to St. Paul, Minneapolis and Minnesota Transfer, and from such Northern termini to Chicago is made under substantially similar circumstances and conditions to those under which like freights are transported on the same line from the same initial point or points in the same direction to intermediate stations, and such being the case, that the greater charges which respondent makes to such intermediate stations are illegal, an order will be entered that respondent cease and desist from making such illegal charges. Incidentally in discussing the case the commission says it does not understand on what ground the Burlington & Northern, while insisting that its rates from Chicago to St. Paul are remunerative, can justify charging the same rates for one-third or two-thirds the distance. Upon its own showing those rates seem to be excessive. The commission does not discuss the question how far water transportation may justify the greater charge on the shorter haul in any case, there being in the case no facts to make the discussion relevant.

Corruption at Alaska.

Chester Seeber, formerly United States commissioner for Alaska at Ounalaska, sent to the house committee on merchant marine a letter concerning the Alaska company and the seal fisheries which the committee now has under investigation. He claims that the company uses the power of its contract with the government to monopolize the whole trade of Western Alaska, to oppress the inhabitants of that country and to retard its development.

"All commerce with this part of Alaska" he says, "is done through the rivers and Behring sea at the instance of the company, and any vessel found there is searched and any furs which it may be found to contain, in whatever manner obtained, are seized and sold. This prevents trade with the country, and results in most cases in irreparable loss.

Mr. Seeber also accuses the company of freezing out a competitor by raising the prices of skins above the London price, and lowering them again when the competitor had been driven from the field.

The company, he says, prevents the development of the adjacent country by discouraging prospectors and miners and refusing to sell them food when they are in need.

The letter was read before the committee. Mr. McIntyre, superintendent of the company, said that the company had paid a rather high price for furs when a rival appeared in the field, but he thought this legitimate. He said that Seeber owed the company $2,000 for rent and money borrowed when he left its employ.

Alonzo V. Hyde, of Salt Lake City, was found half crazed with liquor in Pickett's Hotel, at New York. When arrested he was violent. Two policemen were hardly able to drag him to the station house. He had $600 in his purse. In the court next morning he said that he came to New York one week ago with $18,000, which he spent in doing "the town." Mr. Hyde is a member of the famous Mormon family of Hydes.

Terrific storms are prevailing in California. Rain fell in torrents. Throughout the northern and central parts of the state the rain fall was also heavy, and much damage is reported to grain lying in stacks in the field, as well as to grapes and dry feed. Following after ten days of great heat, the rain has injured grapes severely, although in Fresno, the center of raisin making, the showers were light.

Another strike was inaugurated at Washburn, Wis., by the switchmen on all the railroads centering here. Work on the roads is entirely suspended. It is said the engineers are backing the switchmen. An advance in wages is demanded, which will be probably granted, or a compromise effected. The strikers are a determined lot of men, and propose to hold out until the roads comply with their requests. All is quiet about the various depots.

DOINGS IN MINNESOTA.

Worthington holds out inducements for some one to open a brick and tile yard there.

The postal agent has visited Faribault and thinks it is entitled to free postal delivery.

The 135-foot iron bridge for Mantorville, manufactured by the Clinton Iowa, Bridge company, has arrived, and is being placed in position.

A black horse and a top buggy belonging to the Rev. J. A. Fitzgerald were stolen at Hastings and the thief, it is believed, headed for St. Paul.

A young daughter of George Overbeck, proprietor of the Minnesota house at St. Cloud, fell from a tricycle and broke both bones of her left fore arm.

A farm hand, name unknown, fell from a grain stack near Glencoe, on to a pitchfork, causing a dangerous wound in the back. He is in a critical condition.

The Star says that the bright outlook for building and real estate business next season in Pipestone continues to grow. It advocates a revival of the chamber of commerce.

Mike Brady's saloon and dwelling house at Northern Pacific Junction, were totally destroyed by fire. Loss, $4,000; insurance, $1,800. The postoffice was saved after a severe fight.

Nic Weiss and Tom Dodsworth, two railway employes, while driving at St. Cloud had a run away. Both were thrown from a buggy and Weiss had a leg broken. Both were otherwise severely injured. The rig is a wreck.

The Ellsworth cornet band is composed of about an equal number of republicans and democrats. When there is a republican rally at that place the democratic members have other business and when there is a democratic blow-out the republicans go and do likewise.

At New Ulm the new residence of Mr. M. Mullen was burned, it is believed by an incendiary. The building was just nearing completion, and was one of the finest in the city. Loss, $6,000. There was a builders' risk in the Fire and a Marine Insurance Company of St. Paul for $4,000. This will not nearly cover the loss.

Miss Hattie Wheeler, who lives on a farm near Pipestone, narrowly escaped death recently. She had built a fire in the cook stove for the purpose of getting supper, when by some means a large package of gunpowder caught fire. The powder was wrapped in three or four papers and the outside one was all afire when the young lady picked the package up and threw it out doors. The powder exploded with terrific force and she was seriously burned about the face and arms.

Among the indictments returned at Brainerd by the grand jury were some against three tramps for burglary, who broke the seal of a Northern Pacific car to steal a ride. Also M. L. Young, a Duluth gambler, was indicted for assault with intent to commit murder for his part in a street fight last winter, when he almost cut the throat of Joseph Baker. Young was held to the grand jury in a preliminary examination, but getting a bond fixed by putting up the cash to two prominent citizens, fled and cannot be found.

John Fugleberg, a few days ago, had Knute Rotegard of East Grand Forks arrested for selling liquor contrary to the local option law. One night Rotegard called Fugleberg into his saloon and pretended to make friends. A large gang of saloon sympathizers was present, and one of them assailed Fugleberg, accusing him of working against the saloons. The latter escaped, followed by the crowd. Fugleberg then drew a revolver and cowed the mob. He will make it warm for the saloon men if they attempt to bulldoze him.

The grand jury closed its labors at Brainerd, and returned against J. R. Glover two additional indictments for selling liquor without a license, and against Henry T. Moore of Cass county for larceny. The latter is a somewhat sensational case, owing to the prominence of the accused. He is a large farmer near Gull river, and he is accused of having sold as beef cattle oxen left with him to be pastured belonging to J. J. Howe & Co. Sensational rumors were also afloat that the grand jury were making a wholesale raid houses of ill fame. It proved that the city government was being sharply overhauled, and a formal resolution was passed by the jury condemning Mayor Hempstead for not enforcing the existing laws and ordinances and calling upon him to do so or else make way for some man who would.

A Glance at the Gentle Camel.

From Count Gleichen's New Book.

A camel's hind legs will reach anywhere—over his head, round his chest, and on his hump; even when lying down, an evil disposed animal will shoot out his legs and bring you to a sitting posture. His neck is the same pliancy. He will chew the root of his tail, nip you in the calf, or lay the top of his head on his hump. He also bellows and roars at you, whatever you are doing—saddling him, feeding him, mounting him, unsaddling him. To the uninitiated a camel going for one with his mouth open and gurgling horribly is a terrifying spectacle; but do not mind him, it is only his way. I heard of one or two men having a leg broken from a kick at various times, but it was the exception and not the rule, for a camel is really a very docile animal, and learns to behave himself in most trying positions with equanimity, though I fear it is only the result of want of brains.

Fat People and Thin.

Dr. Ross R. Bunting in Popular Science News.

Lord Byron was an exception to the general desire to become fat. It is generally considered that he injured his health from his great fear of corpulency. Dr. Polidori, his physicians, says he would refrain from food for days, and then appease his hunger with a water and a glass of brandy.

Fat is of great use in the human body in moderate amount, in which case it is generally considered a sign of good health. It forms one-twentieth of the weight of a man and one-sixteenth of that of a woman. According to Dr. Hutchinson, a man five feet seven inches in height may properly weigh 148 pounds; six feeth in height, 178 pounds. Fat serves to protect the body from external violence, by uniform diffusion of pressure through the entire adipose tissue; it promotes the easy movement of different organs, as the heart and the eyeball; even in cases of very great emaciation it always remains around these organs, motion being very essential to the proper performance of their functions. Fat also keeps up the heat of the body, on account of its imperfect conducting power. We have a marked instance of this in the whale and seal, animals exposed to very low temperatures.

The first few days after birth the human infant loses in weight considerably, and, were there not a storehouse of fat provided, would certainly die. "Fat and stupidity," says Lord Chesterfield, "are looked upon as such inseparable companions that they are used as synonymous terms. Edmund Burke, speaking of the French Revolutions, says that "fat, stupidity, irrelicion and avarice arise from the common cause." And yet David Hume, the historian, Edward Gibbon, author of the "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire," and Napoleon the First grew fat; the first two whilst performing great intellectual labors; the last, although under the influence, during most of his life, of one of the passions one would think the least inclined to obesity—ambition. Cullen considers obesity a disease when it renders persons, from a difficult respiration, uneasy in themselves, and, inability of exercise, unfit for discharging the duties of life to others. The symptoms of corpulence are easily recognized, the more prominent being difficulty in breathing, inability to walk any great distance, difficulty in ascending a stairway, often tendency to palpitation, tendency to vertigo, dyspeptic troubles. In fat persons the bony framework is not so large as in those who are thin; they have generally small hands and feet. The bony skeleton has therefore little to do with the weight in these cases; it is due to the adipose tissue.

No doubt some noted characters of history, although somewhat corpulent, owed their large size to a muscular development, as well as a large bony framework. We may cite as instances Marius the Roman consul, William the Conquea and John Sobieska. It has been said that "in the Bey's seraglio at Tripoli women are fattened against a certain day by means of repose and baths, assisted by a diet of Turkish flower mixed with honey. Fifteen days, it is said, are suficient for the purpose."

Our fat friends must follow the advice given by Abernethy to one of his noble patients: "Your lordship must do as the famous Duke of Wellington did on a well-known occasion—cut off the supplies, and the enemy will leave the citadel;" they must take the sort of food that will produce the least amount of fat, but will give strength; they should therefore take more of nitrogenous and less of carbonaceous food. Of the five different sorts of animal food—beef, veal, mutton, lamb and pork—the first is the least, and pork the most, heat-producing. The latter, therefore, should not be eaten. As there are more thin people in the world than fat people, a word of advice to the former might not be out of place. They must sleep all they can; keep early hours for retiring; lie down after each meal; drink a great deal of water; eat heartily, especially of farinaceous food; take plenty of exercise, but in moderation. Be cheerful. Sterne says that "every time a man laughs, he adds something to his life." And, according to Solomen, "A merry heart doeth good like a medicine; but a broken spirit drieth the bones."

The Author of "Cape Cod Folks."

There was a romantic marriage out in St. Louis the other day, the bride being Miss McLane, a clever New England woman, who achieved fame in a rather odd manner, and the groom, T. L. Green, a miner from the Chihuahua country of Mexico. Says the New York Graphic:

The engagement was one of long standing, and Miss McLane had journeyed all the way from Europe to meet and wed the man of her choice. She made the long trip unattended, and would probably have gone around by way of China could she have reached St. Louis in no other direction. The heroine of this wedding is not unknown to the literary world. She taught school up and down the Massachusetts coast for a number of years, writing sketches and serials for the magazines between times. Finally, some five or six years ago, the plucky little schoolmarm determined to write a novel that would be a bit of a departure from the milk-and-water brand of the school then in vogue. Accordingly, she wrote "Cape Cod Folks." The book sold like wild fire for a couple of months and promised to be the sensation of the year. Its characters were portrayed so true to life as to be recognizable, and in many instances true names of persons were used without resorting to aliases. The work was satirical, caustic and all fire, and every old busybody and gossip of the Cape, irrespective of sex or social standing, came in for a hauling over the coals. Then came an avalanche of libel suits, brought by the Cape Cod folks against the publisher of the volume. The publisher investigated, found it useless to attempt to fight the suits and compromised by destroying the unsold copies of the work, paying some of the alleged sums of money and going into bankruptcy. Miss McLane went abroad, and only returned to be married as above narrated. She will accompany her husband to his Mexican mine and probably give up story-writing.

An Office-Seeker's Experience.

He sat on a Lafayette square bench, says the Washington Critic, a wooden toothpick held meditatively between his teeth, the picture of a club man who had dined well.

Shuffling down one of the graveled paths was a man—a tramp. He passed the club-man, eyeing him closely and halting in the gloom of a near-by tree looked back to where the club man sat and then retraced his steps.

"Your pardon, sir," the tramp said in a husky voice, "will you give me a little advice?"

"Well, what is it?" the clubman asked, a shade of annoyance showing in his good-natured features, for, like most heavy diners, he disliked anything that savored of business after dinner. Besides he thought the man but a beggar, and disliked this not approaching the matter directly.

"I'll take but a minute of your time if you will but listen to me. I came to Washington two months ago to get a government position. As you see I failed. For the last eight days I have been drunk. I have been a drinker all my life, but I never drank so much or so steadily before. I woke up this morning with the sun shining in my face through the trees of a park. My clothes were pawned and replaced with these rags, my watch, money, everything gone for drink.

"Did you ever have mania-a-potu? No; I can see that you haven't. Well, I have. Two hours ago I felt it coming on me. You can see," holding up a tremulous hand, "how unstrung my nerves are. I can almost see the devils now as they tighten their fingers around my throat. And the thirst—thirst that nothing but alcohol will quench. You cannot imagine what it is to feel yourself petrified, powerless, dead to everything but pain, while lizards, ants, toads, worms, snakes, everything slimy are twisting, wiggling, squirming over you, gumming your eyes together, filling your ears with horrible sounds, while every joint in your body is racked and twisted until it is ready to come apart. Your brain on fire, your throat parched and swollen, and the hot fetid breath of devils in your face as they taunt you with great flagoons of liquor, held just out of your reach. God, sir! This and a thousand times I have felt, and feel coming over me again.

"I asked you for advice. Well, I've got a quarter in my pocket. I can get a bed for a quarter, or I can get a pint of whiskey that will keep me out of reach of these devils tonight, until I can go to sleep. But where could I sleep unless I have something to drink. You see why I asked your advice."

When the tramp began his story the clubman wore a look of wearied indifference. But the tramp talked quickly and excitedly, with jerky, expressive gestures, his hollow eyes fixed on the clubman's every look and every motion, lending strength to what he said, until the clubman seemed fascinated. As the tramp finished he got up from the bench and shook himself like a man ridding his mind of an unpleasant day dream.

"Ugh, man, you ought to be an actor. Here's 50 cents. No, here's a dollar, and, for God's sake, don't talk to me any more about your delirium tremens. Ugh!"

And the tramp shuffled off through the deepening gloom, and, as he passed into the glare of the electric lights in front of the treasury, the dollar and a quarter jingled merrily in his pocket.

He was an ex-actor.

Snakes by the Seashore.

The black snake that caused the excitement in the colored people's meeting in Asbury Park was in all probality a water snake. Those harmless reptiles have been common there. But across Deal lake, in the primeval forest, there are more lively and interesting "varmints." Over there, the other day, we found our way obstructed by a flat-headed adder three feet long, who puffed out his cheeks to the size of a man's fist and hissed like the exhaust pipe of a steam engine. When his head was hit he buried it quite pathetically under the coils of his body, and it took a great deal of work to straighten him out and kill him. But it was a fair fight, for his bite was almost certain death.—New York Sun.

Boston Beauties Wooing the Waves.

From the Cincinnati Enquirer.

I stood on Nantasket Bench, when the young husbands come down from Boston on the hourly boat or the forty-minute train, and their wives were all dressed to bathe with them. A dozen women of 30 to 35 walked into the water as faultless as they were large, putting the ballet troupes to misery and remanding the stage beauties, from Lydia Thompson to Langtry, to the domain of the quarter-bred. How would old Cotton Mather have wondered and fretted to see the first dames of Massachusetts stripped to the shoulder socket, stockinged in silk to the knee, with thighings beneath the short skirt that were revealed at every motion of the water.

A Tale from the North.

A tale comes from the far north, above the Arctic circle, that mammoth carcasses are found frozen in the ice, and that the Indians chop them out and feed the meat to their dogs. These carcasses are as well preserved as if killed but yesterday, although they have lain for who knows how many thousand years in a solidly frozen state. Undoubtedly these animals existed coeval with the glacial period and were indigenous to a tropical climate; therefore we must reason that this period came on almost instantaneously, all living animals were killed, by the extreme cold, and before their flesh could putrefy it became frozen.—Juneau, Alaska, Free Press.

The Admission of Dakota, and the Prohibition Party.

Toledo Blade.

The following significant admission is made in the Washington special to the Cincinnati Enquirer, the leading Democratic daily of Ohio:

The result of the election in Maine makes notable one indication, which is that the Prohibition vote is largely returning to its Republican alliance. Maine was the propagating garden for the movement which made the cold-water adherents a party organization. For these pioneers to again return to the Republican fold is notice served to all who have the temperance cause really at heart that results cannot be reached by standing alone, but rather through the instrumentality of one or the other great political organizations. If like results attain in New York, it will mean the accretion of 15,000 votes to the Republican ticket which otherwise would have been thrown away on the Fisk electors. Such a contingency would make it quite up-hill work for the Democrats to carry the Empire State.

The result in Oregon, in Vermont and in Maine was the same. There was a decrease in the third party vote in all. Vermont showing a falling off of over 15 per cent. from the vote two years ago; the vote in Maine lost over 23 per cent. The organs of the party assign the same reason it each case, viz:, that the lines were sharply drawn on the tariff question, and that no other issue entered into the canvass to any extent. That issue is sharply drawn all over the country as it was in Oregon, or Vermont, or in Maine. As the presidential campaign progresses, it will be still more prominent, for questions of politics pertaining to the state alone have no place in the national campaign. It is therefore to be expected that there will be a falling off in the third party vote everywhere, as there was in the three states named. The "million votes for Fisk and Brooks" are already seen to be an impossibility, with every indication pointing to a decrease of the total of 294,000 that party received in 1886.

It is not to be inferred that the cause of Prohibition will not be injured in any wise, however. The cause of Prohibition and the cause of the third party are two entirely distinct and separate things. Though all third party men are Prohibitionists, not all Prohibitionists, not even a majority of them, are third party men. In point of fact, the Blade showed, using the figures furnished by a third party organ, that, out of every fifteen Prohibitionists, only one supports the third party while the other fourteen believe in working for Prohibition without rousing partisan rancor and political prejudice. That is a little over 6 per cent. of the Prohibitionists believe in a separate political party as a means of reaching that result.

Is a separate political party really necessary to conserve the interests of this giant reform? Let us examine the facts. There is no need of a party, if the work can be done without; for the party divisions are sharply drawn in this country, and the difficulties in the way of bringing a third party up to the working point—the numerical strength that will make it effective—are simply tremendous. No new party has ever arisen in this country save at those times that one or the other of the two great parties has fallen to pieces, and thus an opportunity was given. The Whig party disintegrated after its defeat in the presidentiol campaign of 1852, and the American, or Know-Nothing party, sprang into existence. Its one issue was not strong enough to meet with popular favor long, as before the next presidential year rolled around, it was in a dying condition, and the issue of "no extension of slavery into the territories" gave birth to the Republican party. There is no such disintegrated condition in either of the two great parties to-day, and the difficulties in the way of building up a third one are, we think, insuperable.

To return from this digression. We repeat, there is no need of a separate Prohibitionist party if Prohibition is being reached without it. What are the facts? There are to-day six states which have Prohibition—Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Rhode Island, Iowa and Kansas. There is partial Prohibition, in the form of local option, in over half the remaining states of the Union, and the area thus being rescued from the grasp of Rum is increasing steadily. The sentiment in favor of Prohibition is growing. The restrictive laws on the liquor traffic are increasing yearly in number and severity, showing the steady growth of sentiment antagonistic to the Rum traffic; and when men's eyes begin to be opened to the evils resulting from drink, and they realize the selfish, soulless nature of the Rum Power through its defiant efforts to evade and set at naught all restrictive legislation, they gradually become convinced that there is but one way to deal effectually with this monster curse, and that is) to kill it by Prohibition. No restrictive or legislative measure can ever become a final solution of the problem. All such methods are but steps to one end—and that is Prohibition.

The outlook is, therefore, hopeful. There has been a vast area, rescued from the domination of the Rum Power. But of all this work, the third party cannot point to one case in which it was, of itself, effective in accomplishing Prohibition. Not one state has it ever carried for the cause, while the local option plan is condemned by the third party leaders. In point of fact, it has on more than one occasion imitated the conduct of the dog in the manger—unable to do anything itself, it has bitterly opposed the doing of the work by anybody else. The third party leaders argue that others shall sacrifice party to principle, and call on Prohibitionists to leave the Republican ranks (or the Democratic) and vote with them, because of Prohibition. Of course, as they press the sacrifice of party to principle upon others, they must be willing to do the same thing themselves when a proper ocasion offers. That occasion offers itself now, in the election of members of the next House Representatives. They can help, by their votes, to add another state to the Prohibition column, by abandoning their party and voting in a certain way.

We will explain. South Dakota put Prohibition into her constitution, with which she stands knocking at the door of the Union, demanding the admission to which she is clearly entitled. The Democrats in congress, who are keeping her out because her people are Republicans, assert that a territory has no right to frame a state constitution until after congress has passed an enabling act. This is a mere pretense, a figment behind which to hide their real objection to her admission. If a Democratic majority is elected to the next House of Representatives, the members of which are, in a majority of the states, to be chosen at the November election, South Dakota will be still excluded—at least until that party has a safe majority in the senate, which her two new senators will not endanger; and she will be required to frame a new constitution as a preliminary. But the Republicans are committed to her admission at once, and with her present constitution, Prohibition and all; and she will be admitted as soon as the next congress meets, if the Republicans win a majority in the house.

Therefore, Republican success this fall means the addition of another state to the Union, and that state with Prohibition in her constitution. Democratic success means postponement, and another bitter contest in the territory over the Prohibition question. Now, it is a fact that every third party man who is honest will admit, that not a candidate of that party this fall for congress, for president or vice president, or for legislators who will elect United States senators, anywhere in the United States, has the slightest chance of election. Consequently, they are imperiling nothing by giving up party for principle. What adequate reason can any honest voter of that party give why he should not cast his vote for the candidates whose election is possible, and whose triumph will result in giving not only a new state to the Union, but a Prohibition state? Is there any possible way in the present campaign that the principle of Prohibition can receive more aid than by that very line of conduct? We challenge an answer from any third party paper or advocate.

Every conscientious Prohibitionist knows that his vote will tell directly for Prohibition if cast in this way. He knows that South Dakota is entitled to admission, under the Prohibitory constitution she has adopted, and that all patriotic citizens owe it to her and her people, as a matter of justice, to vote so that she may be at once admitted. He knows that he must either vote or refuse to vote for the only candidates (whose election is possible) who are committed in favor of her admission. Every state which erects a barrier against Rum strengthens the cause everywhere. Fellow-Prohibitionists, will you sacrifice the principle you profess to hold dear, for a theory? Will you continue to ask your fellow-citizens to abandon party for principle, and refuse to do it yourselves? is there any quicker, any better, any surer way to add another state to the Prohibition phalanx, than to vote for the candidates whose triumph will result in the admission, at once, of Prohibition Dakota, and thus increase the strength of the hosts who are battling in the effort to Pulverize the Rum Power?

STATE PRESS SAYINGS.

Douglas County News: Mr. Merriam's voice and vote in the legislature was always on the side of the people, and in support of this assertion Mr. Donnelly alluded in the convention to the fact that when the bill for reducing the rate of interest in the state was before the house, Mr. Merriam left the speaker's chair, took the floor and spoke with much force in favor of the passage of that bill. The question at once arises, what political ring, faction or locality is responsible for the nomination of Merriam? To those who have watched the course of political events in the republican party of this state during the past year the answer is apparent. He is the candidate of no political ring, faction or locality. The republican party will now enter upon an aggressive campaign. The records of its candidate, both as a private citizen and public officer, will stand the closest scrutiny. He is a true republican and in perfect harmony with the progressive ideas of his party upon the questions of the day. In localities where he is little known he will grow in the estimation of the people as he becomes better known. He is a man for whom all republicans and other persons who desire a clean, able and vigorous administration can consistently vote.

Cokato Republican: It is with a sense of genuine satisfaction that we announce the name of the next governor of Minnesota, the Hon. Wm. R. Merriam. He is a man whom no honest, straightforward and conscientious republican need shrink from supporting. He is distinctly a farmers' and a workingman's candidate; his support in the convention coming almost entirely from country precincts. His record in the legislature is such as to commend itself to every tiller of the soil in the state.

Litchfield News: The outcome of the republican state convention can be but pleasing to the party at large. We believe Mr. Merriam to be the best of the three or four most prominent candidates for the nomination. The fact of his being a banker will be used by the democrats as one of their strongest arguments against him, but we fail to see wherein a good slice of bank stock makes a man any worse for having possession of it. We believe there isn't a democrat in the state that would refuse a present of one or more millions of that much talked of commodity, but yet that party will adjust its spectacles and discover innumerable ways in which it has wrought havoc with Mr. Merriam's good qualities. The republican candidate is a sound business man, a representative republican, and his record is free from mugwumpery. He ought to and we believe will receive the hearty support of the party throughout the state.

Arlington Enterprise: Mr. Merriam is a young man, being less than forty years of age, and has already filled many offices of trust to the satisfaction of all parties. Two years ago he was elected speaker of the house of representatives, and proved himself to be a man of ability and fully capable of presiding over that august body. He is now serving his second term as president of the state agricultural society and has made both fairs of which he has had charge a grand success financially. They have been more instructive than ever before and the farmers throughout the state are willing to give him due credit for his labors. He is not a trained politician, but he probably has the largest popular following of any man in Minnesota, which will be the means of electing him in November by 30,000 majority.

Fairmont Sentinel: Merriam is a man whose record is clean and who has been conspicuously successful in every business and commercial undertaking of his life. He was nominated without the aid of any of the great corporate influences of the twin cities, and he can be elected in the same manner. He has no other object or ambition in life than to make for himself an honorabe record, and we feel sure that the future will prove the wisdom of the action in selecting him as a standard bearer of the republicans of Minnesota in the coming campaign.

Monticello Times: Mr. Merriam owes nothing to the cities of Minneapolis and St. Paul. The politicians of these cities headed by the most skilled and schrewdest wire pullers could not overcome the country sentiment, as his record in the last state legislature as speaker of the house showed him to be a friend of the farmer, especially in giving them complete control of the committee on railroads, and by his earnest championship of the bill reducing the legal rate of interest on money from ten to eight per cent., which, had it become a law, would have effected a saving of two per cent. to every farmer in the state who is forced to borrow. Mr. Merriam's public and personal record will stand the test of the severest criticism, and from this on he will grow into the affections of the people so strongly that they will on November 6th ratify his nomination by 30,000 majority.

Morristown Rustler: Hon. W. R. Merriam, the republican candidate for governor, is as good a man for the position as could have been chosen and one that gives satisfaction in all parts of the state. A man that conducts his own private affairs in a successful manner is a fit man to be placed in this responsible position, and such a one has Merriam proved to be. In his speech of acceptance his remarks were brief but pointed. He stated that he took the nomination without a pledge or promise to any man, and was ready to do his best for the interest of the state. "I believe you want the credit of the state kept up, your taxes kept down, and your public institutions cared for, and these shall be my especial care if I am elected."

Owatonna Journal: In the nomination of Wm. R. Mersiam as candidate for governor the republicans of Minnesota have placed at the head of the state ticket a worthy and honorable gentleman. Socially he stands second to no citizen of the commonwealth. His business-qualifications and fine executive ability eminently fit him to fill the position for which he has been named. He is a young man who has shown remarkable energy of character and there need be no fear but that he will win the race.

Slayton Gazette: As speaker of the last house Mr. Merriam demonstrated that he had a warm spot in his heart for the farmers of the state, and the fact that Mr. Merriam secured his nomination without the aid of a single delegate from the two great cities of the state, ought to be something in his favor. He was nominated by the country delegates and it is but fair to presume that they knew what the people of their respective districts wanted.

St. Paul Dispatch: With the farmer, artisan and merchant, Mr. Merriam is deservedly popular, while the republicans of other callings, who know, or know of him and his brief career, will not need much of an argument to be convinced that he is thoroughly a representative of his party, its principles and its mission.

Todd County Argus: The democratic congressional convention which met at Fergus Falls nominated Charles Canning, of Norman County. Canning is probably the best man they could get to run in the face of certain defeat. He is a man of no particular ability and may properly be called a man of one idea. When he gets one idea in his head he has no room for any other. He is a farmer and one of the Farmers' Alliance men who have worked the organization for just such ends as securing nomination for office. Our farmers in Todd County know from experience what that means. In point of ability he can stand no comparison with Comstock, and he has not a single qualification to recommend him to the voters other than that he is a farmer and an alliance man. While Comstock is the ablest man that could have been chosen from the array of candidates that sought the nomination and one who will not do discredit to the enviable record of Knute Nelson, Mr. Canning was only put up because of his connection with the Farmers' Alliance, with the hope that this might catch votes. The democratic party of the fifth district has better men than Canning.

Duluth Herald: When William R. Merriam was speaker of the house of representatives and appointed his committees with a view to aiding the farmers in securing needed legislation he was commended by all parties for his fairness. Now that he is the republican nominee for governor he is the object of the most shameless personal attacks by the democratic press. The bitterness of these attacks would alone insure his election.

Co-operative Creameries.

Western Rural:—John Boyd writes us that co-operative creameries are growing in popular estimation and are bound to be the thing. We believe it.

The tendency among producers is to co-operate as far as possible, and there is no branch of agricultural production in which co-operation is more feasible and more readily adopted. A co-operative creamery may be backed by a comparatively small area of territory. One of the difficulties in the way of getting farmers together is found in the fact that they are scattered and difficult to reach. But in the dairy business, it will not require much time or travel to see enough farmers to organize a co-operative association and to support it after it is organized. Of course all the profits that a creamery makes comes out of the producer. It is his cream that pays the profit on production—if there is any—pays the proprietor of the creamery his profits, pays the commission man his and the retailer his. If it is thought to be worth while to save the profits that go into the pockets of the men who run the creamery, co-operation is desirable. There may seem to be one possible difficulty, and that is the inexperience of those who should join in the association. But the practical work is done by a practical man who is hired for the purpose, and farmers know enough to conduct the financial affairs of the concern. Besides there is this encouragement: So far as we know the co-operative creameries have been a great success.

We can loan money on better terms than anyone else in the valley. Money paid over the moment securities are executed. Steenerson & McManus.

Ald. Jerome offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Resolved, That the sum of one thousand dollars be and is hereby appropriated from the general fund of the city of Crookston for the purchase from S. L. L. Dobson by the city of Crookston.

Ald. Steenerson, Marlette, Nolan, Jerome and Buhn were appointed a committee to consider the matter of purchasing the Crookston water works.

Ald. Steenerson offered the following resolutions, which were carried unanimously:

Whereas, Rachel M. Davis is willing to accept a four inch water pipe instead of a five inch, as offered by the city council in the resolution on the subject passed Aug. 31st, 1888, to be laid according to the provisions of said resolution; now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That a four inch water main be laid from the corner of "B" and Sherman streets, in Davis' addition to the City of Crookston, along said Sherman street to the northeast corner of block nine, in said addition; and

Resolved further, That the Mayor and President of the City Council be and are hereby appointed a committee to contract for said pipe and to purchase the same and the necessary hydrant at the terminus thereof, and

Resolved further, That the City Attorney be and is hereby instructed to draft the proper conveyance for the right of way from said Davis for the city pipe laid across said Davis' lands, and the proper contract with the Water Works Co. for supplying water for said hydrant; and

Resolved further, That the said contract with the said Davis and said Water Works Co. is to be approved by the Mayor before it becomes binding on the city, and that it is expressly understood that said Davis have the privilege of tapping said water main, but that the water service be paid for to said Water Works Co. by said Davis to be without expense to the city.

The proposition of W. D. Hurlbut to sell his city map for the sum of $200 was referred to ald. Buhn, Jerome and Nolan to report on same at next regular meeting of the council.

Sweet and Sour Cream.

Western Rural:—Which is best for churning, all things considered, sweet cream or sour? asks a correspondent.

Sour, we reply. Creamery butter is made from cream but slightly soured as compared with that usually used for dairy butter; and to our taste, well made dairy butter is the best butter that was ever made. But it is believed that more butter can be made from sour, than from sweet cream. In an English paper, the speaker is made to say that if they had two dairies of fifty cows each, in one of which they churned from the sweet cream and in the other from sour cream, a strict record would show much larger profit in favor of the sour cream. It was well known that the Danes artificially soured their cream They were wise, because they obtained a better yield. A friend of his a Dane, now a chemist in Sweden at one of the colleges had made a series of experiments in proof of this, but they had done the same in Canada. They churned with different creams. No. 1 was sweet and No, 6 was sour, the intermediate samples being more or less sour in proportion. The result was that No. 1 gave five and one fourth pounds per cent of butter in the buttermilk; No. 3, three and one-half pounds; No. 4, two and one-half pounds; No. 5, one pound; and No. 6, three-fourths pound. Sour cream churned better and mixed better than partly sweet and partly sour, which entailed great loss. Nevertheless, the Danes were wrong in one particular—they washed their butter in the butter-milk and not in cold water thus enclosing much casein or curd, and that it was which prevented their butter preserving a fine flavor.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

Food and Milk.

Western Rural and American Stockman.

In answer to a correspondent who asks if there is any system of feeding by which a poor milker can be made a good milker, we would say no, not if she is a naturally poor milker. There must be a natural development of the milk glands, a fact that anybody will recognize if he chooses to take cognizance of the every day fact that one cow will give more milk than another upon the same quantity and quality of food. If the milk gland is poorly developed, food will not stimulate it into free development. It is because of this fact that it is of so much importance to select good cows to begin with. The milk gland must be well developed and it must have a natural capability to yield milk. Then the food is an important consideration. No cow can give milk without a sufficient supply of of good food, but some will not give much milk however they may be fed. A naturally good dairy animal, it is true, will sometimes give milk upon short and indifferent food, but she draws upon the fat she has stored up to do it, and the end will soon come. The quality of milk depends largely upon the breed and the animal in the first place. Rich feeding increases the total dry matter in milk after that. As a rule, the milk of large milkers contains more water than that of small milkers.

The Scrub.

Western Rural and American Stockman.

One of our live stock contemporaries has an article on the scrub—which for stupendous error is seldom excelled. It goes for the scrub with an energy that develops as the article goes on into a hurricane of vindictive opposition. Boiled down, it says that there is no use in taking good care of the scrub, for it will not respond to good care and feeding. This is perfect nonsense, and the result of such teachings, if the paper should happen to have any influence, must be unfortunate. The Rural and Stockman tells every man to give good care to his stock and to feed it well, and that he will find that it pays. It is not intended to convey the idea that the same amount of care and food will pay as well with the scrub as they will with the thoroughbred. Nobody can make as much off the average scrub as he can off the thoroughbred. That point should be kept conspicuous. But one difficulty with the scrub is that it receives indifferent care Give it as good care as the thoroughbred has, and while it would still be a scrub, with all that that implies, it would be a good deal better scrub than it is now. To tell a man, as this article practically does, that he must give good care and good feed for generations before the scrub will respond, is curious live stock wisdom. The average scrub will respond immediately to better care. Nature is not a fool if she is represented by a scrub. She knows enough to take advantage of favorable conditions.

We advise every man first to breed up, but we emphatically advise every man to treat whatever stock he may have well and to feed it the very best he can. He may not be able to make much out of scrub stock if he does, but we can assure him that he will make more than he will if he neglects it.

Scrubs and Blooded Cows.

The Difference in Results When Fed The Same Amount of Food.

When scrubs and blooded cows are given the same rations, the one does not gain in weight or yield in milk half as much as the other, and yet both are cared for alike and are in perfect health. If a portion of the food more than is necessary to sustain a healthy individual state goes to make fat and flesh and increase the milk yield in the full blood, what becomes of the same extras in the scrubs? The digestion and assimilation are as good in one as in the other, but the sum of the results is widely divergent unless the extra food of the scrub, which is known to be hardy, goes to develop and sustain constitutional strength and nervous energy. If this be the fact, suggests the Rural New Yorker, the extra food consumed by the scrub is not entirely wasted, but converted into qualities which may become in the highest degree useful and valuable when after years of pampering and close breeding, we have to go back to the scrub for new blood and new energy.

The shorthorn steer, compared with the Louisiana ox bred on the Attackapas prairie, in the matter of full flesh and noble proportions, differs widely, the difference between the two being this that one was bred for the butcher's block and the other for hard labor under a hot sun and humid climate.

Clover for Hogs.

Western Rural: We have just been reading an enthusiastic article upon the subject of clover for hogs. It says that it is the best and cheapest food for growing hogs that can be fed and that when clover is just beginning to blossom it is in the very best condition for the purposes of feeding swine. The Rural has always done all it could to bring clover to the favorable consideration of any farmer who can grow it. It is a grand good food for swine or any other animal, where growth is desired. It is a bone and muscle forming food of excellent merit. As to its cheapness, it is cheap as we usually estimate pasture, and yet it costs something. We cannot wisely proceed upon the notion that because we cannot accurately estimate its cost, it takes nothing out of our pocket. Clover is an excellent fertilizer of the soil, but if it is consumed it loses part of its value for that purpose. It makes the most valuable of hay, but if pastured and eaten up, we cannot get the hay. But it is very safe to say that it costs less than the average bone and muscle forming food costs, and is quite as good. We need not stop either at feeding it when green to benefit swine. Clover hay is greatly relished by hogs; and they do well upon it. They will eat it dry, but it is much more efficient as a food for them when steamed. It is a little out of the ordinary course for the average swine feeder to feed hay to swine, and men have been known to turn up their noses at the idea. But if they will try it once, they will bring their noses to the proper position for a nose.

BUTTER GETTING BETTER.

Western Rural:—Ten years ago there was no such general demand for practically gilt edge butter that there is now.

And while it is true that many who make the demand cannot distinguish good butter from bad, unless it is very bad, many are fair judges, and their number is increasing all the time. And a demand always creates a supply.

For a long time improvement in butter making was confined to professional butter makers, to factories, enthusiasts, experimenters, and fancy dairies. But the spirit of improvement, the spirit of progress, has spread wonderfully, but truth compels us to confess that there are dairies which it has not reached. But it will reach all for two or three reasons. One reason why it will, is that the manufacturers of improved dairy implements and machinery are enterprising, and they will force their improvements upon the attention of butter makers. In doing this they become dairy instructors for they must explain the whys and wherefores. In the absence of schools in which dairy methods might be taught, there is no better way of giving direct instruction in the principles of improved dairying than through the agents of our creamers and other dairy implements; and those who may think that the importunities of these people are a considerable nuisance, may get some satisfaction from the thought that they are getting some knowledge from them. It is true that such instruction may be a co-mingling of truth with error to some extent as it will be colored, in many instances by the sole desire to sell, but the grains of truth, always valuable, can be sifted from the error in actual practice.

There are many, however, who do not wait for instruction from such a source. They know that the dairy is advancing in methods and importance, and they are anxious to know upon what principles it is doing it. Therefore they become students of dairy literature, observers of dairy expermints and witnesses of the working of dairy machinery. At fairs the dairy department is the place where they spend most of their time, and they make inquiry as to new methods which they see noticed in the press, and as to how implements which they see advertised.

Thus they become posted and the butter which they make becomes better. Gradually therefore, our stock of good butter increases, but the consumption keeps pace with the supply, and will continue to do so. Our home consumption is steadily on the increase, because our population is steadily on the increase, and because too, there is more and more butter annually consumed per capita. It perhaps would be difficult for the native American to increase his individual consumption of butter, for he maintains, as a rule, the maximum from beginning to the end. But it is a fact that the tendency among our foreign population is toward a larger and larger consumption of everything. They imitate the natives in eating to a large degree, and usually having more money here to indulge their tastes than they had in their native home, they indulge them to the fullest extent. There is promise, therefore, of a constantly growing demand at home for the products of the dairy, and foreign markets are open to us, though they have been greatly injured by the dishonesty and greed of American adulterators.

Speech of Hon. Albert Griffin, at Minneapolis, Sept. 9th.

Mr. Chairman and Ladies and Gentlemen: American citizens, having had the elective franchise for about 100 years, before the most of us were born, are apt to forget that the ballot is not a personal perquisite, a simple privilege to be exerted or not as we see fit, and to be disposed of in accordance with caprice or whim or personal preference.

Before going into the principal subjects to be considered, I want to impress, if possible, upon your minds the fact that in a republic there exists between each and every citizen an implied contract between the citizen as an individual and the government as the representative of all the citizens; because a republican government is nothing more nor less than the people boiled out. This contract is based upon the fact that every individual derives an incalculable benefit from the government; he is protected every day of his life from numberless evils, and enjoys countless benefits that he could not have, were it not for this government. The government is constituted by the men who receive a majority of the votes at the polls. If the good people vote and are in the majority, we are certain to have good government. If the good people do not vote, and the bad ones do, we are certain to have a bad government. If no one votes, we can have no government at all. It follows, therefore, that each individual is bound, as he is the recipient of benefits from the government to perform his share in the making of that government. If he does not do this, he is a political parricide, making upon that which he does not benefit. What the citizen has to do is, first: To do all that he can to secure the election of men who are both honest and competent to discharge the duties of their offices. And in the second place, of men who represent the right principles and are desirous of framing those measures which conduce the most to the public weal. There are two ways in which every individual can do something upon this line. The one way is at the ballot box, and every man should put in his ballot, for the majority of the vote decides the matter. Another very important, and sometimes even more important than the other, is to attend the primaries of his party so as to see that the candidates of his party are the right kind of men. If you have 90 good men in a given precinct and 10 bad ones, and 85 of those good men stay at home and let the 10 bad ones go there and constitute a majority and nominate their friends for office, the entire party has to suffer the consequences. But the good men, who did not do what they knew was necessary in order to secure the right kind of a ticket, have no right to growl and find fault with the men who did go to the ballot box. It is their duty to kick, but they should kick themselves instead of the other parties.

There are a multitude of measures and principles before the country at all times upon which law-makers have to legislate and act. It is impossible to have a party for each one, because if you undertake to do that no measure or proposition would have enough men behind it to secure for it the respect of the community; for there is no matter of public legislation, and never has been in times of peace, about which one-third of the people agreed that that was the paramount issue before the people at that time. In order to have a party strong enough to do any good you have got to have the friends of a number of principles or measures or propositions act together, unless each one tacitly agrees that he will support or acqiesce in the measures of the friends that unite with him in helping forward his measures.

Now, you cannot sit down in your closet and manufacture and invent and decide just what principle shall be put into a party platform and for which you shall work. In this country of ours, from the foundation of the government clear down through to the present day, the people have divided mainly into two grand parties, in accordance—not with their positions towards specific measures, but in accordance with their ideas as to the proper function of government. Mr. Jefferson formulated the democratic idea in that noted sentence "That government is best which governs least." It appeals naturally to a self-reliant, strong man, who knows that in the average contest with his fellowman he can get all his share and a little more; it is naturally sustained by all the varieties of birds of prey, who simply want to be let alone while they are plucking their fellows; it naturally appeals to the doctrinaire who likes to settle everything in accordance with some nice looking sentences and ideas; but when the anarchist takes that principle he adds a little to it and says, if that government is best which governs the least, then the government is best off which has no government at all; and the conclusion looks very much like a legitimate one from that premise. Have you ever thought of the foundation of that whole idea of the individualism that it is based upon, that it is essentially Ishmaelitish, formulated sometimes by those men who say: "Every man for himself, and the devil take the hindmost."

Now it is natural for those men who entertain these views as to the nature and objects of government, that they should upon all moral issues favor those laws that restrain the least, and give the largest liberty to every individual; and to compel each one to work out his own salvation, if he can—and to take the consequences if he cannot.

The other idea of government is what is called a helpful one—sometimes the paternal one. If it goes upon the proposition that governments are instituted to secure the greatest good to the greatest number, as expressed by Mr. Gladstone; the object is to make it as easy as possible to do right, and as difficult as possible to do wrong. It is carrying into politics of the golden rule: "Do unto others as you would be done by." It proposes that the arm of the law shall be strong enough to protect the weakest citizen against every one who would trample upon his rights; it proposes that the hand of the government shall be wide open and controlled by a generous heart, disposed to help those who for any reason need help from their fellows; and it is natural that those who have this idea of government should upon all moral questions desire to have the law so framed that those who disregard the rights of their fellow men, that those whose vocation or desire is to drag down instead of build up, shall be restrained as much as possible. These men look at the situation as it is; they look upon mankind as they find them. They look to a community composed in part of strong men, able to take care of themselves, and of a multitude or more who need help rather than upon the opposite idea that, in accordance with the Darwinian doctrine of the survival of the fittest, we should rather be glad to have the weaker ones killed off from time to time.

There are at the present time three principal subjects about which the great majority of the people of this country are more or less interested, each one of them upon one or the other side. There are a multitude of questions, but these are the three dominant ones. The first is the question of the protection of the political rights of the citizen; the right to a free vote and a fair count; and that is the most important of all the issues before the people to-day; it is the more important of all the issues that we have ever had before us in a time of peace, for the reason that in a republic where the offices are controlled by those men for whom ballots are cast, or, at least returned, that if such communities have ballots suppressed or improperly controlled, or if the returns were fraudulent, those things are done necessarily by men who are not controlled by principles; and if you allow men to control the government of the country contrary to the form and spirit of the law, the necessary result will be that they will select men for office of the same character with themselves, and you will have, necessarily, a corrupt government. Now I don't propose to fling the "bloody shirt" here to-night. I have no sympathy, however, with those who are constantly sneering at that time. I meet sometimes men—we have a few of them down in Kansas, I don't know as you have any here, who are always scolding. They find fault with everything anybody else does, or proposes to do, but never do anything to amount to anything themselves. Look at them and judge from their countenances that they had never had anything to eat but cold boiled owl. I have no sympathy with that class of people who are constantly, whenever anything is said about wrong acts down south, crying out he is flinging the "bloody shirt" and you must let the war issues be settled. I am not talking now about war issues. The war was ended long, long ago. I am talking about the present, and what is necessary to secure our interests to-day and in the future, and I repeat that one of the most necessary things to do is to so frame our laws that we can be sure to have the honest will of the people enacted into law. The man who in this state pretends to deny that the votes of a large multitude of people in those southern states are coerced, by that denial proves either his own ignorance or lack of honesty. But the fraudulent elections are not confined to the South. They have been known in the North, and not unfrequently, either.

I hold in my hand a copy of the democratic carriaturist of this country—Puck. One of its principal sketches is a whole page cartoon which consists in a column of workmen going to the polls and on one side is a portly savage figure marked "monopolist cracking his whip," and on the other side a savage slave driver cracking his whip, with "discharged" sticking out of his pocket. What is that intended to represent? It is intended to convey the idea that although the negro vote is free at the south, that at the north employers drive their employes to the ballot box and compel them to vote on their dictation, and that is what this democratic cheat puts this in here for, in order to edge against the charges that they cannot deny in regard to themselves. But they don't help their case. It is undoubtedly true that there are many northern workmen who are influenced improperly by employers to vote against the dictation of their own consciences; but there isn't any evidence yet produced to show that a majority of these employers were not democrats. Indeed, all the evidence we have upon the subject goes to show that they are democrats, and such cartoons as this is simply the thief crying "stop thief!"

Let me call your attention to this one undeniable fact, that, north and south, east and west, in every state in this union, each and every law that has been passed, or attempted to be passed in each and every one of these states, having for its object the protection of the ballot box against ballot box stuffers and false counts, each and every law passed for the purpose of protecting the poor and the weak man in depositing his ballot as he chooses, and not as he is told to, each and every law passed for the purpose of trying to prevent intimidation, bribery and other corrupt methods has received a majority of the votes cast by the republicans, and each law attempted to be passed by the opposition has received a majority of the votes cast by the democrats. Why, only last year—this very year—in New York, after the democrats had been howling themselves hoarse over the charges that the northern monopolists were driving the workingmen up and compelling them to vote for the tariff steals, the republican members of the New York legislature passed a bill the intent of which was to so fix the law that every man would be allowed to vote with no one to see him, so that no earthly man could tell how he voted, but the democratic members of that legislature opposed the law, and after it was passed, in spite of their opposition, the democratic governor of that state vetoed it. Of course they had special reasons and excuses always for the opposing of these good laws, but let me call your attention to the fact that they are always acting the part of these "boiled owl" men; they are scolding and finding fault, but they don't bring on better laws and insist that they shall be passed. Now they say these laws are passed in the interest of the republican party, and they opposed them for that reason. Republicans are selfish, and they want these laws because they know they are going to redound to the benefit of the republican party, and hurt the democratic party. But what of it? Suppose that is true, what does it prove? Why, simply that wherever the people and the republican leaders believe that wherever the people are allowed to vote—the poor as well as the rich—in accordance with the doctrine of their own consciences and judgments, without intimidation or improper influences from any source, that as the result of those honest elections the republicans will get the benefit of it. When a democrat comes and opposes the passage of such laws having such principles in view, he simply proves that he believes that honest elections are not conductive to democratic success. Now, I don't want any more honesty in elections down south than I do at the north; I insist that we should have them everywhere, and insist on them everywhere, and I say to you to-night that one of the reasons why, in my judgment, the patriots of this country and the sensible people of this country who rally to the standard of the republican party that the nature of the party, the elements of which it is composed, show that the history of the past in regard to these matters will be the history of the future.

THE LIQUOR QUESTION. ANALYSIS OF THE POSITION OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY ON IT.

I come now to the third great problem, and that is the question of the restriction or suppression of the drinking saloon. [Applause.] This is purely a moral qustion with political and economic aspects. It is natural that on the tariff that the party which was for the protection of the side of the American laborer on the question of the tariff, and those laws which help him to get high wages, and on this question of the saloon, which is purely moral one, the one side being for the benefit of mankind, and the other pulling it down, it is natural that we should see the same dividing line. Who compose the republican party? It comprises within its membership in the Northern states nearly all of the church members, the ministers, the school-teachers, the college professors, the educated classes of the country, the philanthropist and the public spirited men. [Applause.] They are facts patent to everybody and admitted even by our opposition friends. It is true that once in a while we find a man coming around when we have talked about this sort of thing, humanity and so on, and we see he is one of those men whose noses are so high in the air that the upper portion is forever in the region of perpetual snow. He is not a republican. He has no sympathy with the people, and he never can do anything towards the upbuilding of his race, for no man can influence his fellow men unless he looks him squarely in the eye. His shoulder must touch theirs and his heart beat responsive to theirs. He must have sympathy that goes outside of himself and reaches over the land.

What is the saloon, and what is this anti-saloon proposition? The proposition is not to say to men, you shall not drink if you want to. The proposition is simply that men shall not make it a business to make drunkards. That is the foundation proposition of it. Are you aware of the facts my friends have you ever thought of it? If you haven't, then just think of it, and go through the list of drunkrds that you known. I want to say to you tonight that nine-tenths of the drunkards in this land today have acquired the habit of drinking in excess by first drinking what they did not want, in a socal way, in the dram shops of this country. Every one of the 200,000 dram shops in the United States to-day is a moral spider's web, and every dram seller is a moral spider. The business of the dram seller is to cater to the tastes of everyone of his customers, to bring in, and to get men to drink a little now, and a little then, and more tomorrow until finally the appetite is created that he afterwards supplies. If dram sellers did nothing but supply a demand already existing, there never would have been any prohibition or anti-saloon agitation; but the trouble is that they first create the appetite and then supply the demand. I do not say this in way of abuse of these men, because they are just exactly in their nature like we are, every man desires that he is engaged in shall be prosperous and he is going to do all he can do to increase the number of his customers and the liberality of their patronage. If he would not go into the business at all. And when we find a man whose views are such that he can go into that business he necessarily will do all he can to secure those customers and make them as liberal as possible with the result that you know must follow from that. For a number of years past the republican party in a number of states has committed itself very squarely against saloons, but in its national convention has said nothing until its late convention which met in Chicago. That one passed a resolution that I want to read in your hearing. It has been said by some that it is not a platform, but I will read it. It is on page six of the platform as published and distributed by the national republican committee from its headquarters in New York:

"The first concern of all good government is the virtue and sobriety of the people, and the purity of the home. The republican party cordially sympathizes with all wise and well directed efforts for the promotion of temperance and morality."

Now, I am not entirely satisfied with that plank. I would have liked to have had it more ringing. I should haved liked to have had it said a little more than it did say. But I will tell you, my friends, it is a great deal better then nothing. And I will go further and say it is a grat deal better plank for the cause of temperance than the platform adopted by our third party friends at Indianapolis which is a wrong one. It is a broader platform. The trouble with that platform is that it is made so narrow that it is just like a fence; very few people can stand on it. This platform, says the republican party, cordially sympathises with what? With high license? With local option? With general restriction? With prohibition; with any one only of those? No. With what? "With all wise and well directed efforts for the promotion of temperance and morality." Now you would not have it sympathise and support something that was not wise, would you? It would not be the common sense to do that, would it? It would not be for the interests of temperance to do that, would it? What do all wise efforts mean? Why, it means that out in Kansas and all those states where the majority of people, knowing their own situation believe that prohibition is the best way to meet this evil, that there the republican party sympathizes with and supports prohibition, but that in those states where the majority of the people believe that prohibition laws cannot be made to do as much good as some other way, as local option, or some kind of restrictive laws, that then the republican party will support those local option or restricted laws. In other words that everywhere the republican party will go forward just as far as the people will let them go? But says some of our good friends, that doesn't mean anything. Now I have a sentence or a paragraph here taken from the Illinois Staats-Zeitung, edited by Herman Raster, the author of the so-called Raster resolution in the republican platform of 1872, which our third party friends have denounced so severely in times past. Mr. Raster, in an ediferial immediately after the adjournment of the convention, upon this plank says:

While the republican national convention in the beginning kept every declaration for temperance out of its platform, it adopted, immedtately before separating, on motion of a member from Maine, and almost unanimously a resolution which pledges the party to support all wise efforts for furthering temperance. Every child knows what such a declaration means from the mouth and interpreted by the mouth of the original prohibition state of Main. The republican party as such stands now as the temperance party.

That is the language of Mr. Herman Raster, and I want to say as one who was on the ground and a member of the committee on platform as well as of the convention, that I know the great masses of the members of that convention heartily sympathized with this resolution and would have been willing to have had it even sronger, and they passed that resolution not simply as a sop thrown to a whale. It was a matter that was being discussed all through the time that the balloting was going on. It was not sprung just at the close. There were not a dozen members who had gone away from the hall when this was proposed. It was proposed by Mr. Boutelle, of the state of Main, who moved a suspension of the rules so that he could introduce a resolution as an additional plank to the platform, and he then went on to state in behalf of the protection of the home, but before he had read this, objection was made, but immediately from all parts of the house the cries came in support of him, and no man who was there could fail to realize that three forths of the convention, before they knew anything more than that it was proposed to put a temperance resolution through, that three-forths of the convention were backing up Mr. Boutelle.

Now we have a little more evidence. Here is Mr. Raster, of Chicago, and now here is something from the Saloon Journal, published in New York city, which is the principal organ of the liquor interests of this nation. The liquor dealers had a convention in Buffalo, a few days ago, and here is the editorial utterance of that paper to that convention; it says:

"The liquor dealers' state convention to be held at Buffalo Sept. 4th and 5th has something more to do than have a good time. It is a serious question what

Well, our people have heard Rhea and the universal verdict is: "Just splendid! if they would give us such talent every time there would be less complaint of empty houses." Edwin Barbour appeared at the opera house in "A Legal Document," on Friday evening to a poor house. Mr. Barbour himself is an A. 1 actor but his support is not so heavy. His leading lady has too much of the school-girl style to be considered a thorough actress while the balance of the troupe are but little better.

While many are lamenting a short crop of wheat they should not be utterly cast down, as the price for next year is assured by this calamity. All should feel encouraged to put in a larger acreage than ever next year in the full assurance of good stiff prices. They will surely come. This will also stimulate capital and settlers to locate upon our uncultivated lands.

Dr. L. B. Tooly and wife returned Monday evening from a trip through the Thirteen Towns. He made inquiries concerning crops and found a universal complaint of a light crop of wheat but the quality is universally good. He finds a good yield of oats and vegetables. He brought along a sample of potatoes from W. W. Mitchell's place in Sletten that were the finest we have seen this year; also samples of white Flint and sweet corn, fully ripe. From Mr. Stoddard, the postmaster at Woodside, he brings samples of white Flint, Ohio Dent and Eight Rowed, all fully ripe and of excellent quality; also a fine large pumpkin, fully ripe, weighing 25 pounds. He found the farmers nearly all favorable to diversified husbandry, many of them already possessing good cows. All were looking anxiously for the coming of the iron horse.

It is rumored that the democrats are using Canning as a cats-paw to rake Wilson's chestnuts out of the fire. They do not have any very great respect for the man but hope by him to make votes for Wilson. Already the evidences of trades are numerous.

Do you like fresh, sweet butter? Go Lilly & Heidrick's.

Bert Duntley was up to visit his father-in-law, Mr. M. Davis, near Euclid, and brought back a sample of Mr. Davis' wheat, which is the finest sample that we have seen this fall. Mr. Davis has 100 acres and intends to keep it until spring. He has a bonanza.

From all over the country the news is cheering, indicating the triumphant election of the entire republican ticket by a good majority. The prospects are good for five republican congressmen in Minnesota, notwithstanding the desperate efforts of the democrats to deceive the people into voting the democratic ticket.

The democrats prate of Mr. Canning's "honesty," as the only thing needed in a man to represent this district. It requires something besides that. A man must not only be honest—he must be an able man both of which qualifications are possessed in an eminent degree by the Hon. S. G. Comstock.

On all loans we make, interest payable at our office in Crookston.
STEENERSON & McMANUS.

The democrats accuse Mr. Comstock of being a Jim Hill man, hoping by this false accusation to deceive the farmers into voting the democratic ticket. Mr. Comstock is a republican and Jim Hill is a democrat, doing all he can for the success of the democratic ticket. Mr. Charles Canning is the only Jim Hill candidate for congress in this district.

The reports of threshing are very gloomy showing a large shortage. It is now apparent that 50 per cent of the usual yield will be a large estimate and very much of this is below No. 1 Hard. The man who has good No. 1 Hard wheat for sale next spring will be in great luck as the price will no doubt be beyond any ever known before. Some freely predict $2 per bushel.

We can save you 33⅓ per cent on all goods purchased in our line. Look us over and be convinced.

Mrs. Wm. Box and family left for their new home at Tacoma on Sunday, via the C. P. R. R. They were accompanied to Winnipeg by Mr. and Mrs. Walter Alexander. On Saturday a few of her friends made up a purse to purchase a beautiful gold watch for Mrs. Box which was given to Miss Allie to be presented to her after she had started on their long journey. Mr. Box was looked upon as one of our oldest inhabitants, coming to this city in May 1878 and living here since. He has filled offices of trust among us and never found wanting. He has ever taken an active interest in politics and was considered a good worker on the right side. He had established here a good home for his old age where he had planned to spend his decling years but last spring the condition of his wife's health was such that he was obliged to seek a warmer climate so he went to Tacoma where he is now interested in a large grocery house. He does not sell his property here as yet, as it may be that should Mrs. B. receive the benefits hoped for they may some day return. Their many friends will unite with THE JOURNAL in wishing for their future welfare and the restoration of Mrs. Box to perfect health.

Our democratic friends must feel under a great weight of obligation to their nominee for congress, Chas. Canning. Four years ago he ran against their nominee for the legislature, Wm. Stuart, and beat him. At that time Mr. Canning pretended to be a republican.

A Warning to Farmers.

Pioneer Press.

Letters from various points in Dakota intimate that the high price of good wheat is tempting farmers to sell all they have of the better grades and keep the poorer grades for seed. A more suicidal policy than this cannot be conceived. There is a current belief among the best authorities on the grain markets that a higher range of prices for wheat is likely to prevail for three or four years. But in order to reap any advantage from this state of things, or to get any remunerative price for his wheat, it is essential that the farmer does all that he possibly can to maintain the standard of quality which has heretofore given the spring wheat of Dakota and Minnesota so enviable a position in the market. Poor seed means poor crops, both in quality and quantity. The farmers who have got good wheat should keep enough of it for seeding in the spring, for they will not be able then to buy it back at the prices at which they are now selling it. However stringent their necessities, they cannot afford to sacrifice the whole future of their wheat crops by disposing of the very small amount which is necessary for seeding. "You cannot gather figs from thistles," and they cannot gather good wheat crops from poor seed. A good crop next year, at anything like the prices prevailing this year, would put every wheat farmer in Dakota and Minnesota on his feet, and there is no reason whatever to anticipate a recurrence for years to come of the exceptional thermometrical conditions which partially destroyed what promised to be the finest wheat crop ever raised in the Northwest. The late cold, wet spring which put back the growing season from four to six weeks and so retarded the development of the plant that it exposed the wheat kernel when it was in the "milk" or in its period of tenderest susceptibility to the extreme fluctuations of temperature which occur in mid-August—with the unseasonable frost that visited Northern Dakota and a portion of Minnesota on Aug. 17—presents a series of unfavorable circumstances which may not occur again for twenty years to come. Wheat, it is true, is such a fragile crop at best—dependent for its successful growth and ripening on so many delicate conditions of moisture and temperature; it is obliged to run through such a gauntlet of enemies before it is safely harvested—that it is quite time the farmers of the Northern wheat belt ceased to depend upon it as those in the Southern districts of Minnesota and Dakota have already done. They should turn their attention to stock and hogs and the cultivation of the roots and vegetables on which they fatten. But in the meanwhile, before a more diversified system of farming has been developed, they must depend chiefly on wheat for immediate returns, and carefully keep up the standard of superior quality which was originally largely due to the character of the seed and can only be maintained by using the best grades of wheat for seeding purposes.

Drainage.

The lesson of the present year shows the need of drainage in this country, as there is no question but that the blight to wheat is due in a large degree to the wet lands. In the last session of the legislature a bill passed the house providing for an appropriation from the state for drainage purpose, and we have it upon undoubted authority that it was Mr. Chas. Canning's influence in the senate that prevented the passage of the bill there. True it is that he did all he could against the bill—a bill of so much impartance to this country and now there are a few in this district who want to send this man Canning to congress!

Honest and Just.

Some time ago a certain Fifth district farmer wrote to Knute Nelson in regard to the congressional contest and the following reply was received:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.
Washington, Sept 24, 1888.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 17th has just reached me here at Alexandria. I have nothing to say against Mr. Canning as a man or a democrat. But I think there is no excuse or occasion for any republican to oppose Mr. Comstock. I have known him well and intimately since 1875 and have found him always honest, able and reliable. We have no better nor abler man in our district. There is nothing but mere politics in the hue and cry that he is a railroad man. The same cry was made against me when I first ran. But I think no respectable man can now be found who will say I have been the tool of the railroads. On all questions between the public and the railways I have always been on the side of the public, and I feel certain—as certain as I would be of myself—that Mr. Comstock will under all circumstances be on the side of the public, and that no railroad can use him for any unjust or improper purpose. Mr. Comstock is one of those men who are constitutionally and organically honest and just, and a man so constituted is always safe and can always be depended upon, Yours truly, KNUTE NELSON.

Tale of the Selfish Giant.

Every afternoon, as they were coming from school, the children used to go and play in the Giant's garden.

One day the Giant came back. He had been to visit his friend the Cornish ogre, and had stayed with him for seven years. When he arrived he saw the children playing in the garden.

"What are you doing there?" he cried in a very gruff voice, and the children ran away.

"My own garden is my own garden," said the Giant; "anyone can understand that, and I will allow nobody to play in it but myself." So he built a high wall all around it and put up a notice board:

"Trespassers will be prosecuted."

He was a very selfish Giant.

The poor children had nowhere to play. They tried to play on the road, but the road was very dusty and full of hard stones, and they did not like it. Then the spring came, and all over the country there were little blossoms and little birds. Only in the garden of the selfish Giant it was still winter. The birds did not care to sing in it as there were no children, and the trees forgot to blossom. Once a beautiful flower put its head out from the grass, but when it saw the notice-board it was so sorry for the children that it slipped back into the ground again, and went off to sleep. The only people who were pleased were the Snow and the Frost. "Spring has forgotten this garden," they cried, "so we will live here all the year round." The Snow covered up the grass with her great white cloak, and the Frost painted all the trees silver. Then they invited the North Wind to stay with them, and he came. He was wrapped in furs, and he roared all day about the garden, and blew the chimney-tops down.

"I can not understand why the Spring is so late in coming," said the Selfish Giant, as he sat at the window and looked out at his cold white garden: "I hope there will be a change in the weather."

But the Spring never came, nor the Summer. The Autumn gave golden fruit to every garden, but the Giant's garden she gave none. "He is too selfish," she said. So it was always Winter there, and the North Wind, and the Hail, and the Frost, and the Snow danced about through the trees.

One morning the Giant was lying awake in bed when he heard some lovely music. It sounded so sweet to his ear that he thought it must be the King's musicians passing by. It was really only a little linnet singing outside his window, but it was so long since he had heard a bird sing in his garden that it seemed to him to be the most beautiful music in the world. Then the Hail stopped dancing over his head, and the North Wind ceased roaring, and a delicious perfume came to him through the open casemate. "I believe the Spring has come at last," said the Giant; and he jumped out of bed and looked out.

What did he see?

He saw a most wonderful sight. Through a little hole in the wall the children had crept in, and they were sitting in the branches of the trees. In every tree that he could see there was a little child. And the trees were so glad to have the children back again that they had covered themselves with blossoms, and were waving their arms gently above the children's heads. The birds were flying about twittering with delight, and the flowers were looking up through the green grass and laughing. It was a lovely scene, only in one corner it was still winter. It was the farthest corner of the garden, and in it was standing a little boy. He was so small that he could not reach up to the branches of the tree, and he was wandering all round it, crying bitterly. The poor tree was still quite covered with frost and snow, and the North Wind was blowing and roaring above it. "Climb up! little boy," said the Tree, and it bent its branches down as low as it could; but the boy was too tiny.

And the Giant's heart melted as he looked out. "How selfish I have been!" he said; "now I know why the Spring would not come here. I will put that poor little boy on the top of the tree, and then I will knock down the wall, and my garden shall be the children's playground for ever and ever." He was really very sorry for what he had done.

So he crept down stairs and opened the front door quite softly, and went out into the garden. But when the children saw him they were so frightened that they all ran away and the garden became Winter again. Only the little boy did not run, for his eyes were so full of tears that he did not see the Giant coming. And the Giant stole up behind him and took him gently in his hand, and put him up into the tree. And the tree broke at once into blossom, and the birds came and sang on it, and the little boy stretched out his two arms and flung them around the Giant's neck, and kissed him. And the other children, when they saw the Giant was not wicked any longer, came running back, and with them came the spring. "It is your garden now, little children," said the Giant, and he took a great axe and knocked down the wall. And when the people were going to market at 12 o'clock they found the Giant playing with the children in the most beautiful garden they had ever seen.

All day long they played, and in the evening they came to the Giant to bid him good-bye.

"But where is your little companion?" he said; "the boy I put into the tree." The Giant loved him the best because he had kissed him.

"We don't know," answered the children; "he has gone away."

"You must tell him to be sure and come here tomorrow," said the Giant. But the children said they did not know where he lived, and never seen him before; and the Giant felt very sad.

Years went over, and the Giant grew very old and feeble. He could not play about any more; so he sat in a huge armchair and watched the children play at their games, and admired his garden. "I have many beautiful flowers," he said, "but the children are the most beautiful flowers of all."

One winter morning he looked out of his window as he was dressing. He did not hate the winter now, for he knew that it was merely the Spring asleep, and that the flowers were resting.

Suddenly he rubbed his eyes in wonder, and looked and looked. It certainly was a marvelous sight. In the fartherest corner of the garden was a tree quite covered with lovely white blossoms. Its branches were all golden, and silver fruit hung down from them, and underneath it stood the little boy he had loved.

Downstairs ran the Giant in great joy, and out into the garden. He hastened across the grass, and came near to the child. And when he came quite close his face grew red with anger, and he said: "Who hath dared to wound thee?" For on the palms of the child's hands were the prints of two nails, and the prints of two nails were on the little feet.

"Who hath dared to wound thee?" cried the Giant; "tell me, that I may take my big sword and slay him."

"Nay!" answered the child; "but these are the wounds of love."

"Who art thou?" said the Giant, and a strange awe fell on him, and he knelt before the little child.

And the child smiled on the Giant, and said to him; "You let me play once in your garden, to-day you shall come with me to my garden, which is Paradise."

And when the children ran in that afternoon they found the Giant lying dead under the tree, all covered with white blossoms.—Oscar Wilde.

In a Bad Fix.

One hot day recently, says the New York Sun, a young man wearing side light whiskers, and a long, crooked nose, betook himself to the classic sands of Isle de Conie with the sole intention of taking a plunge into the outstretched arms of old Father Ocean. Having deposited a 25-cent piece with the man who is not satisfied with the earth, but wants to own the ocean, he received a bathing suit made of Kentucky jeans. The suit had seen its best days, and was rapidly becoming bottomless and very holey.

The long-nosed young man managed to hold the suit together until he had buried himself in the surf. Then he took a little dive, swam under water for a little distance, and when his head reached the surface once more he found himself surrounded by a bevy of mermaids. He felt something entangling his feet, and reaching down he discovered that—oh, horrors!—that the lower part of his suit had dissolved partnership with the upper part. He was in a pretty fix. Summoning a friend he commissioned him to go after another suit of Kentucky jeans. While waiting for the return of the friend the young man modestly swam out beyond the ropes and came near being drowned.

The friend returned with the new suit and then began a struggle with the waves that has never before been equaled. The young man raised a leg in order to incase it in the new suit. A heavy wave came along and knocked him over. The spectators tittered. The girls blushed and the action was repeated. At last, after an hour of hard work, with the assistance of no less than twelve persons, the young swimmer managed to get into the new suit. The young man was very bashful and concluded he had enough of salt water bathing. Once more he stood upon the classic sands of the island inwardly betting himself 50 cents that he'd never be caught again in a suit of Coney Island Kentucky jeans.

A Prestidigitateur's Little Trick.

From the New York Mail and Express.

There are many men whose names occupy space upon the list of social outcasts commonly called "tramps," who, had it not been for rum and a general antipathy to hard work, might have made their mark in this cold and cruel world. Such a one a few days since dropped into a liquor store near the New York entrance of the Brooklyn bridge. The place was crowded. This man inquired if the loungers would like to witness a nice little piece of legerdemain. The landlord was appealed to first, and, giving his consent, the man continued. He placed three hats on the table and then requested the waiter to bring him three pieces of bread. He then said he could not proceed until he got three pices of cheese. These were also produced, whereupon the magician proceeded to place one piece of bread and one piece of cheese in each hat. After an impressive incantation he stated that he would eat the three pieces of bread and cheese, and then bring them all under one hat. When he had consumed two pieces he declared he could not proceed unless he had a drink. A large foaming glass of lager of the schooner type was furnished him, and the other piece soon disappeared. "Now, gentlemen, which hat must I bring it under?" A hat was pointed out, and the fellow quickly placed it on his head and left the store in a hurry, before his astonished auditors realized what a heap of information they had derived from the little seance.

An irate woman entered a dry goods store the other day and accosted one of the clerks: "I've come to find out what you mean by charging me a dollar Saturday night for that table spread and selling Mrs. Ferguson one just like it on Monday for 60 cents. Didn't you say it was my last chance to get one so cheap?" "You mistook me, madam," responded the ready clerk; "I said it was your last chance to get one for a dollar. And it was, for we put them down to 60 cents Monday morning." —Philadelphia Call.

SHE RULED THE ROOST.

A Feeble Rebellion Subdued in Short Order.

Jim Akers was a small, tow-headed, knock-kneed man, with irregular teeth, which made his mouth look like a steel trap twisted out of plumb. His wife was a large, raw-boned woman, fully a head taller and fifty-pounds heavier than Jim. She had the temper of a half-famished wildcat, and no darky just "gettin' religion" was ever half so much afraid of the devil as Jim was of her. He had reason to be. When she was fairly on the warpath she breathed chain lightning and flung cyclones from the tip of her tongue. Nor did she content herself with words only, however bitter and furious. She very often brushed the poor little wretch with a hickory until he felt as if he had borrowed his back of a saint fresh from the gridiron.

One bright, golden, delicious afternoon in the latter part of May, Jim left the path where he had been hard at work all day and "snuck een" to his cabin by the back way. He proceeded hastily to doff his every-day clothes and don his Sunday garments, casting furtive glances all the while at the black-browed, terrible dame sitting in the front doorway knitting. With trembling haste he completed his preparations, and was shambling out again, when his wife, previously apparently obvious of his presence, shot a fierce glance at him which made him jump almost out of his shoes and brought the perspiration out from every pore.

"Whar' you boun fur?" she asked.

"I 'lowed I wuz gwine down to the fishfry far a hour or two. Them boys is a hevin'—

"Well, you 'lowed wrong. You jest hist off them cloze, and go back inter that patch and finish hoein' them pertators. "Don't you distress yerself 'bout no fish-fries."

"But I done tole the boys I wuz gwine to be ther."

"Well, you tole 'em a lie."

"But Ed. Sykes and Hank Evans is waitin' fur me now at the cross-roads, and I'd ruther not disappoint 'em."

"Well, I'd ruther you would. Shut up, now, and do ez you're told."

Jim gasped and quaked with fear; but, for the first time in many years, he thoroughly realized the tyranny under which he was crushed. His heart was set on going to the fish fry, and in that feeble, fluttering little organ a faint shadow, a dim eidolon of spirit became suddenly aroused. He hesitated a moment, ventured even to return the gaze of those glowing, wrathful eyes, and then started saying:

"Well, I'm a gwine."

"Great Jehosaphat! Houp-la!

She swooped on him like an owl on a mouse. The air was filled and darkened with dust and sandy hair and agonizing shrieks.

Ed Sykes and Hank Evans, at the "cross-roads," became convinced that Jim's cabin had caught fire and that he was perishing in the flames. They rushed in all haste to his assistance, but as they neared the spot the clatter subsided, and they heard a stern, feminine voice, which caused them to halt and keep out of sight, say:

"Now I reckon you'll do as yer tole."

Then they recognized Jim's piping voice, protesting between convulsive sobs:

"I'd sorter gin up gwine befo' you spoke."—Alta Californian.

His Resignation as a Subscriber.

Every newspaper receives odd communications at times. For instance, says the Rondout Freeman, it is stated that a country editor of a weekly was made to writhe in keenest humilliation of spirit on receipt of the following scathing criticism on the conduct of his paper, by a subscriber:

A Gay and Bigamous Skeleton.

From the Chicago Times.

There was a skeleton in the family closet of Isacc W. Sprague, the famous living skeleton of the museums, who died recently. He was financially prosperous unfortunate, for his salary ranged between $50 and $100 a week for many years during which he was an exhibit, and, as he spent money slowly, he leaves an estate estimated at fully $100,000. From that fact arises the scandal. With him at the time of his death was a woman who passed as his wife, and who claims the fortune as such. She says that she was regularly married to the atrophied human curiosity two years ago in Cleveland, and that thereafter she was his devoted companion and nurse. She had been a minor actress in dime museums and was a good-looking girl of twenty. She declares that she did not know of Sprague having a prior wife, and that he represented in his courtship that he was a bachelor. But an undoubted first wife now comes forward. She shows a marriage certificate to prove that she was married to the gay skeleton in 1868 at Rockland, Mass., where she bore him three children. He deserted her four years ago and she does not know of his having obtained a divorce. The money is understood to be in savings banks here, and there will be a contest for it.

AN HEROIC SOLDIER DUDE.

How Brave "Little Dandy" Died for His Flag.

N. Y. Journal.

"Little Dandy" the boys called him. He joined our company at Vicksburg just before the siege, and none of us felt enough interest in him to make any inquiries, says the Atlanta Constitution. His extreme youth—he was about sixteen—would have excited our sympathy under other circumstances, but the warworn veterans in the trenches had no use for the curled darlings of the parlor, and "Little Dandy's" appearance was against him.

The lad wore the gray uniform of a private, but it was of the very finest material, finer than anything worn by our Generals. His buttons had an unsoldierly glitter. He sported white handkerchiefs, carried a pocket mirror, and every morning he combed and curled his golden locks until they looked like a girl's tresses.

"Hello, Little Dandy!" yelled the soldiers whenever the young fellow passed them.

To the rough salutation he always responded with a bow and a smile, but his soft ways did not win favor. When we met him in town we passed him by without notice, and in camp we let him alone. Little Dandy was proud after a fashion, too proud to notice the many slights heaped upon him. He went through the routine duties without complaint, but nothing could induce him to abandon his pocket mirror and his fancy toilets.

The siege was well under way, and we were no better acquainted with Little Dandy than at first. He shared our meals of mouldy corn bread and mule meat without a murmur, and it must be admitted that this somewhat raised him in our estimation. But we still had to learn what a true heart beat behind those glittering buttons.

An angle of the enemy's works was dangerously close to our entrenchments, and we had to keep our heads well sheltered. When we raised a hat on the muzzle of a musket it was invariably riddled with bullets. One morning we found our men being picked up by an unseen sharpshooter at the rate of five or six an hour. This astonished us, because we were all keeping under cover, and the men who were killed all occupied well-protected positions.

Where was the sharpshooter? This was the uppermost question in every mind. We were not long in satisfying ourselves on this point. Just outside the angle of the Federal works stood a giant oak, whose leafy top afforded an admirable covert for a rifleman. A vigilant scrutiny convinced us that the man who was doing such deadly work in our ranks was concealed in this tree. To reach it he must have made his way there during the night and he would have to remain there all day.

But we could not stand it even one day. His aim was so unerring that every time his rifle cracked a Confederate bit the dust. We tried a rattling discharge of musketry, but a moment later the reports of the rifle rang out and another of our comrades fell.

It was evident that from our position it was almost impossible to hit the Federal rifleman. If we succeeded in bringing him down it would be by some lucky random shot. Possibly a man outside the works would be able to draw a bead on our wary foeman, but he would be under the guns of the enemy, and there would be a thousand chances against him.

"I'll kill him or die!" cried a shrill voice.

"Good God! It's little dandy!" shouted a dozen men.

At the risk of our lives we peeped over our breastworks.

Little Dandy had already made his way to the open space between the works, and was edging around the right of the tree. The Federals saw what he was up to, and fired a broadside. When the smoke cleared away and they saw the boy, with a flushed face and streaming hair, aiming his gun at the top of the old oak, there was a tremendous cheer. It rolled along both lines, the hoarse Federal shout mingled with the wild "rebel yell."

Bang!

A man in blue came tumbling and crashing through the tree and struck the ground with a dull thud.

It was the sharpshooter!

Another cheer rent the air, but this time it came from the Confederates alone. A sheet of flame blazed along the Federal works, but when the smoke lifted we saw Little Dandy coming full till in that direction with a smile on his face.

"Three cheers for Little Dandy!" leaped from hundreds of throats, as he vaulted over the breastworks, and we rushed upon him to hug him in our frenzy of admiration and joy. But Little Dandy sank down on a heap of loose dirt, and then we saw the crimson stain on his breast.

"I kept my promise," he panted. And then as our colonel took his hand the little chap looked into his face and said:

"I'm afraid I've made a poor soldier. Sometimes I've bothered you, I know. But I always wanted to help you. Please remember that I was not very strong, and—and, I did the best I could."

His head fell over. Poor Little Dandy was dead!

A Good Description.

From the Boston Courier.

A lady who has honored the Editor by chatting with him for an hour told him among other things some anecdotes of the noble red men who in the days of her grandmother still lingered, a forlorn and broken remnant, in the upper valleys of the Kennebec river. The feature of civilization to which these half tamed savages seem to have taken most kindly was begging, and numberless were the requests which they proffered, in wheedling tone and with suppliant manner, to the white brothers who dwell in undisputed possession of the land once owned by the dusky ancestors of the petitioners.

"One of the things which they begged for worst," the lady said, "was for grandfather's fruit. Especially did one old Indian plead: 'Eenemost water no quite water; eenemost pumpkin, no quite pumpkin; berry much me want him.'"

"But what did he mean?" the Editor asked stupidly.

The lady laughed.

"If you were a darky," she answered, "you would soon guess."

And then the hearer divined that the noble savage hankered for watermelon.

BUT ONE WORD.

"Speak but one word," he cried,
And madly clasped her hand;
"Speak but one word, my love,
And I shall understand.

"I ask no sweet caress
Of lovers when they part;
I am content to wait;
Speak but one word, dear heart.

"Mine is a trusting soul,
That rests its faith on thee;
It asks no vow of love,
Speak but one word to me.

"Speak! speak!" he cried, "and still
My heart's wild pit-a-pats—"
She looked into his eyes
And softly whispered, "Rats!"

A WYOMING WEDDING.

The New Way Out West of Settling Old Wrongs.

From the Argonaut.

Jim Mason dismounted at Burton's ranch, turned his pony into the corral and strode heavily into the bunkroom, One of the riders of Burton's outfit said, "How!" and Jim gave him the same terse greeting.

"What's new over Crazy Creek way?" asked Long Pete.

"Nuthin' much. Is the old man here! Mat wants him to send over a couple o' you bucks to help swim them Northern cattle 'cross the river. We're short-handed."

"Better see him after supper. Got his two gal daughters out here now, and they're feedin in the new shanty. Them two dude cowpunchers eats with 'em, an' they take a sight o'time."

"I don't hold with women and dudes on a cow ranch much," said Jim.

"Who does?" ejaculated Hairy Mike. "I'm goin' to quit Burton. With college chaps comin' out here and swellin' roun,' it ain't no place for a common waddy. I run cows in this country when the Injuns was runnin us, an' I got no use fer fancy business. One o' the dudes he stacked up' longside o' me on circle t'other day, an he says, 'Fine mornin,' Mike!' I says, 'Yes, it ain't; an' you'd better not monkey 'roun' me with yer cheap talk. I'm a sixshooter man from way back, I am; I eat snakes, an' I'm a wolf—you hear me howl?' That's how I throwed it into smarty."

"The dames is pretty slick dames," said Pete; "ole Burton reckons to marry the plug-tooth dude to one uv 'em. Seems his ole man owns a railroad East somewheres."

"Maybe so. Plug-tooth 'ull fool him up a trip," growled Mike. "He's a no 'count sort. Reckon his people sent him out here to keep whisky out uv him. Durn him—keepin' some good man out uv a job."

"Kin he ride?" asked Jim.

"Ride nuthin'. Burton give him a string o' plumb gentle horses. Sets 'm soldier-fashion."

"Well," said Pete, "the dames think he's nicer'n a white faced yearlin'. He's sure gettin' in his fine work with the pretty one—Helen, or whatever she calls herself. There,s slush a hollerin. Well, we kin rustle grub if we don't eat with the dudes."

After supper Jim went over to the gaudily painted house and discharged his mission.

"Did you see the gals?" asked Mike when he returned to the riders cabin.

"Got a kind o' squint at em. Wich one is it has the sort o' open mouth—short-liped like? She's as slick-lookin'as any o' them actresses't come to Cheyenne.'

"Helen, that is .She's the won the jay is after. What is it he answers to? Scranto, ain't it, shorty?"

A man rather over six feet in height looking up from the raw hide rope he is braiding and rolls a cigarette before he replies.

"Sounds somethin' like that. Goin' back in the mornin', Jim?"

"Ruther. We gathered a raft o'cattle over there—rode all our horses poor. I ain't had my boots off three nights a week. Pound my ear tonight, though, pretty solid."

"You may's well crawl into my dog's nest," said Shorty. I've got a pretty fat bed, I have. That fellow the freighters hung give me three pair o' daisy blankets. I'll roll her out soon's I get this strand drawed. Outside's best, I reckon."

"You bet you. I don't hanker after sleepin' in-doors—not without it snows. That's why the city chaps look so rocky—don't let the wind blow their whiskers nights."

"Wonder who'll git to go over to the river with you," said Mike. "Camped down by the bend?"

"Yes."

"Is the company givin' pretty good chuck this year?"

"Way up. Mac makes 'em. There ain't any more dried apples on the wag'n, but ole Greaser Smith is cookin' fer us, an' his bread is the best round-up bakin' out. I hear them Horseshoe Y 3 men is gettin' condensed milk. Now I call that civilizin' too much. Man can't drink straight coffee ought to quit singin' to the cows."

When the men were all in bed, and Shorty had thrown a boot at the candle stuck on the doorsill, Hairy Mike's raucous snore gave the signal for silence andrest.

At daylight next morning Jim Mason and two of the Burton riders started for the camp on the North Platte River. A few miles on the way Jim discovered that he had left his cuert at Burton's and told the other men that he would lope back for it and overtake them on the divide Reaching the ranch he searched the bunk-room for the cuert, and then went down to the barn to see if it lay where he had left his saddle over night.

Crossing the corral toward the barn door he was arrested by the sound of a woman's voice within the building. Jim was not a carpet-knight, and would have left his cuert more willingly than faced one of Burton's daughters. As he stood hesitating he heard a little cry of pain, and then a man's voice said sharply: "Don't be a fool, Nelly." It was not old Burton who spoke; Jim was sure of that—it must be one of the "dudes"—and he listened. If anyone was talking roughly to one of those girls——

"But you promised, Arthur; you promised!"

"Precisely. And I probably told you that you were an angel. Men will use figures of speech under certain circumstances. Be sensible, Nelly. I believe this is all nonsense; but if you want to make a run for it I'll pay your fare east and see that you're comfortable. But as for marrying you, I can't do it—not yet, at any rate. If you see fit to make a scandal you'll be biting your nose off to spite your face, that's all. I'd be in a mess certainly—but where would you be?"

"And if I went east?"

"If you let me manage my own way you'll be Mrs. Scranton a year from now and nobody'll know the difference. What's the use of all this crying?"

"Oh, Arthur—I am so wretched——"

Jim Mason left the corral, and spurred after the men. He could not face the poor girl, and he dreaded making more trouble for her. But all the way to the mouth of Crazy Creek he was wondering what he could do.

* * * * * * * *

"Say, Mac," said Jim Mason to the Hall Circle Cross foreman that night, "I got to go to town. Wouldn't leave when you're so rushed on'y can't help it. I kin come out in a couple o' days."

Mac poked his pipe thoughtfully. "Well, be as quick as you kin. If the river don't go down it's going to be a job swimming cows. Take one o'them extry horses—your string is kind o, worked down. If you see any men I want two'r three—no tenderfeet."

Next night Jim was in Cheyenne. He went to the house of the Crazy Creek Cattle Company's general manager and said: "Mr. Gray I want to git a hundred dollars right off."

"Why' Jim' this is a new trick for you, coming to town in the middle of work, and wanting to play faro."

"I had to come in, Mr. Gray—and it ain't faro I want it for.

"I haven't got that much but I'll see if my wife has. Can't you wait till the office is open in the morning?"

"I'd ruther not; but I can borrow it round town if you ain't got it."

Mr. Gray got the money, and told Jim to sign for it at the company's office the next day.

"All right—an' you know I asked you to look after my back wages fur me; there's about six hundred. I'd like that in the mornin'."

"Well go slow with it Jim. Mac is talking of going back East after this season, and we shall want you to take his place."

"I reckon I know the brands as well as most of 'em. But Mac is a natural born cow-man. That rheumatiz is a pesky thing ain't it. A man can't last no longer than a snowball in hell, ridin with that in him."

"Cattle looking well?"

"Fairish. Range is gettin' pretty crowded. Well, so long."

"Good-night, Jim."

From there he went down to Wes Moyer's. The proprietor of the Diamond Palace Saloon was watching a monte game, but assented to Jim's proposition to "have a bottle o' wine."

Over the champagne Jim said: "Look here, Wes, I want a couple o' men to go out to Mac. Is there any good hands here?"

"Yes; there's Tex—he's broke already—and Heifer Jack; we'll about get his wages cleaned up to-night. He's playin' five-dollar chips."

"All right. Now I want you to put me into a little racket, Wes, on the quiet. I want to run up agin' a busted preacher—a preacher that wants stuff pretty bad. Savvy?"

"I don't worry with that brand much. But most o' them bucks is pretty well fixed, Jim. There's that Noyes chap, though, him as the Methodists fired out o' Denver—he's up to Dyer's Hotel, an' if he's busted he's sober. Round him up, anyway."

"All right; I will. So long."

"See you agin 'fore you hit the breeze?"

"I reckon."

"So long."

The Rev. Mr. Noyes proved to be reasonably sober, and accepted the stranger's invitation to drink with alacrity.

"You're a preacher, ain't you?" said Jim.

"I have that honor. I am glad to look like it. Malicious men have hinted that my presence was not too clerical. Mine, sir, has been a chequered career—monk, spiritualist, nigger minstrel and canine surgeon"——

"Not interruptin'—do you want a couple of twenties?" asked Jim, displaying the coins in question with ingenious sagacity.

The Rev. Mr. Noyes abruptly deposited his tumbler on the bar, and answered, "I should smile!"

"Kin I dicker with you, straight?"

"First off, preacher, my name's Jim Mason, Half Circle Cross outfit. I don't make no six-shooter plays, and I don't set up to be no bad man from the Meteetsi country, but this is money I'm going to talk to you, an' if you ring in any funny business you'll cough through your ribs."

"Go ahead."

"Will you stop budgin' for two or three days, and take a trip out Fort Laramie way with me? It's $10 a day, and $10 extry for the wear o' your tools, Bible and sich."

"Go ahead."

"My sister an' her feller wants to git married. You're to meet'em empty ranch an'hitch em."

"Shake."

"Only you see this feller he has a grudge agin' preachers. I reckon one of 'em sinched him playin' monte or somethin', an' I might have to hold him down, like, while you do the maryin', so he can't crawl your hump."

"I think we understand each other, Mr. Mason."

"All right. I am going to sleep with you to-night so's to know you ain,t a drinkin', an', we want to start about half-past 9—I got to do a little somethin' here first."

"Don't you want to buy a wedding ring?"

"Yes, I reckon I do!"

"Sell you the ticket for one cheap. Uncle Jake's got it, down by the railroad."

"Fix that in the mornin'. Come to bed now. I ain't slep' in sheets fer a tarnation time. I'll git you a stiddy horse to ride out, preacher."

* * * * * * * *

When the Rev. Mr. Noyes dismounted at Mountain Lion ranch next day he was weary and bruised, but cheerful. "Quiet sort of place, this!" he remarked. "You mightn't think it, Mr. Mason, but I was once a hermit. I set up a cell about three miles out of San Francisco, and people used to drive out there with offerings. In flush times, that was, and I've had as many as four boxes of cigars brought to me in one day."

"You wouldn't drive much uv a trade here," said Jim, grimly. "You see this cabin's on'y used when the outfit gits 'round here on the calf gather, and wants the corrals to brand in. Used to keep a ranchman here to hinder fellers from burnin' the corrals for firin', but it's so out o' the way they don't do it now. I got the hotel folks to put up ten lunches in this sack—one uv 'em is fur the gal, but you kin tackle the balance. I'll git a fire in the stove fur you, an' then I got to light out again. You jus' eat an' pound yer ear till I stir you up agin to-mor'. Ef anybody comes along tell 'em you got smallpox an' run 'em off. Reckon you won't be bothered. Give me that flask out o'. your coat fust—'d yer think I wasn't onto it? Well, ther ain't 'nough there to git tight on; I guess. So long, preacher."

At midnight Jim reached Burton's ranch, turned his tired and hungry pony into the pasture and picked his way into the bunkroom through the group of beds about the door. Hairy Mike, who was sleeping by the stove, rolled over and saluted him with: "You back again? Stampede over there.

"Stampede nuthin'. Where's them waddies' beds that went over with me?"

"In the corner where them bridles is hagin':" and Mike went to sleep again, while Jim unstrapped and rolled out a bed.

In the morning he waited about the corral until he saw Scranton, and then said: "Say, Plugtooth, was it you was wanting ter buy thet black horse o' French Charley's—the one as he broke ter leap fences?"

"Yes."

"Well, ef you're kind o' slick about it you kin git him fer fifty. French owes me some dust an' I got to git it. He's over ter Mountain Lion with the horse now; if you kin, come right over an' I'll git him to dicker. On'y he don't want none o' this Burton gang to know nothin' about it till the horse is sold. He owes the oleman some stuff, I b'lieve."

Scranton's eyes glistened—the black horse was worth a hundred; and he hastily saddled a pony. They rode over to Mountain Lion together, Jim's horse beginning to need the spur towards the end of the journey. Entering the corral they dismounted, and as Scranton was about to pull the knot out of his ladigo Jim Mason tossed the loop of his riata over the "Dudes" shoulders, drawing it up so that Scranton's arms were pinioned at his sides.

"Quit your fooling!" said Scranton, surlily.

"It's your fooling" I calkilate to stop, Plugtooth," replied Jim, as he drew Scranton's pistol from his belt. Then he bound the raw-hide rope round his hand, close up to the houdoo, and led his captive into the loghouse.

"Got some comp'ny for ye, preacher."

"Delighted!" said the Rev. Mr. Noyes. "As the locum tenens of the diocesan of Mountain Lion, I welcome you to its cloisters, my young friend."

"Are you one of the gang?" snarled Scranton. "So you've turned road agent, Jim Mason. Take the fifty and let me go—you're new at the business."

Jim plucked open the stove door with his spurred heal and thoughtfully spat in the fire. "Violent language, my son!" exclaimed Noyes. "If you are sincerely curious as to the purpose of my presence here, I don't mind telling you that I am here to solemnize—a funeral, and that you are about the size of corpse required."

Jim looked up sharply, whistled a line of "Never Take the Horseshoe from the Door" opened the stove door with the orher heal, pursed up his mouth tentatively, hesitated, kicked the door in place again, and said:

"Ez to the fifty, I'll take it when I want it, Plugtooth. Ez to my havin' turned road agent, I ain't so sure what I hev turned."

"Are you both crazy!"

"Oh, no, Plugtooth; we ain't' been eating no loco. Look here, you're goin' to be left alone here with this gen'l'man, an' you're goin' to be tied up, which he ain't. Now, Plugtooth, I got a notion he's the sort o' ornery chap thet if you sass him he will knock the stuffin' out o' you—so long ez yer tied up. An' if I was you, I'd be kinder perlite, I would."

Scranton swore savagely, and the Rev. Mr. Noyes expressed his reprobation of the practice of profanity.

"No use worryin' him, preacher," said Jim. "Now, I'm goin' to tie him down on thet bench, an' then I've got to quit you one while. Here's his pop, preacher, an' if he wiggles too much chuck a hunk o' wood at him, but don't shoot ef you can help it. And kin talk to him about anythin' not too excitin'. Savvy?"

"Perfectly."

"An water him ef he gets dry."

When Scranton had been carefully secured Jim called Noyes to one side, and said:

"You don't want to try and square yourself with the dude preacher. Never change sides in the middle uv a fight. Ef you do I'll follow you plumb to hell but what I'll git you!"

"I quite believe it—you needn't worry about that."

"I don't worry much."

"When will you be back with the lady?"

"To-mor,' I reckon. Don't say nothin' 'bout her to him. Jest kinder amuse him like; lies an' sich. So long, preacher."

Jim saddled the hired horse and rode over to within two or three miles of Burton's, and then took the bridle off, hitched the macarte on his wrist, and wrapping himself in his oilskin "slicker" slept soundly through the night, while the horse cropped the grass within the scope of his tether. In an hour after sunrise he rode down to the ranch. The men were all out on the range, and after getting a cup of coffee from the cook, Jim awaited developments. By and by Helen Burton went down to the corral and he followed her. She said good-morning, absently enough, and Jim's heart failed him a little. But he pulled himself together.

"Miss Helen, do you know that Scranton?"

"Yes—yes."

"Well, he's over ter Mountain Lion, an' he wants ter know ef yer wouldn't like to ride over there with me?"

"Is he ill? Is——"

"Not zac'ly but he's got a feller from town over there. I reckon he wants you to—well, I ain't sure, but seems to me he's a preacher! Anywise, he wants you to come and not to say nothin'. Will I catch up that little blue o' yourn and clap your hull onto him?"

"Thank you, yes. Oh, it's a long way over. Can I get back—"

"Oh, that'll be all right."

Helen Burton's clever little blue pony gave the hired horse a stiff pull, and early in the afternoon they rode into the corral at Mountain Lion.

"Will you jist hold on here a minit?" said Jim, and entered the house, where he released Scranton.

"Now, Plugtooth, there's a dame comin' in here and the preacher is going to marry you. An' I'm goin' to look on through the winder. Ef yer make a kick or don't behave pretty to that dame you'll get them ears o' yourn reamed out with a forty-five, Savvy? I mean it, too, you little scoundrel. Git your fixin's ready, preacher, and tie 'em solid and quick."

When Jim brought Helen into the cabin she ran toward Scranton and was about to speak to him when the Rev. Mr. Noyes interposed.

"Pardon me, my dear young lady, but for the moment we will consider this rude hut a place of worship. Here is the ring, Mr. Scranton."

In five minutes the cermony was finished. The final injunctions which Mr. Noyes so unctiously delivered seemed to exasperate Scranton beyond all patience, and, turning to his bride, he said:

"I hope you're satisfied. If I don't ——" Jim Mason's hand dropped on his shoulder.

"Excuse me, Mis' Scranton, but I want to speak to this gen'leman outside. Preacher, you an' the lady wait here."

He led Scranton to the side of the creek, where a few box-elders made a feeble effort to shade its cattle-trodden banks.

Jim returned Scranton's pistol, saying: "Now I'll trouble you for that fifty for the preacher."

Scranton seized the weapon, a new self-cocking revolver, and fired almost in Jim's face. He was not successful, however, in his revenge, his rage was uncontrollable, and his aim bad.

Jim's reply was prompt. "I didn't think you'd try it," he said, and as Scranton was about to fire again Jim shot him through the head.

Helen, hearing the shots, tried to force her way out of the door, and had almost pushed by Noyes, when Jim entered, his face flecked with whitish clots, and checked her.

"Ther's nuthin' thar now. You'd better marry me, I reckon, Widder Scranton."

Helen stood in the doorway, white and dazed, while Noyes, in compliance with a look from Jim, married them.

"Here's your money, preacher; git back to town."

As Noyes left the cabin Helen fell heavily on the floor. Jim wet his hand in the bucket and dabbled the water awkwardly on her head. When she recovered he led her to the corral, and lifted her into her saddle.

"Now, Miss Helen, you ride to Pine Bluffs. You know the trail. There,s money 'nough in this wad to take you East; and then you write to Jim Mason, Crazy Creek Cattle Company, and lemme know wher you are, so you'll git more. I'll see your ole man tonight an' make it all right with him. When you want a divorce, you git it. So long, Miss Helen."

H. R. HAXTON.

An Eccentric Western Character.

Henry Clay Dean, who died at his home in Putnam county, Missouri, was probably one of the most eccentric characters in the West. A few years ago, when he erected a new dwelling, most of the house was built in Missouri and the rest of it in Iowa; but as Missouri had the largest part, he claimed that state at his home. For a number of years he had been a delegate to the Democratic national conventions either for Missouri or Iowa. He never failed to attract attention in these bodies by his eccentric ways. A writer in the New York Star says:

He claimed to be a farmer, although he also practiced law, but, above all things, he was a student. He was considered an eminent scholar in his part of the country, and had a very fine library of rare works. He probably had the bitterest tongue of any man in the West, and he never was so happy as when abusing some one or some thing. Probably his most marked feature was his dirty habits. It is an actual fact that he would go at least six months without changing his shirt. and he was as frequently referred to as "dirty shirt" Dean as by his proper name. He had a very strong face, full of character and determination, and with a certain charm of manner, so that his habits did not bury his attractiveness. He was in some respects a miser. He would stay in one of these little towns at the leading hotel, and always manage not to pay any board. He would insist to the landlord that he was an attraction to the house, and therefore, should not be expected to pay anything. I remember meeting him once in Ottumwa, Iowa. Everybody there knew him and considered him one of the strongest men in debate they had ever heard. It was very difficult then to get him into a discussion, and if he did not feel called upon to speak no amount of persuasion could induce him.

Pouring Tea a Fine Art Now.

Washington Special to St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

The tea table is as much a fixture and permanency in society here as in home life in England, and young girls are priding themselves far more on their accomplishments in making tea and managing the tea table than on any little musical ability they must have. One young woman, who can keep the water always boiling and a fresh pot of tea on hand, has what one might call permanent engagements for the season, and as soon as she came to the city was seized upon by two hostesses, who each claimed one afternoon every week. In consequence she was spoken of to me the other day as Miss T——. When I remarked that I had never known her initial letter before my friend said: "I call her Miss Tea because she is always pouring tea somewhere." Miss Tillie Frelinghuysen was such an adept in the art and so often ensconced behind a tea table in her own house that Mr. George Bancroft offered to design her a coat-of-arms with two teapots rampant for her crest.

Here is a story said to be a true one. At any rate it is good enough to be true: It was at Liverpool docks. A party of American tourists were about to take the steamer for home. As they sailed along the gangway to the tender's deck one of the three paused in the centre, and stretching out his encumbered hands, dramatically addressed the surrounding scenery. "If there is," he hoarsely exclaimed, "one blarsted Britisher on this confounded island that I haven't given a shilling to, let him come forward and get it. It's his last chance!" Then he stalked on board with an air of great relief.

DAKOTA SIFTINGS.

Farmers in the vicinity of Huron are saving their cornstalks by cutting and shocking before injury by frost.

Pringle Bros.' store at Grand Forks, was burgalized and upwards of $200 worth of revolvers were taken.

There are now ten candidates for the office of sheriff in Sully county and a few more townships to hear from.

A number of Indians from Pine Ridge agency amused the people of Rapid City by giving a war dance on the street in that city.

The shooting scrape which occurred in Lookout camp, near Rapid City, has had the effect of driving out the only saloon in the camp.

The office of the Northern Pacific passenger depot was burglarized at Grand Forks, and the contents of the safe stolen, amounting to over $100.

A farmer near Rapid City boasts of a peach tree four feet high which has attained its entire growth since last spring, when the stone was planted.

Twelve stacks of wheat belonging to J. J. Nierling, living near Jamestown, burned. The fire is thought to have caught from a spark from a hired man,s pipe.

Victor Steiner, who shot and killed William Stevenson on a Northern Pacific train at Bismarck six weeks ago was sentenced to ten years in the penitentiary.

Edward Creeley was shot and killed at Winiston by L. Martin. The deceased was originally from Florissant, St. Louis county, Mo., where he has relatives. The difficulty originated over cards.

John Sweeney, a resident of St. Paul, was shot in the left leg just below the hip at a house of ill-fame at Dickinson, and may die, as the wound is very serious. He refuses to have the leg amputated until he reaches St. Paul.

Victor Steiner, who shot a fellow passenger as the train was running into Bismarck, pleaded guilty to slaughter and closed his case. He was drunk when he did the shooting and thought he was committing a smart prank.

The Howard Advance says a couple has been found in the western part of the county who are willing to be married on the last day of the fair. The $100 worth of presents accounts for the consent, doubtless.

Supt. Gage, of the Northern Pacific Elevator company, reported that the aggregate wheat receipts in the territory are considerably larger than expected. He estimates the yield in Cass county at six bushels per acre.

A man named Harrison, and claiming to be a cattle buyer, hired a team from Porter & Stewart of Volga, and has not been seen or heard from since and the supposition is that he has decamped with the horses. The Sheriff is on his trail.

The prairie fires are doing some work. One of them destroyed 1,700 bushels of grain for Joseph Dietrich, and 600 bushels for Dr. Fraser near Bismarck. They are roaming in every direction, and a great deal of No. 1 hard will go up in smoke if there is not more precaution.

The Grand Forks fair was a magnificent success. Ten thousand visitors, by actual count, were on the grounds on the last day. The territorial fair this year is a success, not alone pecuniarily, but for the gigantic impulse it has given to fine stock breeding among our farmers.

The affairs of the Insurance Company of Dakota promise to come to the surface through the district court sooner than expected. J. H. Westover, late president of the defunct company, applied to Judge Carland for an order restraining Receiver A. M. Crosby from acting as receiver pending proceeding and requiring him to show cause why a new receiver should not be appointed.

On application of Sheriff Swan of Grand Forks county Judge McConnell granted an order for the removal of three of the worst prisoners from the Grand Forks jail to the Cass county jail for safe keeping. The jail there is so crowded it was thought unsafe, especially since the recent assault on the sheriff and the attempt of prisoners to escape, to keep them any longer. The prisoners are John Jones and James Flemming, who are awaiting trial for grand larceny, and Samuel Brown, charged with attempting arson.

Something About Stanley.

In no direction has growing internationalism shown itself more pleasantly and generously than in the aid given to explorers. The expedition of Austrians commanded by Carl Vondobnir to search for Stanley recalls the expeditions fo Americans that sought so patiently for Sir John Franklin, and the co-operation of England in searching for our own lost men, not to forget the efforts of Russia in the same line and of Norway. The probabilities now look unfavorable for Stanley. The temperament of the man is combative, quite the opposite of Livingstone; and he is far more likely to have undertaken to fight a passage than to win the natives to allow a peaceable advance. The drift over all Northern and Central Africa is westward; and with it comes a more warlike spirit. Stanley's route was sure to be contested. His loss, however, if it occur, will be sure to lead to expeditions that will open that portion of the Dark Continent to whites.

Log Cabin Success.

What ails the young men?

Robert Garrett's father left him a fortune of twenty millions. He was from childhood reared in luxury; he received a splendid education with an especial training into a thorough knowledge of railroad management and was expected to succeed his father as a railroad king.

Within three years after the responsibilities which his father's death threw upon him were assumed, he is reported a broken down man, with mind and health permanently shattered.

George Law is another young man left with millions of money, who is reported among the "wrecks." His father, bred a stone mason, was of gigantic size and strength, with commensurate brain power, so he became a great contractor, then a railroad king and left half a dozen millions for his son to dissipate. The young man is a success as a dissipator.

The founders of both of these great estates were born in the most humble walks of life, grew strong, mentally and physically, by simple living and honest labor and developed into financial giants. Their sons were reared in the lap of luxury and developed into intellectual pigmies.

The great men of our country have not, as a rule, come from the elegant mansions of the cities, but from the Log Cabins of the rural districts. Simple ways of living, freedom from dissipation and enervating pleasures, simple remedies for disease, effective and which leave no poison in the system, develop brawny brainy men, who compel the world to recognize their strength and power.

The wholesome, old-fashioned Log Cabin remedies are the safest and surest for family use. Our grandmothers knew how to prepare the teas and syrups of roots, herbs and balsams which drive disease out of the system by natural methods and leave no after ill effects. The most potent of these old-time remedies were, after long and searching investigation, secured by H. H. Warner of safe cure fame, and are now put out for the "healing of the nations" in the Warner's Log Cabin remedies.

Regulate the regulator with Warner's Log Cabin sarsaparilla and with pure blood giving health, strength, mental and bodily vigor, you may hope to cope successfully with the most gigantic financial problems of the age, without wrecking health and manhood.

The Coolest Man in Michigan.

From the Chicago Herald.

This is G. W. Adams, proprietor of a hotel at Lake Cora. One day Adams drove into the neighboring village with a spirited horse and alighted at the general store. A few moments later an excited countryman dashed into the place and breathlessly informed Adams that his nag had run away. Adams lighted a cigar and asked in which direction his horse had gone. He was informed that he had started north. Then he calmly took out his watch, consulted it, appeared to calculate a moment, and then said: "Well, he will run four miles and then stop, that will bring him to Stephens' dam." After he had ordered what he wanted and directed it put up, the cool hotel man borrowed another horse and started after his own rig. He found it just where he expected it would be, drove the horse back, loaded up his wagon and started for home.

"Nasal Voices, Catarrh and False Teeth."

A prominent English woman says the American women all have high, shrill, nasal voices and false teeth.

Americans don't like the constant twitting they get about this nasal twang, and yet it is a fact caused by our dry stimulating atmosphere, and the universal presence of catarrhal difficulties.

But why should so many of our women have false teeth?

That is more of a poser to the English. It is quite impossible to account for it except on the theory of deranged stomach action caused by imprudence in eating and by want of regular exercise.

Both conditions are unnatural.

Catarrhal troubles everywhere prevail and end in cough and consumption, which are promoted by malnutrition induced by deranged stomach action. The condition is a modern one, one unknown to our ancestors, who prevented the catarrh, cold, cough and consumption by abundant and regular use of what is now known as Warner's Log Cabin cough and consumption remedy and Log Cabin sarsaparilla, two old fashioned standard remedies handed down from our ancestors, and now exclusively put forth under the strongest guarantees of purity and efficacy by the world-famed makers of Warner's safe cure. These two remedies plentifully used as the fall and winter seasons advance, together with an occasional use of Warner's Log Cabin rose cream, to strengthen and protect the nasal membranes, give a positive assurance of freedom, both from catarrh and those dreadful and if neglected, inevitable consequences, pneumonia, lung troubles and consumption, which so generally and fatally prevail among our people.

Comrade Eli Fisher, of Salem, Henry Co., Iowa, served four years in the late war and contracted a disease called consumption by the doctors. He had frequent hemorrhages. After using Warner's Log Cabin cough and consumption remedy, he says, under date of Jan. 19th, 1888: "I do not bleed at the lungs any more, my cough does not bother me, and I do not have any more smothering spells." Warner's Log Cabin rose cream cured his wife of catarrh and she is "sound and well."

Of course we do not like to have our women called nose talkers and false teeth owners, but these conditions can be readily overcome in the manner indicated.

LOG CABINS were not hot-houses and the people who dwelt in them were not hot-house growths. They were a hardy, healthy generation and the remedies used were simple preparations reproduced in Warner's Log Cabin Cough and Consumption Remedy and Warner's "Tippecanoe" the great stomach tonic.

Tracing on glass.

From the Philadelphia Times.

Several years ago a member of a firm of glass manufacturers was traveling through the West. While on a railway which skirts the shores of a great inland lake he observed that the plate glass in the windows of the Pullman car was marked with mysterious figures, undefined in shape, but of a singular airy and delicate lightness. On inquiry he found that the marks were made by the sand, which was blown against the windows from the beach as the cars passed.

Upon returning home he began a series of experiments in directing a shower of fine sand against the surface of glass in definite shapes. The result was the discovery of the sandblast, by which the most delicate figures are outlined upon glass with exquisite lightness and accuracy.

The rumor that Prince Bismarck contemplates retiring from public life at an early date is semi-officially contradicted.

WARNER'S Log Cabin Remedies—old fashioned, simple compounds, used in the days of our hardy forefathers, are "old timers" but "old reliable." They comprise a "Sarsaparilla," "Hops and Buchu Remedy," "Cough and Consumption Remedy," "Hair Tonic," "Extract," for External and Internal Use, "Plasters," "Rose Cream," for Catarrh, and "Liver Pills." They are put up by H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of Warner's Safe Remedies, and promise to equal the standard value of these great preparations. All druggists keep them.

Republican Gatlings.

Free Thought and Free Speech Forever.

When a white Republican in the South actively engages in politics, he is apt to and generally becomes a stench in the nostrils of the respectable element of the community in which he lives.—From the Memphis Scimitar.

The President's Check.

Harper's Weekly regrets the fact—if it is a fact—that the President has contributed $10,000 to the Democratic campaign fund. We fail to detect any cause for regret or anything inconsistent with a genuine reform of civil service. Political expenses must be met in some way.—From the Louisville Courier-Journal (Dem.)

Honest but Imprudent.

The bold declarations of Judge Thurman against tariff of every description entitle him to the thanks of the Republican party. The judge is no hypocrite; he knows his party text and he sticks to it like a man, without deception or evasion. Let Mr. Cleveland follow his courageous example.—Philadelphia Press.

Democratic Consistency.

How these brethren do dwell together in unity! In a horn they do, but nowhere else. Says Mr. Jones in his mugwump New York Times: Nobody teaches that the full amount of the duty is added to the price of the protected domestic products. I suppose that it is needless to explain that all these duties and assessments are added to the price of the articles upon which they are levied.

How the Temperance Men Will Vote.

The chances do not look as favorable for a large Prohibitionist vote in New Hampshire as usual. That vote has fallen off in Vermont and in Maine in comparison with figures of 1886. There are peculiar reasons why it may in New York. The Democrats have nominated in Governor Hill, a man particularly objectionable to the temperance men. Boston Herald (Mugwump).

Democracy Defined.

The assault upon our protective system is open and defiant. Protection is assailed as unconstitutional in law, or as vicious in principle, and those who hold such views sincerely cannot stop short of an absolute elimination from our tariff laws of the principle of protection. The Mills bill is only a step, but it is toward an object that the legislation have clearly in mind. The important question is not so much the length of the step as the direction of it.—General Harrison's Letter.

A Sensible Workingman.

Said a Democratic workingman in New York the other day: I would rather pay one cent more for a dinner pail and establish an industry worth $30,000,000 annually to this nation than continue to support 100,000 Englishmen in making tin plate, when that number of Americans want employment." The argument is sound. It is sound from the workingman's standpoint especially, and it is sound from the standpoint of every intelligent American citizen.

A Little Fable

New York Tribune: Once there was a man who got caught out in the rain. He was hailed by Noah as he sailed by in his ark. At the time Noah hailed the man the man was standing tip-toe on top of a flag staff which was planted on the roof of the tallest building that the man could find. But even then the man, at the time Noah hailed him was up to his chin in the water, "How does the wet weather suit you?" inquired Noah. "Oh," replied the man, "I really hadn't noticed any humidity to speak of.

Moral—This fable teaches what The Evening Post means when it says that "the Democrats are satisfied with the Maine election."

How Maine Went:

Just for the encouragement of the Democratic brethren, who still continue to discuss the political situation down in Maine, the central facts of the situation are given as follows.

1. Ever congressional district in the state was carried by an average plurality of about 5,000.

2. Every county in the state elected, for the first time in years, a Republican to the State Senate.

3. Every county in the state also gave a plurality for the state ticket.

4. The plurality in the entire state was about 22,000.

5. The majority over all was something less than 18,000; when the Republican managers gave it out cold a few days before the election that they confidently expected 12,000.

6. The total Prohibition vote in Maine—the mother of the Prohibition movement—was 2,000.

Now, it is not worth while for our Democratic friends to get out of temper and sulk. The truth is that four years of Democratic experiment has furnished sufficient amusement for the American people, and they have determined to quit, and return to the virtuous in government.

Not Free Traders O, No

Speaker Carlisle—All trade should be as free as possible.

Grover Cleveland—I believe in free trade.

Roger Q. Mills—I desire free trade, and I will not help to perfect any law that stands in the way of free trade.

Henry Watterson—The Democratic party is a free-trade party or it is nothing. The Democrat who is not a free-trader should go elsewhere.

Secretary Fairchild—Add to the free list as many articles as possible. Reduce duties upon every dutiable article to the lowest point possible.

Congressman Hare—If we did not require money to defray the expenses of government I would be an absolute and uncompromising free trader.

Henry George—Mr. Cleveland stands before the country a champion of free trade. Mr. Mills' speech is a manly, vigorous and most effective free trade speech.

S. S. Cox—It would be a glorious consummation of this debate could we only have gentlemen on the other side join in this invocation to paper and type and to the hearts of honest men to clear the way for British Cobden free trade.

What the Republican Party has Done.

It subdued Rebellion and saved the Union.

It conquered war and established peace.

It gave freedom to a race and a free ballot to all men.

It was patriotic enough to create a debt to carry on war and honest enough to make provision to pay that debt.

It made liberty universal throughout the States and the flag honored throughout the world.

It made treason odious and loyalty the badge of respected citizenship.

It raised the nation from bankruptcy and secured for our public credit the faith of the financial world.

It made persons and property freedom of thought and of expression secure in every part of the land.

It has dignified labor and secured its rightful reward by protective tariff laws.

It has practically given each citizen a free home by securing the public domain from the monopoly of capital.

It has, by a rigid supervision of corporate franchise, made transportation cheap, safe and rapid for persons and property.

It has, by wise economies and just laws, reduced the public debt and the interest upon it.

It has, by generous, and yet just, appropriation for pensions, illustrated its love and respect for the Nation's gallant defenders.

It has made competency a condition for appointment to office and fidelity to duty the tenure for holding it.

It has reduced the public expenditure to the lowest point consistent with the general welfare and collected the tax from sources best able to pay it.

It has made religious liberty more secure to all forms of faith by an enlightened public opinion and establish free schools with no sectarian denomination in them.

It has, by fidelity to public trust, by its constitutional amendments, by its statutory enactments, Federal and State, by the life and character of its long line of statesmen, heroes, orators and martyrs, by its sacred traditions, and its matchless history of great things accomplished, proven itself competent and worthy to achieve the great things yet to be done for the good and glory of the country.

HORRORS OF YELLOW FEVER.

A Few Statements from the Columns of Telegrams that Daily Fill the Papers about the Pestilence.

Language is inadequate to describe the scenes of misery, suffering and desolation that have followed the appearance of the yellow fever in the South.

A REIGN OF TERROR.

A portion of the railroad track between Harrison and Vicksburg has been torn up by frightened people in order to force trains to stop. There is good ground for believing the report true. There is scarcely any fear that any refugees will be able to reach Louisiana or New Orleans by river, for Jackson has been isolated and people from there have no means of reaching the Mississippi river. Vicksburg and Natchez have both quarantined most strictly, and roads connecting them with Jackson have been obliged to go out of business for the present. There is evidently a reign of terror in and about Jackson, and a gentleman on his way from Birmingham to Vicksburg, who was forced to come to New Orleans from Meridian, said recently that he never saw people so frightened as are Mississippians, who are panic stricken with fear that the scourge may become general in their state. Special trains, as required, will be sent to Jackson by the Illinois Central to carry North all who wish to go. At the meeting of the board of health the epidemic at Jackson, Miss., was discussed.

MEMPHIS VIGOROUSLY QUARANTINED.

The stringent quarantine regulations adopted by the city of Memphis went into effect on the 22d of Sept., and no passenger trains on any of the railroads on the east side of the Mississippi river can come nearer Memphis than ten miles. Cruel hardships of strict quarantine is being felt. The delayed passenger train from New Orleans, which was due at 9 o'clock in the morning, did not arrive at Lakeview, Miss., until 2 in the afternoon. By order of the Memphis authorities a train was stopped at Lakeview, and a special train was sent there to convey the delayed passengers to their destination. A detail of police, together with two officials of the Louisville, New Orleans & Texas railway and associated press reporter went down to make the transfer. There were about two hundred passengers, mostly women and children who had hurriedly left New Orleans, Vicksburg, Greenville and other points. They were not fleeing from fever, but had been sent away to avoid a stampede that would follow if a case should appear at any of those places.

Many ladies were unaccompanied by their husbands, who had remained behind, and with their little ones were utterly helpless. The excitement which prevails all along the route from New Orleans to Memphis had proven contagious, and they were like so many frightened sheep. The coaches were crowded almost to suffocation, and many women and children were unable to secure seats.

CHATTANOOGA ACTS LIKEWISE.

Chattanooga has instituted a most stringent quarantine against all infected points. No one is permitted to enter the city on any of the nine railroads without giving a satisfactory account of himself. Quarantine officers board every train, and fifty are thus employed. The city council has adopted ordinances inflicting a fine of $500 on any person entering the city from any infected district. A large reward is offered for the apprehension and convictom of such offender and for the conviction of any one harboring such refugee. The Memphis & Charleston railroad trains stopping at Decatur or twenty miles either side are forbidden entrance into Chattanooga. Meridian, Miss., was quarantined against owing to the report that cases of yellow fever had occurred there. All through passenger and freight trains on the Mobile & Ohio railroad were suspended recently, owing to quarantine restrictions in Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky.

THE SITUATION IN JACKSONVILLE.

JACKSONVILLE SEPT. 21.—Most of the new cases are among colored people in the suburbs. There are comparatively few deaths among the negroes, who usually recover rapidly from the disease. Total number of cases reported to date, 1,582; total deaths 196. It is impossible as yet to get definite information from Fenandina, but it is expected that advices from there will be at hand in a day or two. A high death rate is expected for several days. A special from Gainesville reports one new case there—a member of the guards who went to Fernandina. One of the most pathetic incidents of the pestilence occurred. A little nine-year-old boy named Stock was brought in from the sand hills, where he had recovered from the yellow fever. Making his way to his home, he was told that his father, mother and sister had all fallen victims to the dread disease. He is a bright little fellow, and will be cared for by a gentleman who was a patient near him in the hospital. Romance mixes with our woe now and then. Miss Hattit L. Kidd, who stood at her post at the telephone office till she caught the fever is now well, but all her family have died. To-day she was married to B. W. Owen, the head of the relief committee. They were betrothed and Nov. 15 was set as the day, but as she refused to leave the city without her lover they were married. Another sad story was told to-day. Two young girls died at the Sand Hills last night. They had been very ill but were convalescent and were doing very well. Their mother, who had been sick at St. Luke's hospital, died there the day before. Yesterday by accident the younger of the two sisters obtained a copy of the Times-Union in which the mother's death was recorded. She went weeping to her sister, and, weakened by her excitement and grief, fell down at her sister's feet in dead faint. The sisters were seized with convulsions and had a relapse. Both died soon afterward. The official report to-day shows 118 new cases of yellow fever and fourteen deaths.

JACKSONVILLE, SEPT. 22.—There is no change in the situation to-day, except that the record has been beaten in the number of new cases. Five weeks ago, when the fever broke out, a white man who had only been married twelve months, was taken ill and died. At the time of his death his wife became a mother. Last night she died of yellow fever after a few days' illness, and the poor little five weeks' old babe is left without a relative in the place. When the clergyman who was there spoke about the future of the little orphan, he was told that all the women in the neighborhood were already quarreling as to who should have charge of the baby. When the train left for Hendersonville it bore away a cur. He left without means his wife who was sick with yellow fever and three little children. His wife is dead now, and his children would have starved had not strangers cared for them. The amount of money that is used here surprised even the officers themselves.

JACKSONVILLE, SEPT. 23.—A funeral silence reigns to-day. No church bells tell us that it is Sunday; in fact, the only thing to indicate the day is that there are not so many negroes on the street and around the commissionary rooms as at other times. The traffic on the streets consists of doctors' gigs and hearses. This morning's report seemed more favorable than yesterday morning's. There is also a little encouragement gleaned from the fact that yesterday's death rate was low, though there were more cases than ever before. There is much ill-feeling against a certain marine hospital surgeon, and it is probable that the surgeon general will be asked to recall him.

JACKSONVILLE, SEPT. 24.—Col. J. J. Daniels has at last succumbed. He is down with yellow fever. His brother, Dr. Dr. Daniels, who has got over the fever, is still too ill to leave his bed. Dr. Stollenwerke found six cases of fever at the jail today, and, as it is pretty small and very badly ventilated, he thinks the balance of the unfortunate prisoners—twenty-eight—will all be ill. Another of the telegraph operators, Mrs. Bigkner, who has been here two weeks, from New Orleans, was taken ill, making in all seven who are now sick. Yellow fever is at Fernandina. Dr. Maxwell, who is now in town, received a telegram saying that his nephew has it, and asking that two nurses be sent at once. A special train has been sent away with nurses. This is the first official acknowledgement of yellow fever there. Fernandina would not allow any one except nurses to come from Jacksonville.

MEMPHIS ISOLATED.

MEMPHIS, TENN., SEPT. 24.—An armed force composed of members of the Chickasaw Guards, Memphis Merchant Zouaves and Schorr Zouaves guards the roads leading into Memphis. There are thirteen picket stations and a detail of six men for each station was made this afternoon, and the soldier boys placed on duty. The board of health authorities determined to place the same restrictions on the railroads west of the Mississippi river as have been enforced against those on the east side.

Indian Row at Standing Rock.

A special from Standing Rock Indian agency says: Sitting Bull was very active in getting the Indians to attend the great powwow. He feels slighted that Chief Justice John Grass is to be sent to Washington instead of himself, and gave vent to his feelings as follows:

My faithful brethern, the pale faces are eager to possess our rightful belongings. For many years the white man has come and steadily moved us from place to place, until now we have but a mere patch of ground to live on. Soon we shall not have enough ground to stretch our tepees and rest our limbs. The whites were tricky in their former treaties. We have found that we cannot place any faith in what they promise. They are like a snake in the grass, and will snap at you unawares. We have sent our brother, John Grass, to Washington, our Great Father's home. If our brother proves treacherous, fearful shall be the fate in store for him. My brethern, I do not bear any malace toward my fellow warrior, but his eye is wicked.

At the close of Sitting Bull's address he was greeted with tremdous applause. Black Thunder, the next orator, said:

Brothers, these men, they call commissioners, come here with a paper for us to sign. The signing of this harmless-looking document takes our lands from us. No sensible Indian will sign it. I have spoken. I shall not sign.

The Indians listened to Black Thunder with bated breath and at his abrupt conclusion he was greeted with deafening cheers. When the paplause abated sufficiently young White Cloud, a graceful, handsome Sioux, ascended the little knoll of ground used as a speaker's stand and said:

I have listened to the talks of our old leaders, Sitting Bull and Black Thunder. They are opposed to the treaty. They speak too hastily and rashly. Their words should be carefully weighed and considered before leaving the tongue. They know not what they say. The treaty is for our benefit, and I, for one, shall sign.

A dead calm followed the defiant utterances of the young brave's short speech. At last Sitting Bull slowly arose. He majestically wrapped the folds of his red blanket about him, and with a great sweep of his right arm made a sign to his followers. Then, as one man, the entire horde arose and dashed en masse towards the young Indian. His fate was surely sealed had not Chief Gall appeared and peremptorily demanded order and silence. His sudden and unexpected appearance had a soothing effect upon the Indians. His brawny arms were raised aloft, and the Indians suddenly dispersed to their wagons and ponies. Gall then called upon the braves to inform him what this unseemly demonstration was. Here Sitting Bull silently sneaked away, the young, heroic speaker followed, leaving Black Thunder alone to face the ire of Gall. Black Thunder made a feeble explanation of his and his followers' action. Gall's face turned perfectly livid with pent-up passion "What mean you?" he almost screamed. "Is not this council for you all to express your respective opinions? Begone!" he hissed to the crying Black Thunder, "and let me hear of no repetition of this." Black Thunder meekly strode to his pony, saddled and mounted him and bounded over the hill. The other Indians silently drove away to their homes. It is probable that Gall's sudden breaking up of the powwow will put an end to the holding of any further councils.

A Desperado Killed by a Woman.

The notorious "Lone Highwayman," who has for the past two years been a terror to travelers in the vicinity of Kerryville, Texas, and who has, without the assistance of a single confederate, repeatedly robbed stage coaches, rifled mail bags, and gone through as many as six commercial travelers in broad daylight without the slightest inconvenience or resistance, has been killed. He was short by Mrs. Lizzie Hay, at her home on the head prong of Rio Sabinal, Bandero county. Mrs. Hay's story of the killing is as follows: "Last Monday morning I was sitting on the floor in my room, when suddenly a man appeared on the front gallery. He had a red handkerchief tied around his hand, and a piece of black calico over his face. I said 'what do you want here?' He answered 'it is none of your business.' I then said 'get off that gallery or I'll kill you.' He laughed and said 'you're a plucky woman, but I'll have what I want out of this house, or burn it down over your head.' By this time I had a needle gun and he entered. I drew it down on him within eighteen inches of the heart, but it snapped and he said. 'D— you I'll kill you,' at the same time producing a long, keen-bladed knife and aimed it at my throat. I warded off the blow, the next time he struck the end of the knife stuck in my forehead, making an ugly gash. At the same time I reversed ends of my gun and struck him over the head, felling him to the floor, and before he could rise, I had reversed the gun and pulled the trigger. This time it fired, the bullet taking effect in his left side. He gave an ugly yell and rolled out on the porch. I looked for another cartridge, but the blood was streaming down my face so I could not find them. I wiped it off with my apron and reloaded my gun. He had by this time almost reached his horse. I took good aim and fired, but I don't think I hit him. My husband was up in the Canon, but when he came home, a few hours after dark, he immediately organized a party of rangers. They trailed him for a distance of twenty miles by his blood and found him dead. His name is unknown, but he is recognized to be the same man whose bold depredations have for two years past terrorized the whole Bandero county."

The German Emperor's Schemes.

The activity of the German emperor appears to know no bounds, and of course is not looked upon altogether with approval by political cognoscenti at home and abroad. The obvious if not very flattering parallel between Wilhelm II. and the ultra eccentric parent of the great Frederick represents the opinion which intelligent foreigners appear to have formed of him, and the rather uncharitable conclusion arrived at that the symptoms of intolerance and unnatural restlessness which are exhibited so early in his reign will bring him all the sooner to the state of mind that rendered the latter years of his ancestor a curse to his country and his death a relief to all around him. One class of Germans, however, look with unmixed satisfaction upon the irrepressible "flea life," as it is privately termed, of the new kaiser, and hail with pleasure every manifestation of imperiousness and junkerism. The voters for Lebknecht and their more or less open sympathizers candidly own that the popularity of the late Frederick, the general belief in his wishes to ameliorate the condition of the masses and gradually concede to the people a larger share in the government of the country, would have quieted the general clamor and deferred for years the uprising against the armed tyranny which they feel regards them merely as so much material for the advancement of the ambitious schemes of their hereditary masters. There are now, workmen, no inconsiderable number of the soldiery and many officers of the lower grades, kept always conscious that there is no relief from an existence scarcely better than that of the beasts, except by a concerted revolt, and that to enlightened men life on such conditions is unendurable. As for the emperor, the only sign that he has given of a change of purpose in any respect may be explained by the natural inference that he does not care to suffer his anti-English feelings to weigh against his interests. It is evident that his several interviews with the prince of Wales have resulted in the conclusion that England may be useful to him at no distant day, that its navy is a thing to be envied and its naval administration a matter worthy of study. He will hardly find that the mere adoption of the English naval uniform by the German Marine will make a race of sailors out of men who are not so by disposition.

A passenger train on the Southern Pacific was stopped near Harwood, Texas, by masked men, who compelled the engineer, at the point of a revolver to uncouple from the passenger coaches and pull out of the way. Conductor Shockelford was compelled to assist in uncoupling the engine. On the express car were United States Marshal John S. Ranking, with Deputy William Van Wiker and Detective J. G. Kelley, of the Southern Pacific. Other officers were on the train, the company having been warned of the attack, and all east-bound trains having been guarded by Marshal Rankin. The robbers were soon on the mail car, which was defended. The bandits returned the fire and no less than fifty shots were exchanged, when the baffled robbers fled, carring two of their wounded with them. There were ten in the gang.

Superfluities A Hinderance.

What Dr. Talmage had to Say on Sunday About Giants and Other Big Things.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., September 23.—The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., preached in the Brooklyn tabernacle this morning on the subject, "Superfluities a hinderance." Several ocean steamers arrive in port Sunday mornings, and many of the passengers, browned by the sea, come directly from the wharf to the Brooklyn tabernacle. The great congregation, led by Prof. Ali's cornet and accompanied by the organ, at which Prof. Browne presides, joined in the opening hymn:

We are Thy people, we Thy care,
Our souls and all our mortal frame.
What lasting honors shall we rear,
Almighty Maker, to Thy name?

Dr. Talmage's text was: "I Chronicles, Chap. xx., v. 6 and 7.

A man of great stature, whose fingers and toes were four and twenty, six on each hand and six on each foot; and he also was the son of the giant. But when he defied Israel, Jonathan, the son of Shimea, David's brother, slew him.

Malformation photographed, and for what reason? Did not this passage slip in by mistake into the sacred scriptures, as sometimes a paragraph utterly obnoxious to the editor gets into his newspaper during his absence? Is not this scriptural error? No, no; there is nothing haphazard about the Bible. This passage of scripture was ascertainly intended to be put in the Bible as the passage, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth;" or, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten son."

And I select it for my text today because it is charged with practical and tremendous meaning. By the people of God the Philistines had been conquered, with the exception of a few giants. The race of giants is mostly extinct, I am glad to say. There is no use for giants now except to enlarge the income of museums. But there was many of them in olden times. Goliath was, according to the Bible, 11 feet 3½ inches high. Or, if you do not believe the Bible, the famous Pliny, a secular writer, declares that at Crete by an earthquake a monument was broken open, discovering the remains of a giant 46 cubits long, or 69 feet high. So, whether you prefer sacred or profane history, you must come to the conclusion that there were in those olden times cases of human altitude monstrous and appalling. David had smashed the skull of one of these giants, but there were other giants that these Davidean wars had not get subdued, and one of them stands in my text. He was not only of Alpine stature, but had a surplus of digits. To the ordinary fingers was annexed an additional finger, and the foot had also a superfluous addendum. He had 24 terminations to hands and feet where others have 20, it was not the only instance of the kind. Tavernier, the learned writer, says that the Emperor of Java had a son endowed with the same number of extremities. Volcatius, the poet, had six fingers on each hand. Maupetius in his celebrated letters speaks of two families near Berlin similarly equipped on both hand and foot. All of which I can believe, for I have seen two cases of the same physical superabundance. But this giant of the text is in battle, and as David, the dwarf warrior, had dispatched one giant, the brother of David, always this monster of my text, and there he lies after the battle in Gath, a dead giant. His stature did not save him and his superfluous appendices of hand and foot did not save him. The probability was that in the battle his sixth finger on his hand made him clumsy in the use of his weapon, and his sixth toe crippled his gait. Behold the prostrate and malformed giant of the text: "A man great of stature, whose fingers and toes were four and twenty, six on each hand, and six on each foot; and he also was the son of the giant. But when he defied Israel, Jonathan, the son of Shimea, David's brother, slew him."

Behold how superfluities are a hinderance rather than a help! In all the battle at Gath that day there was not a man with ordinary hand and ordinary foot and ordinary stature that was not better off than this physical curiosity of my text. As physical size is apt to run in families, the probability is that this brother of David, who did the work, was of an abbreviated stature. A dwarf on the right side is stronger than a giant on the wrong side, and all the body, and mind, and estate, and opportunity that you cannot use for God and the betterment of the world is a sixth finger and a sixth toe, and a terrific hindrance. The most of the good done in the world, and the most of those who win the battles for the right are ordinary people. Count the fingers of their right hand and they have five, no more and no less. One Dr. Duff among missionaries, but 8,000 missionaries that would tell you they have only common endowment. One Florence Nightingale to nurse the sick in conspicuous places, but 10,000 who are just as good nurses though never heard of. The Swamp Angel was a big gun that during the war made a big noise, but muskets of ordinary calibre and shells of ordinary heft did the execution. President Tyler and his cabinet go down the Potomac one day to experiment with the Peacemaker, a great iron gun that was to affright with its thunder, foreign natives. The gunner touches it off and it explodes and leaves cabinet ministers dead on the deck, while at that time all up and down our coasts were cannon of ordinary bore able to be the defense of the nation, and ready at the first touch to awaken to duty. The curse of the world is big guns. After the politicians who have made all the noise go home hoarse from angry discussion on the evening of the first Monday in November, the next day the people with the silent ballots will settle everything and settle it right, a million of the white slips of paper they drop making about as much noise as the fall of an apple blossom.

Clear back in the country to-day there are mothers in plain apron, and shoes on a rough last by the shoemaker at the lane, rocking babies that are to be the Martin Luthers, and the Faradays, and the Edisons, and the Bismarks, and the Gladstones, and the Washingstons, and the George Whitefields, of the year 1938 and who will make the twentieth century so bright that this much landed nineteenth in comparison will seem a part of the dark ages. The longer I live the more I like common folks. They do the world's work, bearing the world's burdens, weeping the world's sympathies, carrying the the world's consolation. Among lawyers we see rise up a Rufus Chote, or a William Wert, or a Samuel L. Southand, but society would go to pieces to-morrow if there were not thousands of common lawyers to see that men and women get their rights. A Valentine Mott or a Willard Parker rises up eminent in the medical profession, but what an unlimited sweep would pneumonia, and diphtheria, and scarlet fever have in the world if it were not for 10,000 common doctors. The old physician in his gig rolling up the lane of the farm house, or riding on horseback, his medicines in the saddle-bag, arriving on the ninth day of the fever, and coming in to take hold of the pulse of the patient, while the family, pale with anxiety, are looking on and waiting for his decision in regard to the patient, and hearing him say: "Thank God, I have mastered the case, he is getting well," excites in me an admiration quite equal to the mention of the names of the great metropolitan doctors, Pancoast or Gross or Joseph C. Hutchinson of the past, or the illustrious living men of the present.

Yet what do we see in all departments? People not satisfied with ordinary spheres of work and ordinary duties. Instead of trying to see what they can do with a hand of five fingers they want six. Instead of the usual endowment of 20 manual and pedal addenda they want 24. A certain amount of money for livelihood and for the supply of those whom we leave behind us after we departed this life is important, for we have the best authority for saying: "He, that provideth not for his own, and especially those of his own household, is worse than an infidel." But the large and fabulous sums for which many struggle, if obtained, would be a hinderance rather than an advantage. The anxieties and annoyances that those have whose estates have become plethoric can only be told by those who posess them. It will be a good thing when through your industry and public prosperities you can own the house in which you live. But suppose you own 50 houses and you have all those rents to collect and all those tenants to please. Suppose you have branched out in business successes until in almost every direction you have investments. The fire bell rings at night; you rush upstairs to look out of the window to see if it is any of your mills. An epidemic of crime comes and there, are embezzlements and abscondings in all direction, and you wonder whether any of your bookkeepers will prove recreant. A panic strikes the financial world, and you are like a hen under a sky full of hawks, and trying with anxious cluck to get your overgrown chickens safely under wing. After a certain stage of success has been reached you have to trust so many important things to others that you are apt to become the prey of others, and you are swindled and defrauded, and the anxiety you had on your brow when you were earning your first thousand dollars is not equal to the anxiety on your brow now that you have won your three hundred thousand. The trouble with such a one is he is spread out like the unfortunate one in my text. You have more fingers and toes than you know what to do with. Twenty were useful, 24 is a hindering superfluity. Disraeli says that a King of Poland abdicated his throne and adjoined the people and became a porter to carry burdens. And some one asked him why he did so, and he replied: "Upon my honor, gentlemen, the load which I quit is by far heavier than the one you see me carry. The weightiest is but a straw when compared to that world under which I labored. I have slept more in four nights than I have during all my reign. I begin to live and to be a king myself. Elect whom you choose, for me who am so well it would be madness to return to court."

"Well," says somebody, "such overloaded persons ought to be pitied, for their worriments are real and their insomnia and their nervous prostration are genuine." I reply that they could get rid of the bothersome surplus by giving it away. If a man has more houses than he can carry without vexation, let him drop a few of them. If his estate is so great he cannot manage it without getting nervous dyspepsia from having too much, let him divide up with those who have nervous dyspepsia because they cannot get enough. No! they guard their sixth finger with more care than they did the original five. They go limping with what they call gout and know not that, like the giant of my text, they are lamed by a superfluous toe. A few of them by large charities bleed themselves of this financial obesity and momentary plethora, but many of them hang on to the hindering superfluity till death, and then as they are compelled to give the money up anyhow, in their last will and testament they generously give some of it to the Lord, expecting, no doubt, that He will feel very much obliged to them. Thank God that once in a while we have a Peter Cooper who, owning an interest in the iron works at Trenton, said to Mr. Lester: "I do not feel quite easy about the amount we are making. Working under one of our patents, we have a monopoly which seems to me something wrong. Everybody has to come to us for it and we are making money too fast." So they reduced the price and this while our philanthropist was building Cooper Institute, which mothers a hundred institutes of kindness and mercy all over the land. But the world had to wait 5,800 years for Peter Cooper. I am glad for the benevolent institutions that get a legacy from men who during their life were as stingy as death, but who in their last will and testament bestowed money on hospitals and missionary societies; but for such testators I have no respect. They would have taken every cent of it with them if they could; and bought up half of heaven and let it out at ruinous rent, or loaned the money to celestial citizens at 2 percent a month and got a corner on harps and trumpets. They lived in this world 50 or 60 years in the presence of appaling suffering and want and made no effort for their relief. The charities of such people are for the most part in "paulo-post future" tense and they are going to do them. The probability is that if such a one in his last will by a donation to benevolent societies tries to atone for his life-time closefistedness, the heirs at law will try to break the will by proving that the old man was senile or crazy, and the expense of the litigation will about leave in the lawyers' hands what was meant for the American Bible Society. O, ye overweighted successful business men, whether this sermon reach your ear or your eye, let me say that if you are prostrated with anxieties about keeping or investigating these tremendous fortunes, I can tell you how you can do more to get your health back and your spirits raised than by drinking gallons of bad-tasting water at Saratoga, Homburg or Carlsbad—give to God and humanity the Bible 10 per cent of all your income, and it will make a new man of you, and from restless walking of the floor at night you shall have eight hours sleep without the help of bromide of potassium, and from no appetite you will hardly be able to wait your regular meals, and your wan cheek will fill up, and when you die the blessings of those who but for you would have perished will bloom all over your grave with violets, if it be spring, or gladiolus, if it be autumn.

Perhaps some of you will take this advice, but the most of you will not. And you will try to cure your swollen hand by getting on it more fingers, and your rheumatic foot by getting on it more toes, and there will be a sigh of relief when you are gone out of the world; and when over your remains the minister recites the words: Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord," persons who have keen appreciation of the ludicrous will hardly be able to keep their faces straight. But whether in that direction my words do good or not, I am anxious that all who have ordinary equipment be thankful for what they have and rightly employ it. I think you all have, figuratively as well as literally, fingers enough. Do not long for hindering superfluities. Standing in the presence of this fallen giant of my text and in their post-mortem examination of him, let us learn how much better off we are with just the usual foot. You have thanked God for a thousand things, but I warrant you never thanked him for those two implements of work and locomotion that no one but the Infinite and Omnipotent God could have ever planned or made, the hand and foot. Only that soldier or mechanic who in battle or through machinery has lost them knows anything about their value, and only the Christian scientist can have any appreciation of what divine masterpieces they are. Sir Charles Bell, the English surgeon, on the battlefield of Waterloo, while engaged in amputations of the wounded, was so impressed with the wondrous construction of the human hand that when the Earl of Bridgewater gave $40,000 for essays on the wisdom and goodness of God, and eight books were written, Sir Charles Bell wrote his entire book on the wisdom and goodness of God as displayed in the human hand. The 27 bones in hand and wrist with cartilages and ligaments and phalanges of the fingers all made just ready to knit, to sew, to build up, to pull down, to weave, to write, to plow, to pound, to wheel, to battle, to give friendly salutation. The tips of its fingers are so many telegraph offices by reason of their sensitiveness of touch. The bridges, the tunnels, the cities of the whole earth are the victories of the hand. The hands are not dumb, but often speak as distinctly as the lips. With our hands we invite, we repel, we invoke, we entreat, we wring them in grief or clap them in joy, or spread them abroad in benediction. The malformation of the giant's hand in the text glorifies the usual hand. Fashioned of God more exquisitely and wondrously than any human mechanism that was ever contrived, I charge you use it for God and the lifting of the world out of its moral predicament. Employ it in the sublime Work of gospel handshaking. You can see the hand is just made for that. Four fingers just set right to touch your neighbor's hand on one side and your thumb set so as to clench it on the other side. By all its bones, and joints, and muscles, and cartilages, and ligaments, the voice of nature joins with the voice of God commanding you to shake hands. The custom is as old as the Bible, anyhow. Jehu said to Jehonadab: "Is thine heart right as my heart is with thine heart?" If it be, give me thine hand." When hands join in Christian salutation a gospel electricity thrills across the palm from heart to heart, and from the shoulder of one to the shoulder of the other. Shake hands all around. With the timid and for their encouragement, shake hand. With the troubled, and in warm-hearted sympathy, shake hands. With the young man just entering business, and discouraged at the small sales and the large expenses, shake hands. With the child who is now from God, and started on an unending journey for which he needs to gather great supply of strength, and who can hardly reach up to you now, because you are so much taller, shake hands. Across cradles and dying beds and graves, shake hands. With your enemies who have done all to defame and hurt you, but whom you can afford to forgive, shake hands. At the door of churches where people come in, and at the door of churches where people go out, shake hands. Let pulpit shake hands with pew, and Sabbath day shake hands with week day, and earth shake hands with heaven. Oh the strange, the mighty, the undefined, the mysterious, the eternal power of an honest handshaking. The difference between these times and the millennial times is that now some shake hands but then all will shake hands, throne and footstool, across seas nation with nation, God and man, church militant and church triumphant.

Yes; the malformation of this fallen giant's foot glorifies the ordinary foot, for which I fear you have never once thanked God. The 26 bones of the foot are the admiration of the anatomist. The arch of the foot fashioned with a grace and a poise that Trojan's arch at Beneventum, or Constantine's arch at Rome of the Arch of Triumph at the end of Champs Elysees could not equal. Those arches stand where they were planted, but this arch of the foot is an adjustable arch, a yielding arch, a flying arch, and ready for movements innumerable. The human foot so fashioned as to enable man to stand upright as no other creature, and leave the hand that would otherwise have to help in balancing the body free for anything it chooses. The foot of the camel fashioned for the sand, the foot of the bird fashioned for the tree branch, the foot of the lion fashioned to rend its prey, the foot of the horse fashioned for the solid earth, but the foot of man made to cross the desert, or climb the tree, or scale the cliff, or walk the earth, or go anywhere he needs to go. With that divine triumph of anatomy in your possession, where do you walk? In what path of righteousness or what path of sin have you set it down? Where have you left the mark of your footsteps? Amid the petrifications in the rocks have been found the mark of the feet of birds and beasts o thousands of years ago. And God can trace out all the footsteps of your lifetime, and those you made 50 years ago are as plain as those made in the last soft weather, all of them petrified for the judgment day. Oh, the foot! How divinely honored not only in its construction but in the fact that God represents himself in the Bible as having feet: "The clouds on the dust of His feet:" "Darkness was under His feet:) "The earth is My footstool." And representing cyclones and euroclydons and whirlwinds and hurricanes as winged creatures. He describes Himself as putting His foot on these monsters of the air and walking from pinion to pinion, saying: "He walketh upon the wings of the wind." "Thou hast put all things in order under His feet," cries the psalmist. Oh, the foot. Give me the autobiography of your foot from the time you stepped out of the cradle until to-day and I will tell your exact character now and what are your prospects for the world to come. That there might be no doubt about the fact that both these pieces of divine mechanism, hand and foot, belong to Christ's service, both hands of Christ and both feet of Christ were spiked on the cross. Right through the arch of both His feet to the hollow of His footstep went the iron of torture, and from the palm of His hand to the back of it, and there is not a muscle or nerve or among the 27 bones of hand and wrist, or among the 26 bones of the foot but it belongs to Him now and forever. Charles Reade, the great writer, lost the joint of his forefinger by feeding a bear. Look out that your whole hand gets not into the maw of the old Cerberus of perdition. Sir Thomas Trowbridge, at the battle of Inkermann, lost his foot and when the soldiers would carry him away, he said, "No, I do not move until the battle is won." So if our foot be lamed or lost let it be in the service of our God, our home or our country.

That is the most beautiful foot that goes about paths of greatest usefulness, and that the most beautiful hand that does the most to help others. I was reading of three women who were in rivalry about the appearance of the hand. And the one reddened her hand with berries, and said the beautiful tinge made her's the most beautiful. And another put her hand in the mountain brook, and said as the waters dripped off, that her hand was the most beautiful. And another plucked flowers off the bank, and under the bloom contended that her hand was the most attractive. Then a poor old woman appeared, and looking up in her decrepitude asked for alms. And a woman who had not taken part in the rivalry gave her alms. And all the women resolved to leave to this beggar the question as to which of all the hands present was the most attractive, and she said: "The most beautiful of them all is the one that gave relief to my necessities," and as she so said her wrinkles and rags and her decrepitude and her body disappeared, and in place thereof stood the Christ who long ago said, "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these, ye did it to me!" and who to purchase the service of our hand and foot here on earth or in resurrection state, had his own hand and foot lacerated.

They Couldn't Play it on Him.

"I think the so-called sharpers of New York City are the most unprogressive robbers in the country, for they try to work strangers by the same tricks they played thirty years ago," said a St. Louis lawyer to a reporter recently in the Hoffman House. A few weeks ago an ancient trick was attempted on my friend and fellow attorney on the Wabash legal staff. My associate is young and has a Western look, facts which the dull-brained Gotham crook took as evidences of verdancy. When the St. Louis railroad lawyer entered New York City he went to the Wabash office, 320 Broadway, and thence to the Metropolitan Hotel, where he put up. When he walked out on the street after dinner a well-dressed fellow approached him and said cordially, 'Let me see, I sold you a bill of goods once. Your name is ——?' 'Johnson,' said the St. Louis lawyer, taking in the situation and giving that false name. 'Yes, Johnson,' said the New Yorker, 'and you'er in the——' 'Gimlet business at St. Louis,' said my friend, seeing that the man wanted his business and city. 'Yes, the gimlet business at St. Louis,' said the crook. 'Where are you stopping?" 'At the Metropolitan,' said my friend. 'Yes, yes,' said my friend, his eye twinkling with Western humor as he spoke. 'I have just won a large prize in the Louisana Lottery, and would like to have you go with me and identify me at the New York office of the concern.' The crook bit his lips nervously, looked sharp at my friend as if he thought him a detective, made a blundering reply, and in less than a minute stepped into the crowd and disappeared."

Many Uses of Castor Oil.

The average boy has an idea that castor oil was got up for the torture of all kids who have careful mothers to protect them from the fell destroyer. He is mistaken, like a majority of grown people who only regard castor oil as a medicine. Only a very small proportion of it is consumed in that manner. Castor oil forms one of the best lubricators, and is used for greasing wagons and other purposes where the price does not prohibit it. Then it is burned as an illuminator, not only by the Jews for their Sabbath lamp, but elsewhere.

India, where large quantities of the seed are raised, the oil is added to the native condiments to flavor them. It is also made into an illuminating gas in India. In this country castor oil is used to dress Morocco leather. California, Kansas, Iowa and Illinois are the principal sections of this country where the seed is raised, and the castor oil presses at Belleville, Ills., are among the most extensive in the world.—Druggist in Globe-Democrat.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Tuesday Sept. 25.

SENATE.—The Senate passed private pension bills which were on the calendar to which there were no objections. Among the bills passed was a Senate bill granting a pension of $3,500 a year to the widow o Gen. P. H. Sheridan. Mr. Berry said he was opposed to the bill, but would not make any argument against it, contenting himself with voting "no" on its passage, which he did.

HOUSE.—The House passed an amendment to the naval academy bill declaring that hereafter the minimum age for the admission of a cadet to the academy shall be 16 years and the maximum age 21 years.

The house passed a joint resolution, accepting the invitation of the imperial German government to the United States government to become a party to the international geodetic association.

Mr. Hitt called up the joint resolution, requesting the president to negotiate with the government of Mexico for the creation of an international commission to determine all questions touching the boundary line between the two countries.

Wednesday Sept. 26.

SENATE.—The resolution of Mr. Sherman, which authorizes the senate committee on foreign relations to sit during the recess and to make an inquiry into the relations between the United States and Great Britain and Canada, was to-day reported back to the senate without recommendation. This means that the resolution is to be made the text of speeches, and it is not expected that it will serve any other purpose.

The retaliation bill has been referred to a subcommittee of the committee on foreign relations and that subcommittee, in a parliamentary sense, is "a nurse that cares not for it." There is no expectation in the committee or in the subcommittee that the bill will be reported to the senate unless it shall be with an unfavorable report. The expectation is that there will be no report.

HOUSE.—The house to-day passed the Northern Pacific forfeiture bill. The significant fact about this action is that it was taken without a word of debate. It would have been possible for the opponents of the bill to have prevented its passage by raising the point of no quorum; for there is no quorum, and is not likely to be one until next December. But no one is raising that point as to land grant forfeitures bills six weeks before election. A forfeiture bill of such magnitude has probably never before passed the house without material opposition or debate. Holman was not present. The bill now goes to the senate, where it will follow the ordinary course.

Thursday, Sept. 28.

SENATE—The senate committee on finance began the inquiry into the operations in this country of the French copper syndicate. The information obtained was that the syndicate took all the surplus copper produced in America and sold it abroad, paying the American companies one-half of the sum realized above 13 cents a pound and making the deficit good when the price realized was less than 13 cents, whether sold at home or abroad.

The feature of today's session of the Senate was a lively political debate over Mr. Chandler's resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election outrages. The discussion drifted into the political outrages in Texas. An acrimonious debate ensued between Senators Coke and Spooner.

The Senate committee on finance resumed the reading of the tariff bill for an hour yesterday, and has now progressed to page 135, the first 87 pages being the Mills bill.

HOUSE.—After concluding the testimony the committee investigating the charges against Stahlnecker went into secret session, and a few minutes resolved unanimously to report to the house that it found the charges against the accused to be unsustained.

Friday, Sept. 28.

SENATE.—The senate committee on finance devoted four hours to the reading of the new tariff bill to-day and reached the end at half past 3. Senator Harris expects to receive from Senator Beck on Monday the latter's suggestions in regard to the minority report and to be able to submit them to the committee by Wednesday.

HOUSE.—Mr. Rice of Minnesota presented in the house the report of the special committee which has investigated the charges against Representatives Stahlnecker of New York in connection with the new library building. The report finds the charge not sustained, and says the committee is satisfied that Mr. Kelley, who set on foot the inquiry, was actuated by the most honorable motives and a sincere desire to vindicate the honesty of the house.

The work of the house is substantially at an end. The deficiency is the last of the appropriation bills, and it is the opinion of both sides of the house that nothing more will be attempted at this session. The Democrats are understood to have agreed upon the policy that no more bills which appropriate money shall be permitted to pass, and that no bills of any nature shall be brought up except it be some bill for a bridge or a right of way. The colorless bills which can be passed by unanimous consent have been nearly all passed. The calendars of the house and of the committees are filled with bills, but they are bills as to which there will be controversies and which are certain not to pass in the absence of a quorum.

Monday, Oct. 1.

SENATE.—The senate has formally entered upon the discussion of the bill to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific railway, and it is easy to determine what the result will be. If any bill passes it will be the senate substitute for the house bill. The house bill forfeits all the lands granted to the company except such as are adjacent to that portion of the road that was constructed prior to July 4, 1870. The senate bill forfeits only those portions of the grant which appertain to and are co-terminous with that part of the line which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act.

HOUSE.—A resolution was introduced in the house and referred directing the secretary of the treasury to inquire as to the awarding of contracts of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) public building; also a bill by Mr. Sowden, of Pennsylvania, for the appointment of a sub-committee to proceed to Chicago to inspect the postoffice and to ascertain the necessity of its enlargement. The message of the president announcing his approval of the Chinese bill was presented, read and referred to the committee on foreign affairs. Unsuccessful attempts were made to put upon their passage general public building bills.

A Dead Man's Finger.

"I got a two guinea fee for a dead man's finger," said a well-known Louisville physician. "An old negro woman who claims to be a great voudoo doctor has been pestering me with a request for such an article, and finally I went to the dissecting room of a medical college and procured it. She gladly paid the money for it, too. She makes a very efficacious charm—so she claims—in which the dead finger is the principal ingredient. The charm is said to be a sure mascot for those who want to win on horse races. Put the charm in your pocket and you can't help picking the winner—so the old woman says. She was very anxious, therefore, for me to sell her the finger before the races were over, and was greatly gratified when I did so."—Louisville Post.

A man was arrested as Tascott at Denver, Col. He gave his name as Edward J. Carter. He had worked here two weeks as a bartender. The police have released Carter on the ground that his resemblance to Tascott, though presenting many striking coincidences, was not complete.

A large silk balloon was found on Cumberland hill, R. I. The address "Carl Myers, Mohawk, N. Y.," was on it and there was a bit of a Buffalo newspaper pinned to the basket, on which was penciled, "Met our death in the clouds."

The New York Sun announces that Sir Morell Mackenzie's counterblast to the German medicos is to be published simultaneously in London, Paris and Berlin, and that the American publication of Dr. Mackenzie's work is exclusively in the hands of the Sun, one day before its publication in Europe.

Republican Gatlings.

Free Thought and Free Speech Forever.

When a white Republican in the South actively engages in politics, he is apt to and generally becomes a stench in the nostrils of the respectable element of the community in which he lives.—From the Memphis Scimitar.

The President's Check.

Harper's Weekly regrets the fact—if it is a fact—that the President has contributed $10,000 to the Democratic campaign fund. We fail to detect any cause for regret or anything inconsistent with a genuine reform of civil service. Political expenses must be met in some way.—From the Louisville Courier-Journal (Dem.)

Honest but Imprudent.

The bold declarations of Judge Thurman against tariff of every description entitle him to the thanks of the Republican party. The judge is no hypocrite; he knows his party text and he sticks to it like a man, without deception or evasion. Let Mr. Cleveland follow his courageous example.—Philadelphia Press.

Democratic Consistency.

How these brethren do dwell together in unity! In a horn they do, but nowhere else. Says Mr. Jones in his mugwump New York Times: Nobody teaches that the full amount of the duty is added to the price of the protected domestic products. I suppose that it is needless to explain that all these duties and assessments are added to the price of the articles upon which they are levied.

How the Temperance Men Will Vote.

The chances do not look as favorable for a large Prohibitionist vote in New Hampshire as usual. That vote has fallen off in Vermont and in Maine in comparison with figures of 1886. There are peculiar reasons why it may in New York. The Democrats have nominated in Governor Hill, a man particularly objectionable to the temperance men. Boston Herald (Mugwump).

Democracy Defined.

The assault upon our protective system is open and defiant. Protection is assailed as unconstitutional in law, or as vicious in principle, and those who hold such views sincerely cannot stop short of an absolute elimination from our tariff laws of the principle of protection. The Mills bill is only a step, but it is toward an object that the legislation have clearly in mind. The important question is not so much the length of the step as the direction of it.—General Harrison's Letter.

A Sensible Workingman.

Said a Democratic workingman in New York the other day: I would rather pay one cent more for a dinner pail and establish an industry worth $30,000,000 annually to this nation than continue to support 100,000 Englishmen in making tin plate, when that number of Americans want employment." The argument is sound. It is sound from the workingman's standpoint, especially, and it is sound from the standpoint of every intelligent American citizen.

A Little Fable

New York Tribune: Once there was a man who got caught out in the rain. He was hailed by Noah as he sailed by in his ark. At the time Noah hailed the man the man was standing tip-toe on top of a flag staff which was planted on the roof of the tallest building that the man could find. But even then the man, at the time Noah hailed him was up to his chin in the water. "How does the wet weather suit you?" inquired Noah. "Oh," replied the man, "I really hadn't noticed any humidity to speak of.

Moral—This fable teaches what The Evening Post means when it says that "the Democrats are satisfied with the Maine election."

How Maine Went.

Just for the encouragement of the Democratic brethren, who still continue to discuss the political situation down in Maine, the central facts of the situation are given as follows.

1. Ever congressional district in the state was carried by an average plurality of about 5,000.
2. Every county in the state elected, for the first time in years, a Republican to the State Senate.
3. Every county in the state also gave a plurality for the state ticket.
4. The plurality in the entire state was about 22,000.
5. The majority over all was something less than 18,000; when the Republican managers gave it out cold a few days before the election that they confidently expected 12,000.
6. The total Prohibition vote in Maine—the mother of the Prohibition movement—was 2,000.

Now, it is not worth while for our Democratic friends to get out of temper and sulk. The truth is that four years of Democratic experiment has furnished sufficient amusement for the American people, and they have determined to quit, and return to the virtuous in government.

Not Free Traders O, No

Speaker Carlisle—All trade should be as free as possible.

Grover Cleveland—I believe in free trade.

Roger Q. Mills—I desire free trade, and I will not help to perfect any law that stands in the way of free trade.

Henry Watterson—The Democratic party is a free-trade party or it is nothing. The Democrat who is not a free-trader should go elsewhere.

Secretary Fairchild—Add to the free list as many articles as possible. Reduce duties upon every dutiable article to the lowest point possible.

Congressman Hare—If we did not require money to defray the expenses of government I would be an absolute and uncompromising free trader.

Henry George—Mr. Cleveland stands before the country a champion of free trade. Mr. Mills' speech is a manly, vigorous and most effective free trade speech.

S. S. Cox—It would be a glorious consummation of this debate could we only have gentlemen on the other side join in this invocation to paper and type and to the hearts of honest men to clear the way for British Cobden free trade.

What the Republican Party has Done.

It subdued Rebellion and saved the Union.

It conquered war and established peace.

It gave freedom to a race and a free ballot to all men.

It was patriotic enough to create a debt to carry on war and honest enough to make provision to pay that debt.

It made liberty universal throughout the States and the flag honored throughout the world.

It made treason odious and loyalty the badge of respected citizenship.

It raised the nation from bankruptcy and secured for our public credit the faith of the financial world.

It made persons and property freedom of thought and of expression secure in every part of the land.

It has dignified labor and secured its rightful reward by protective tariff laws.

It has practically given each citizen a free home by securing the public domain from the monopoly of capital.

It has, by a rigid supervision of corporate franchise, made transportation cheap, safe and rapid for persons and property.

It has, by wise economies and just laws, reduced the public debt and the interest upon it.

It has, by generous, and yet just, appropriation for pensions, illustrated its love and respect for the Nation's gallant defenders.

It has made competency a condition for appointment to office and fidelity to duty the tenure for holding it.

It has reduced the public expenditure to the lowest point consistent with the general welfare and collected the tax from sources best able to pay it.

It has made religious liberty more secure to all forms of faith by an enlightened public opinion and establish free schools with no sectarian denomination in them.

It has, by fidelity to public trust, by its constitutional amendments, by its statutory enactments, Federal and State, by the life and character of its long line of statesmen, heroes, orators and martyrs, by its sacred traditions, and its matchless history of great things accomplished, proven itself competent and worthy to achieve the great things yet to be done for the good and glory of the country.

HORRORS OF YELLOW FEVER.

A Few Statements from the Columns of Telegrams that Daily Fill the Papers about the Pestilence.

Language is inadequate to describe the scenes of misery, suffering and desolation that have followed the appearance of the yellow fever in the South.

A REIGN OF TERROR.

A portion of the railroad track between Harrison and Vicksburg has been torn up by frightened people in order to force trains to stop. There is good ground for believing the report true. There is scarcely any fear that any refugees will be able to reach Louisiana or New Orleans by river, for Jackson has been isolated and people from there have no means of reaching the Mississippi river. Vicksburg and Natchez have both quarantined most strictly, and roads connecting them with Jackson have been obliged to go out of business for the present. There is evidently a reign of terror in and about Jackson, and a gentleman on his way from Birmingham to Vicksburg, who was forced to come to New Orleans from Meridian, said recently that he never saw people so frightened as are Mississippians, who are panic stricken with fear that the scourge may become general in their state. Special trains, as required, will be sent to Jackson by the Illinois Central to carry North all who wish to go. At the meeting of the board of health the epidemic at Jackson, Miss., was discussed.

MEMPHIS VIGOROUSLY QUARANTINED.

The stringent quarantine regulations adopted by the city of Memphis went into effect on the 22d of Sept., and no passenger trains on any of the railroads on the east side of the Mississippi river can come nearer Memphis than ten miles. Cruel hardships of strict quarantine is being felt. The delayed passenger train from New Orleans, which was due at 9 o'clock in the morning, did not arrive at Lakeview, Miss., until 2 in the afternoon. By order of the Memphis authorities a train was stopped at Lakeview, and a special train was sent there to convey the delayed passengers to their destination. A detail of police, together with two officials of the Louisville, New Orleans & Texas railway and associated press reporter went down to make the transfer. There were about two hundred passengers, mostly women and children who had hurriedly left New Orleans, Vicksburg, Greenville and other points. They were not fleeing from fever, but had been sent away to avoid a stampede that would follow if a case should appear at any of those places.

Many ladies were unaccompanied by their husbands, who had remained behind, and with their little ones were utterly helpless. The excitement which prevails all along the route from New Orleans to Memphis had proven contagious, and they were like so many frightened sheep. The coaches were crowded almost to suffocation, and many women and children were unable to secure seats.

CHATTANOOGA ACTS LIKEWISE.

Chattanooga has instituted a most stringent quarantine against all infected points. No one is permitted to enter the city on any of the nine railroads without giving a satisfactory account of himself. Quarantine officers board every train, and fifty are thus employed. The city council has adopted ordinances inflicting a fine of $500 on any person entering the city from any infected district. A large reward is offered for the apprehension and convictom of such offender and for the conviction of any one harboring such refugee. The Memphis & Charleston railroad trains stopping at Decatur or twenty miles either side are forbidden entrance into Chattanoogd. Meridian, Miss., was quarantined against owing to the report that cases of yellow fever had occurred there. All through passenger and freight trains on the Mobile & Ohio railroad were suspended recently, owing to quarantine restrictions in Mississippi, Tennessee and Kentucky.

THE SITUATION IN JACKSONVILLE.

JACKSONVILLE SEPT. 21.—Most of the new cases are among colored people in the suburbs. There are comparatively few deaths among the negroes, who usually recover rapidly from the disease. Total number of cases reported to date, 1,582; total deaths 196. It is impossible as yet to get definite information from Fenandina, but it is expected that advices from there will be at hand in a day or two. A high death rate is expected for several days. A special from Gainesville reports one new case there—a member of the guards who went to Fernandina. One of the most pathetic incidents of the pestilence occurred. A little nine-year-old boy named Stock was brought in from the sand hills, where he had recovered from the yellow fever. Making his way to his home, he was told that his father, mother and sister had all fallen victims to the dread disease. He is a bright little fellow, and will be cared for by a gentleman who was a patient near him in the hospital. Romance mixes with our woe now and then. Miss Hattit L. Kidd, who stood at her post at the telephone office till she caught the fever is now well, but all her family have died. To-day she was married to B. W. Owen, the head of the relief committee. They were betrothed and Nov. 15 was set as the day, but as she refused to leave the city without her lover they were married. Another sad story was told to-day. Two young girls died at the Sand Hills last night. They had been very ill but were convalescent and were doing very well. Their mother, who had been sick at St. Luke's hospital, died there the day before. Yesterday by accident the younger of the two sisters obtained a copy of the Times-Union in which the mother's death was recorded. She went weeping to her sister, and, weakened by her excitement and grief, fell down at her sister's feet in dead faint. The sisters were seized with convulsions and had a relapse. Both died soon afterward. The official report to-day shows 118 new cases of yellow fever and fourteen deaths.

JACKSONVILLE, SEPT. 22.—There is no change in the situation to-day, except that the record has been beaten in the number of new cases. Five weeks ago, when the fever broke out, a white man who had only been married twelve months, was taken ill and died. At the time of his death his wife became a mother. Last night she died of yellow fever after a few days' illness, and the poor little five weeks' old babe is left without a relative in the place. When the clergyman who was there spoke about the future of the little orphan, he was told that all the women in the neighborhood were already quarreling as to who should have charge of the baby. When the train left for Hendersonville it bore away a cur. He left without means his wife who was sick with yellow fever and three little children. His wife is dead now, and his children would have starved had not strangers cared for them. The amount of money that is used here surprised even the officers themselves.

JACKSONVILLE, SEPT. 23.—A funeral silence reigns to-day. No church bells tell us that it is Sunday; in fact, the only thing to indicate the day is that there are not so many negroes on the street and around the commissionary rooms as at other times. The traffic on the streets consists of doctors' gigs and hearses. This morning's report seemed more favorable than yesterday morning's. There is also a little encouragement gleaned from the fact that yesterday's death rate was low, though there were more cases than ever before. There is much ill-feeling against a certain marine hospital surgeon, and it is probable that the surgeon general will be asked to recall him.

JACKSONVILLE, SEPT. 24.—Col. J. J. Daniels has at last succumbed. He is down with yellow fever. His brother, Dr. Dr. Daniels, who has got over the fever, is still too ill to leave his bed. Dr. Stollenwerke found six cases of fever at the jail today, and, as it is pretty small and very badly ventilated, he thinks the balance of the unfortunate prisoners—twenty-eight—will all be ill. Another of the telegraph operators, Mrs. Bixkner, who has been here two weeks, from New Orleans, was taken ill, making in all seven who are now sick. Yellow fever is at Fernandina. Dr. Maxwell, who is now in town, received a telegram saying that his nephew has it, and asking that two nurses be sent at once. A special train has been sent away with nurses. This is the first official acknowledgement of yellow fever there. Fernandina would not allow any one except nurses to come from Jacksonvile.

MEMPHIS ISOLATED.

MEMPHIS, TENN., SEPT. 24.—An armed force composed of members of the Chickasaw Guards, Memphis Merchant Zouaves and Schorr Zouaves guards the roads leading into Memphis. There are thirteen picket stations and a detail of six men for each station was made this afternoon, and the soldier boys placed on duty. The board of health authorities determined to place the same restrictions on the railroads west of the Mississippi river as have been enforced against those on the east side.

Indian Row at Standing Rock.

A special from Standing Rock Indian agency says: Sitting Bull was very active in getting the Indians to attend the great powwow. He feels slighted that Chief Justice John Grass is to be sent to Washington instead of himself, and gave vent to his feelings as follows:

My faithful brethern, the pale faces are eager to possess our rightful belongings. For many years the white man has come, and steadily moved us from place to place, until now we have but a mere patch of ground to live on. Soon we shall not have enough ground to stretch our tepees and rest our limbs. The whites were tricky in their former treaties. We have found that we cannot place any faith in what they promise. They are like a snake in the grass, and will snap at you unawares. We have sent our brother, John Grass, to Washington, our Great Father's home. If our brother proves treacherous, fearful shall be the fate in store for him. My brethern, I do not bear any malace toward my fellow warrior, but his eye is wicked.

At the close of Sitting Bull's address he was greeted with tremendous applause. Black Thunder, the next orator, said:

Brothers, these men, they call commissioners, come here with a paper for us to sign. The signing of this harmless-looking document takes our lands from us. No sensible Indian will sign it. I have spoken, I shall not sign.

The Indians listened to Black Thunder with bated breath and at his abrupt conclusion he was greeted with deafening cheers. When the paplause abated sufficiently young White Cloud, a graceful, handsome Sioux, ascended the little knoll of ground used as a speaker's stand and said:

I have listened to the talks of our old leaders, Sitting Bull and Black Thunder. They are opposed to the treaty. They speak too hastily and rashly. Their words should be carefully weighed and considered before leaving the tongue. They know not what they say. The treaty is for our benefit, and I, for one, shall sign.

A dead calm followed the defiant utterances of the young brave's short speech. At last Sitting Bull slowly arose. He majestically wrapped the folds of his red blanket about him, and with a great sweep of his right arm made a sign to his followers. Then, as one man, the entire horde arose and dashed en masse towards the young Indian. His fate was surely sealed had not Chief Gall appeared and peremptorily demanded order and silence. His sudden and unexpected appearance had a soothing effect upon the Indians. His brawny arms were raised aloft, and the Indians suddenly dispersed to their wagons and ponies. Gall then called upon the braves to inform him what this unseemly demonstration was. Here Sitting Bull silently sneaked away, the young, heroic speaker followed, leaving Black Thunder alone to face the ire of Gall. Black Thunder made a feeble explanation of his and his followers' action. Gall's face turned perfectly livid with pent-up passion "What mean you?" he almost screamed. "Is not this council for you all to express your respective opinions? Begone!" he hissed to the crying Black Thunder, "and let me hear of no repetition of this." Black Thunder meekly strode to his pony, saddled and mounted him and bounded over the hill. The other Indians silently drove away to their homes. It is probable that Gall's sudden breaking up of the powwow will put an end to the holding of any further councils.

A Desperado Killed by a Woman.

The notorious "Lone Highwayman," who has for the past two years been a terror to travelers in the vicinity of Kerryville, Texas, and who has, without the assistance of a single confederate, repeatedly robbed stage coaches, rifled mail bags, and gone through as many as six commercial travelers in broad daylight without the slightest inconvenience or resistance, has been killed. He was short by Mrs. Lizzie Hay, at her home on the head prong of Rio Sabinal, Bandero county. Mrs. Hay's story of the killing is as follows: "Last Monday morning I was sitting on the floor in my room, when suddenly a man appeared on the front gallery. He had a red handkerchief tied around his hand, and a piece of black calico over his face. I said 'what do you want here?' He answered 'it is none of your business.' I then said 'get off that gallery or I'll kill you.' He laughed and said 'you're a plucky woman, but I'll have what I want out of this house, or burn it down over your head.' By this time I had a needle gun and he entered. I drew it down on him within eighteen inches of the heart. But it snapped and he said. 'D— you I'll kill you,' at the same time producing a long, keen-bladed knife and aimed it at my throat. I warded off the blow, the next time he struck the end of the knife stuck in my forehead, making an ugly gash. At the same time I reversed ends of my gun and struck him over the head, felling him to the floor, and before he could rise, I had reversed the gun and pulled the trigger. This time it fired, the bullet taking effect in his left side. He gave an ugly yell and rolled out on the porch. I looked for another cartridge, but the blood was streaming down my face so I could not find them. I wiped it off with my apron and reloaded my gun. He had by this time almost reached his horse. I took good aim and fired, but I don't think I hit him. My husband was up in the Canon, but when he came home, a few hours after dark, he immediately organized a party of rangers. They trailed him for a distance of twenty miles by his blood and found him dead. His name is unknown, but he is recognized to be the same man whose bold depredations have for two years past terrorized the whole Bandero county."

The German Emperor's Schemes.

The activity of the German emperor appears to know no bounds, and of course is not looked upon altogether with approval by political cognoscenti at home and abroad. The obvious if not very flattering parallel between Wilhelm II. and the ultra eccentric parent of the great Frederick represents the opinion which intelligent foreigners appear to have formed of him, and the rather uncharitable conclusion arrived at that the symptoms of intolerance and unnatural restlessness which are exhibited so early in his reign will bring him all the sooner to the state of mind that rendered the latter years of his ancestor a curse to his country and his death a relief to all around him. One class of Germans, however, look with unmixed satisfaction upon the irrepressible "flea life," as it is privately termed, of the new kaiser, and hail with pleasure every manifestation of imperiousness and junkerism. The voters for Lebkenecht and their more or less open sympathizers candidly own that the popularity of the late Frederick, the general belief in his wishes to ameliorate the condition of the masses and gradually concede to the people a larger share in the government of the country, would have quieted the general clamor and deferred for years the uprising against the armed tyranny which they feel regards them merely as so much material for the advancement of the ambitious schemes of their hereditary masters. There are now, workmen, no inconsiderable number of the soldiery and many officers of the lower grades, kept always conscious that there is no relief from an existence scarcely better than that of the beasts, except by a concerted revolt, and that to enlightened men life on such conditions is unendurable. As for the emperor, the only sign that he has given of a change of purpose in any respect may be explained by the natural inference that he does not care to suffer his anti-English feelings to weigh against his interests. It is evident that his several interviews with the prince of Wales have resulted in the conclusion that England may be useful to him at no distant day, that its navy is a thing to be envied and its naval administration a matter worthy of study. He will hardly find that the mere adoption of the English naval uniform by the German Marine will make a race of sailors out of men who are not so by disposition.

A passenger train on the Southern Pacific was stopped near Harwood, Texas, by masked men, who compelled the engineer, at the point of a revolver to uncouple from the passenger coaches and pull out of the way. Conductor Shockelford was compelled to assist in uncoupling the engine. On the express car were United States Marshal John S. Ranking, with Deputy William Van Wiper and Detective J. G. Kelley, of the Southern Pacific. Other officers were on the train, the company having been warned of the attack, and all east-bound trains having been guarded by Marshal Rankin. The robbers were soon on the mail car, which was defended. The bandits returned the fire and no less than fifty shots were exchanged, when the baffled robbers fled, carring two of their wounded with them. There were ten in the gang.

Superfluities A Hinderance.

What Dr. Talmage had to Say on Sunday About Giants and Other Big Things.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., September 23.—The Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., preached in the Brooklyn tabernacle this morning on the subject, "Superfluities a hinderance." Several ocean steamers arrive in port Sunday mornings, and many of the passengers, browned by the sea, come directly from the wharf to the Brooklyn tabernacle. The great congregation, led by Prof. Ali's cornet and accompanied by the organ, at which Prof. Browne presides, joined in the opening hymn:

We are Thy people, we Thy care,
Our souls and all our mortal frame.
What lasting honors shall we rear,
Almighty Maker, to Thy name?

Dr. Talmage's text was: "I Chronicles, Chap. xx., v. 6 and 7.

A man of great stature, whose fingers and toes were four and twenty, six on each hand and six on each foot; and he also was the son of the giant. But when he defied Israel, Jonathan, the son of Shimea, David's brother, slew him.

Malformation photographed, and for what reason? Did not this passage slip in by mistake into the sacred scriptures, as sometimes a paragraph utterly obnoxious to the editor gets into his newspaper during his absence? Is not this scriptural error? No, no; there is nothing haphazard about the Bible. This passage of scripture was as certainly intended to be put in the Bible as the passage, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth;" or, "God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten son."

And I select it for my text today because it is charged with practical and tremendous meaning. By the people of God the Philistines had been conquered, with the exception of a few giants. The race of giants is mostly extinct, I am glad to say. There is no use for giants now except to enlarge the income of museums. But there was many of them in olden times. Goliath was, according to the Bible, 11 feet 3½ inches high. Or, if you do not believe the Bible, the famous Pliny, a secular writer, declares that at Crete by an earthquake a monument was broken open, discovering the remains of a giant 46 cubits long, or 69 feet high. So, whether you prefer sacred or profane history, you must come to the conclusion that there were in those olden times cases of human altitude monstrous and appalling. David had smashed the skull of one of these giants, but there were other giants that these Davidean wars had not get subdued, and one of them stands in my text. He was not only of Alpine stature, but had a surplus of digits. To the ordinary fingers was annexed an additional finger, and the foot had also a superfluous addendum. He had 24 terminations to hands and feet where others have 20, it was not the only instance of the kind. Tavernier, the learned writer, says that the Emperor of Java had a son endowed with the same number of extremities. Volcatius, the poet, had six fingers on each hand. Maupetius in his celebrated letters speaks of two families near Berlin similarly equipped on both hand and foot. All of which I can believe, for I have seen two cases of the same physical superabundance. But this giant of the text is in battle, and as David, the dwarf warrior, had dispatched one giant, the brother of David, always this monster of my text, and there he lies after the battle in Gath, a dead giant. His stature did not save him and his superfluous appendices of hand and foot did not save him. The probability was that in the battle his sixth finger on his hand made him clumsy in the use of his weapon, and his sixth toe crippled his gait. Behold the prostrate and malformed giant of the text: "A man great of stature, whose fingers and toes were four and twenty, six on each hand, and six on each foot; and he also was the son of the giant. But when he defied Israel, Jonathan, the son of Shimea, David's brother, slew him."

Behold how superfluities are a hinderance rather than a help! In all the battle at Gath that day there was not a man with ordinary hand and ordinary foot and ordinary stature that was not better off than this physical curiosity of my text. As physical size is apt to run in families, the probability is that this brother of David, who did the work, was of an abbreviated stature. A dwarf on the right side is stronger than a giant on the wrong side, and all the body, and mind, and estate, and opportunity that you cannot use for God and the betterment of the world is a sixth finger and a sixth toe, and a terrific hindrance. The most of the good done in the world, and the most of those who win the battles for the right are ordinary people. Count the fingers of their right hand and they have five, no more and no less. One Dr. Duff among missionaries, but 8,000 missionaries that would tell you they have only common endowment. One Florence Nightingale to nurse the sick in conspicuous places, but 10,000 who are just as good nurses though never heard of. The Swamp Angel was a big gun that during the war made a big noise, but muskets of ordinary calibre and shells of ordinary heft did the execution. President Tyler and his cabinet go down the Potomac one day to experiment with the Peacemaker, a great iron gun that was to affright with its thunder, foreign natives. The gunner touches it off and it explodes and leaves cabinet ministers dead on the deck, while at that time all up and down our coasts were cannon of ordinary bore able to be the defense of the nation, and ready at the first touch to awaken to duty. The curse of the world is big guns. After the politicians who have made all the noise go home hoarse from angry discussion on the evening of the first Monday in November, the next day the people with the silent ballots will settle everything and settle it right, a million of the white slips of paper they drop making about as much noise as the fall of an apple blossom.

Clear back in the country to-day there are mothers in plain apron, and shoes on a rough last by the shoemaker at the lane, rocking babies that are to be the Martin Luthers, and the Faradays, and the Edisons, and the Bismarks, and the Gladstones, and the Washingtons, and the George Whitefields, of the year 1988 and who will make the twentieth century so bright that this much landed nineteenth in comparison will seem a part of the dark ages. The longer I live the more I like common folks. They do the world's work, bearing the world's burdens, weeping the world's sympathies, carrying the the world's consolation. Among lawyers we see rise up a Rufus Chote, or a William Wert, or a Samuel L. Southand, but society would go to pieces to-morrow if there were not thousands of common lawyers to see that men and women get their rights. A Valentine Mott or a Willard Parker rises up eminent in the medical profession, but what an unlimited sweep would pneumonia, and diphtheria, and scarlet fever have in the world if it were not for 10,000 common doctors. The old physician in his gig rolling up the lane of the farm house, or riding on horseback, his medicines in the saddle-bag, arriving on the ninth day of the fever, and coming in to take hold of the pulse of the patient, while the family, pale with anxiety, are looking on and waiting for his decision in regard to the patient, and hearing him say: "Thank God, I have mastered the case, he is getting well," excites in me an admiration quite equal to the mention of the names of the great metropolitan doctors, Pancoast or Gross or Joseph C. Hutchinson of the past, or the illustrious living men of the present.

Yet what do we see in all departments? People not satisfied with ordinary spheres of work and ordinary duties. Instead of trying to see what they can do with a hand of five fingers they want six. Instead of the usual endowment of 20 manual and pedal addenda they want 24. A certain amount of money for livelihood and for the supply of those whom we leave behind us after we departed this life is important, for we have the best authority for saying: "He that provideth not for his own, and especially those of his own household, is worse than an infidel." But the large and fabulous sums for which many struggle, if obtained, would be a hinderance rather than an advantage. The anxieties and annoyances that those have whose estates have become plethoric can only be told by those who possess them. It will be a good thing when through your industry and public prosperities you can own the house in which you live. But suppose you own 50 houses and you have all those rents to collect and all those tenants to please. Suppose you have branched out in business successes until in almost every direction you have investments. The fire bell rings at night; you rush upstairs to look out of the window to see if it is any of your mills. An epidemic of crime comes and there, are embezzlements and abscondings in all direction, and you wonder whether any of your bookkeepers will prove recreant. A panic strikes the financial world, and you are like a hen under a sky full of hawks, and trying with anxious cluck to get your overgrown chickens safely under wing. After a certain stage of success has been reached you have to trust so many important things to others that you are apt to become the prey of others, and you are swindled and defrauded, and the anxiety you had on your brow when you were earning your first thousand dollars is not equal to the anxiety on your brow now that you have won your three hundred thousand. The trouble with such a one is he is spread out like the unfortunate one in my text. You have more fingers and toes than you know what to do with. Twenty were useful, 24 is a hindering superfluity. Disraeli says that a King of Poland abdicated his throne and adjoined the people and became a porter to carry burdens. And some one asked him why he did so, and he replied: "Upon my honor, gentlemen, the load which I quit is by far heavier than the one you see me carry. The weightiest is but a straw when compared to that world under which I labored. I have slept more in four nights than I have during all my reign. I begin to live and to be a king myself. Elect whom you choose, for me who am so well it would be madness to return to court."

"Well," says somebody, "such overloaded persons ought to be pitied, for their worriments are real and their insomnia and their nervous prostration are genuine." I reply that they could get rid of the bothersome surplus by giving it away. If a man has more houses than he can carry without vexation, let him drop a few of them. If his estate is so great he cannot manage it without getting nervous dyspepsia from having too much, let him divide up with those who have nervous dyspepsia because they cannot get enough. No! they guard their sixth finger with more care than they did the original five. They go limping with what they call gout and know not that, like the giant of my text, they are lamed by a superfluous toe. A few of them by large charities bleed themselves of this financial obesity and momentary plethora, but many of them hang on to the hindering superfluity till death, and then as they are compelled to give the money up anyhow, in their last will and testament they generously give some of it to the Lord, expecting, no doubt, that He will feel very much obliged to them. Thank God that once in a while we have a Peter Cooper who, owning an interest in the iron works at Trenton, said to Mr. Lester: "I do not feel quite easy about the amount we are making. Working under one of our patents, we have a monopoly which seems to me something wrong. Everybody has to come to us for it and we are making money too fast." So they reduced the price and this while our philanthropist was building Cooper Institute, which mothers a hundred institutes of kindness and mercy all over the land. But the world had to wait 5,800 years for Peter Cooper. I am glad for the benevolent institutions that get a legacy from men who during their life were as stingy as death, but who in their last will and testament bestowed money on hospitals and missionary societies; but for such testators I have no respect. They would have taken every cent of it with them if they could; and bought up half of heaven and let it out at ruinous rent, or loaned the money to celestial citizens at 2 percent a month and got a corner on harps and trumpets. They lived in this world 50 or 60 years in the presence of appaling suffering and want and made no effort for their relief. The charities of such people are for the most part in "paulo-post future" tense and they are going to do them. The probability is that if such a one in his last will by a donation to benevolent societies tries to atone for his life-time closefistedness, the heirs at law will try to break the will by proving that the old man was senile or crazy, and the expense of the litigation will about leave in the lawyers' hands what was meant for the American Bible Society. O, ye overweighted successful business men, whether this sermon reach your ear or your eye, let me say that if you are prostrated with anxieties about keeping or investigating these tremendous fortunes, I can tell you how you can do more to get your health back and your spirits raised than by drinking gallons of bad-tasting water at Saratoga, Homburg or Carlisbad—give to God and humanity the Bible 10 per cent of all your income, and it will make a new man of you, and from restless walking of the floor at night you shall have eight hours sleep without the help of bromide of potassium, and from no appetite you will hardly be able to wait your regular meals, and your wan cheek will fill up, and when you die the blessings of those who but for you would have perished will bloom all over your grave with violets, if it be spring, or gladiolus, if it be autumn.

Perhaps some of you will take this advice, but the most of you will not. And you will try to cure your swollen hand by getting on it more fingers, and your rheumatic foot by getting on it more toes, and there will be a sigh of relief when you are gone out of the world; and when over your remains the minister recites the words: Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord," persons who have keen appreciation of the indicrous will hardly be able to keep their faces straight. But whether in that direction my words do good or not, I am anxious that all who have ordinary equipment be thankful for what they have and rightly employ it. I think you all have, figuratively as well as literally, fingers enough. Do not long for hindering superfluities. Standing in the presence of this fallen giant of my text and in their post-mortem examination of him, let us learn how much better off we are with just the usual foot. You have thanked God for a thousand things, but I warrant you never thanked him for those two implements of work and locomotion that no one but the Infinite and Omnipotent God could have ever planned or made, the hand and foot. Only that soldier or mechanic who in battle or through machinery has lost them knows anything about their value, and only the Christian scientist can have any appreciation of what divine masterpieces they are. Sir Charles Bell, the English surgeon, on the battlefield of Waterloo, while engaged in amputations of the wounded, was so impressed with the wondrous construction of the human hand that when the Earl of Bridgewater gave $40,000 for essays on the wisdom and goodness of God, and eight books were written, Sir Charles Bell wrote his entire book on the wisdom and goodness of God as displayed in the human hand. The 27 bones in hand and wrist with cartilages and ligaments and phalanges of the fingers all made just ready to knit, to sew, to build up, to pull down, to weave, to write, to plow, to pound, to wheel, to battle, to give friendly salutation. The tips of its fingers are so many telegraph offices by reason of their sensitiveness of touch. The bridges, the tunnels, the cities of the whole earth are the victories of the hand. The hands are not dumb, but often speak as distinctly as the lips. With our hands we invite, we repel, we invoke, we entreat, we wring them in grief or clap them in joy, or spread them abroad in benediction. The malformation of the giant's hand in the text glorifies the usual hand. Fashioned of God more exquisitely and wondrously than any human mechanism that was ever contrived, I charge you use it for God and the lifting of the world out of its moral predicament. Employ it in the sublime Work of gospel handshaking. You can see the hand is just made for that. Four fingers just set right to touch your neighbor's hand on one side and your thumb set so as to clench it on the other side. By all its bones, and joints, and muscles, and cartilages, and ligaments, the voice of nature joins with the voice of God commanding you to shake hands. The custom is as old as the Bible, anyhow. Jehu said to Jehonadab: "Is thine heart right as my heart is with thine heart? If it be, give me thine hand." When hands join in Christian salutation a gospel electricity thrills across the palm from heart to heart, and from the shoulder of one to the shoulder of the other. Shake hands all around. With the timid and for their encouragement, shake hand. With the troubled, and in warm-hearted sympathy, shake hands. With the young man just entering business, and discouraged at the small sales and the large expenses, shake hands. With the child who is now from God, and started on an unending journey for which he needs to gather great supply of strength, and who can hardly reach up to you now, because you are so much taller, shake hands. Across cradles and dying beds and graves, shake hands. With your enemies who have done all to defame and hurt you, but whom you can afford to forgive, shake hands. At the door of churches where people come in, and at the door of churches where people go out, shake hands. Let pulpit shake hands with pew, and Sabbath day shake hands with week day, and earth shake hands with heaven. Oh the strange, the mighty, the undefined, the mysterious, the eternal power of an honest handshaking. The difference between these times and the millennial times is that now some shake hands but then all will shake hands, throne and footstool, across seas nation, with nation, God and man, church militant and church triumphant.

Yes; the malformation of this fallen giant's foot glorifies the ordinary foot, for which I fear you have never once thanked God. The 26 bones of the foot are the admiration of the anatomist. The arch of the foot fashioned with a grace and a poise that Trojan's arch at Beneventum, or Constantine's arch at Rome of the Arch of Triumph at the end of Champs Elysees could not equal. Those arches stand where they were planted, but this arch of the foot is an adjustable arch, a yielding arch, a flying arch, and ready for movements innumerable. The human foot so fashioned as to enable man to stand upright as no other creature, and leave the hand that would otherwise have to help in balancing the body free for anything it chooses. The foot of the camel fashioned for the sand, the foot of the bird fashioned for the tree branch, the foot of the lion fashioned to rend its prey, the foot of the horse fashioned for the solid earth, but the foot of man made to cross the desert, or climb the tree, or scale the cliff, or walk the earth, or go anywhere he needs to go. With that divine triumph of anatomy in your possession, where do you walk? In what path of righteousness or what path of sin have you set it down? Where have you left the mark of your footsteps? Amid the petrifications in the rocks have been found the mark of the feet of birds and beasts of thousands of years ago. And God can trace out all the footsteps of your lifetime, and those you made 50 years ago are as plain as those made in the last soft weather, all of them petrified for the judgment day. Oh, the foot! How divinely honored not only in its construction but in the fact that God represents himself in the Bible as having feet: "The clouds on the dust of His feet:" "Darkness was under His feet:) "The earth is My footstool." And representing cyclones and euroclydons and whirlwinds and hurricanes as winged creatures. He describes Himself as putting His foot on these monsters of the air and walking from pinion to pinion, saying: "He walketh upon the wings of the wind." "Thou hast put all things in order under His feet," cries the psalmist. Oh, the foot. Give me the autobiography of your foot from the time you stepped out of the cradle until to-day and I will tell your exact character now and what are your prospects for the world to come. That there might be no doubt about the fact that both these pieces of divine mechanism, hand and foot, belong to Christ's service, both hands of Christ and both feet of Christ were spiked on the cross. Right through the arch of both His feet to the hollow of His footstep went the iron of torture, and from the palm of His hand to the back of it, and there is not a muscle or nerve or among the 27 bones of hand and wrist, or among the 26 bones of the foot but it belongs to Him now and forever. Charles Reade, the great writer, lost the joint of his forefinger by feeding a bear. Look out that your whole hand gets not into the maw of the old Cerberus of perdition. Sir Thomas Trowbridge, at the battle of Inkermann, lost his foot and when the soldiers would carry him away, he said, "No, I do not move until the battle is won." So if our foot be lamed or lost let it be in the service of our God, our home or our country.

That is the most beautiful foot that goes about paths of greatest usefulness, and that the most beautiful hand that does the most to help others. I was reading of three women who were in rivalry about the appearance of the hand. And the one reddened her hand with berries, and said the beautiful tinge made her's the most beautiful. And another put her hand in the mountain brook, and said as the waters dripped off, that her hand was the most beautiful. And another plucked flowers off the bank, and under the bloom contended that her hand was the most attractive. Then a poor old woman appeared, and looking up in her decrepitude asked for alms. And a woman who had not taken part in the rivalry gave her alms. And all the women resolved to leave to this beggar the question as to which of all the hands present was the most attractive, and she said: "The most beautiful of them all is the one that gave relief to my necessities," and as she so said her wrinkles and rags and her decrepitude and her body disappeared, and in place thereof stood the Christ who long ago said, "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these, ye did it to me!" and who to purchase the service of our hand and foot here on earth or in resurrection state, had his own hand and foot lacerated.

They Couldn't Play it on Him.

"I think the so-called sharpers of New York City are the most unprogressive robbers in the country, for they try to work strangers by the same tricks they played thirty years ago," said a St. Louis lawyer to a reporter recently in the Hoffman House. A few weeks ago an ancient trick was attempted on my friend and fellow attorney on the Wabash legal staff. My associate is young and has a Western look, facts which the dull-brained Gotham crook took as evidences of verdancy. When the St. Louis railroad lawyer entered New York City he went to the Wabash office, 320 Broadway, and thence to the Metropolitan Hotel, where he put up. When he walked out on the street after dinner a well-dressed fellow approached him and said cordially, 'Let me see, I sold you a bill of goods once. Your name is ——?' 'Johnson,' said the St. Louis lawyer, taking in the situation and giving that false name. 'Yes, Johnson,' said the New Yorker, 'and you'er in the——' 'Gimlet business at St. Louis,' said my friend, seeing that the man wanted his business and city. 'Yes, the gimlet business at St. Louis,' said the crook. 'Where are you stopping?' 'At the Metropolitan,' said my friend. 'Yes, yes;' said my friend, his eye twinkling with Western humor as he spoke. 'I have just won a large prize in the Louisana Lottery, and would like to have you go with me and identify me at the New York office of the concern.' The crook bit his lips nervously, looked sharp at my friend as if he thought him a detective, made a blundering reply, and in less than a minute stepped into the crowd and disappeared."

Many Uses of Castor Oil.

The average boy has an idea that castor oil was got up for the torture of all kids who have careful mothers to protect them from the fell destroyer. He is mistaken, like a majority of grown people who only regard castor oil as a medicine. Only a very small proportion of it is consumed in that manner. Castor oil forms one of the best lubricators, and is used for greasing wagons and other purposes where the price does not prohibit it. Then it is burned as an illuminator, not only by the Jews for their Sabbath lamp, but elsewhere.

India, where large quantities of the seed are raised, the oil is added to the native condiments to flavor them. It is also made into an illuminating gas in India. In this country castor oil is used to dress Morocco leather. California, Kansas, Iowa and Illinois are the principal sections of this country where the seed is raised, and the castor oil presses at Belleville, Ills., are among the most extensive in the world.—Druggist in Globe-Democrat.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Tuesday Sept. 25.

SENATE.—The Senate passed private pension bills which were on the calendar to which there were no objections. Among the bills passed was a Senate bill granting a pension of $3,500 a year to the widow o Gen. P. H. Sheridan. Mr. Berry said he was opposed to the bill, but would not make any argument against it, contenting himself with voting "no" on its passage, which he did.

HOUSE.—The House passed an amendment to the naval academy bill declaring that hereafter the minimum age for the admission of a cadet to the academy shall be 16 years and the maximum age 21 years.

The house passed a joint resolution, accepting the invitation of the imperial German government to the United States government to become a party to the international geodetic association.

Mr. Hitt called up the joint resolution, requesting the president to negotiate with the government of Mexico for the creation of an international commission to determine all questions touching the boundary line between the two countries.

Wednesday Sept. 26.

SENATE.—The resolution of Mr. Sherman, which authorizes the senate committee on foreign relations to sit during the recess and to make an inquiry into the relations between the United States and Great Britain and Canada, was to-day reported back to the senate without recommendation. This means that the resolution is to be made the text of speeches, and it is not expected that it will serve any other purpose.

The retaliation bill has been referred to a subcommittee of the committee on foreign relations and that subcommittee, in a parliamentary sense, is "a nurse that cares not for it." There is no expectation in the committee or in the subcommittee that the bill will be reported to the senate unless it shall be with an unfavorable report. The expectation is that there will be no report.

HOUSE.—The house to-day passed the Northern Pacific forfeiture bill. The significant fact about this action is that it was taken without a word of debate. It would have been possible for the opponents of the bill to have prevented its passage by raising the point of no quorum; for there is no quorum, and is not likely to be one until next December. But no one is raising that point as to land grant forfeitures bills six weeks before election. A forfeiture bill of such magnitude has probably never before passed the house without material opposition or debate. Holman was not present. The bill now goes to the senate, where it will follow the ordinary course.

Thursday, Sept. 28.

SENATE.—The senate committee on finance began the inquiry into the operations in this country of the French copper syndicate. The information obtained was that the syndicate took all the surplus copper produced in America and sold it abroad, paying the American companies one-half of the sum realized above 13 cents a pound and making the deficit good when the price realized was less than 13 cents, whether sold at home or abroad.

The feature of today's session of the Senate was a lively political debate over Mr. Chandler's resolution for the investigation of the Louisiana election outrages. The discussion drifted into the political outrages in Texas. An acrimonious debate ensued between Senators Coke and Spooner.

The Senate committee on finance resumed the reading of the tariff bill for an hour yesterday, and has now progressed to page 135, the first 87 pages being the Mills bill.

HOUSE.—After concluding the testimony the committee investigating the charges against Stahlnecker went into secret session, and a few minutes resolved unanimously to report to the house that it found the charges against the accused to be unsustained.

Friday, Sept. 28.

SENATE.—The senate committee on finance devoted four hours to the reading of the new tariff bill to-day and reached the end at half past 3. Senator Harris expects to receive from Senator Beck on Monday the latter's suggestions in regard to the minority report and to be able to submit them to the committee by Wednesday.

HOUSE.—Mr. Rice of Minnesota presented in the house the report of the special committee which has investigated the charges against Representatives Stahlnecker of New York in connection with the new library building. The report finds the charge not sustained, and says the committee is satisfied that Mr. Kelley, who set on foot the inquiry, was actuated by the most honorable motives and a sincere desire to vindicate the honesty of the house.

The work of the house is substantially at an end. The deficiency is the last of the appropriation bills, and it is the opinion of both sides of the house that nothing more will be attempted at this session. The Democrats are understood to have agreed upon the policy that no more bills which appropriate money shall be permitted to pass, and that no bills of any nature shall be brought up except it be some bill for a bridge or a right of way. The colorless bills which can be passed by unanimous consent have been nearly all passed. The calendars of the house and of the committees are filled with bills, but they are bills as to which there will be controversies and which are certain not to pass in the absence of a quorum.

Monday, Oct. 1.

SENATE.—The senate has formally entered upon the discussion of the bill to forfeit certain lands granted to the Northern Pacific railway, and it is easy to determine what the result will be. If any bill passes it will be the senate substitute for the house bill. The house bill forfeits all the lands granted to the company except such as are adjacent to that portion of the road that was constructed prior to July 4, 1879. The senate bill forfeits only those portions of the grant which appertain to and are co-terminous with that part of the line which shall not have been constructed at the date of the passage of this act.

HOUSE.—A resolution was introduced in the house and referred directing the secretary of the treasury to inquire as to the awarding of contracts of the Brooklyn (N. Y.) public building; also a bill by Mr. Sowden, of Pennsylvania, for the appointment of a sub-committee to proceed to Chicago to inspect the postoffice and to ascertain the necessity of its enlargement. The message of the president announcing his approval of the Chinese bill was presented, read and referred to the committee on foreign affairs. Unsuccessful attempts were made to put upon their passage general public building bills.

A Dead Man's Finger.

"I got a two guinea fee for a dead man's finger," said a well-known Louisville physician. "An old negro woman who claims to be a great voudoo doctor has been pestering me with a request for such an article, and finally I went to the dissecting room of a medical college and procured it. She gladly paid the money for it, too. She makes a very efficacious charm—so she claims—in which the dead finger is the principal ingredient. The charm is said to be a sure mascot for those who want to win on horse races. Put the charm in your pocket and you can't help picking the winner—so the old woman says. She was very anxious, therefore, for me to sell her the finger before the races were over, and was greatly gratified when I did so."—Louisville Post.

While a game of base ball was in Dallas, Texas, a few days ago, a player, in attempting to steal second base, disappeared as suddenly and as completely as if the earth had swallowed him up. He had broken through the ground into an old well, the existence of which had been forgotten, and he was rescued standing up to his neck in icy water.

It is reported that a "devil fish" or ocean vampire, weighing fully two tons, was recently caught in a fishing seine on the Mexican coast near Tampico. When dead and spread out on the beach, it presented every appearance of an enormous bat or vampire. It was fifteen feet long and seventeen feet wide from the edges of the pectoral fins, and its mouth was five feet across.

The big beet-sugar factory of Claus Spreckles at Watsonville, Pa., wil begin operations on Sept. 15. Owing to the fact that the beets were not planted until late in the season, only 350 tons per day can be obtained, the works having a capacity of 700 tons. There are 163 farmers, with 2,300 acres of land, under contract for this season, but the acreage of the supply will be doubled by next year.

An enormous wave is reported to have struck the beach at Baracoa, in Cuba, recently and flowed inland for a distance of 400 feet before it retired. It destroyed in its course nearly 300 huts and houses, but happily no lives, as the inhabitants saw it coming and fled to the nearest hill. Curiously enough, the wave was neither tidal nor due to earthquake disturbance, but, it is stated, to a north wind which had blown for three successive days.

A romantic story, in which a young man saves a girl from drowning, is rewarded by her father, and afterward left heir to $15,000 by the father's will, has come to light in New Haven, Conn. The young man is Charles W. Selke, 22 years of age, a mechanic. Mr. Selke made a promise not to disclose the name of his benefactor, and now says that a condition imposed in the will will probably prevent his accepting the money. He refuses to make known the conditions, but it is conjectured that it calls for his marrying the girl.

A young lady who passed several weeks at a noted country hotel was obliged, on the account of pressure for room, to occupy a bedroom on the ground floor which was ventilated from only one window. As the air was very close and sultry she opened this one evening, with the intention of partly closing it later on. Lying down on her couch for a temporary rest, her fatigue so overcame her that she slept the sleep of the just until after three in the morning. Getting up hastily to adjust matters she discovered that she was not the only occupant of the room, for three hens were quietly roosting on the footboard of her bed. They had entered through the window, without, however, any fowl intent, and so quietly that the sound sleeper was not disturbed.

The continued absence of the Swedish minister from the city, as well as his secretary of legation, has led to a great deal of talk in diplomatic circles, and as the members of the corps return to Washington, all sorts of rumors are heard as to the reasons which lead to the long absence of the two gentlemen. The reason which is generally believed is that the Swedish government is chagrined over the action of secretary Bayard and Commissioner of navigation Morton on account of the non-action of these gentlemen in the matter of demand of the Swedish government for lower tonnage dues. The argument was presented to the secretary of state as long ago as March, 1887, and no reply has been transmitted, and, as a consequence, it is believed here that Sweden has determined to allow herself to be unrepresented at the capital of the United States until the answer to the last communication is forthcoming.

Sheriff Bsitto of Cameron county, with eighty men, the deputy sheriff of Hidalgo county, with forty-five men, and the sheriff of San Patricio county, with thirty men, have arrived at Rio Grand City, Texas. An additional force from Uvalde county is expected, also a company of state soldiers. Everything remains very quiet. No further trouble is expected unless Garza dies, but his physician still thinks he may pull through.

An elopement of a sensational nature occurred at Silver Stream, a little village west of Winnipeg. John Floyd, of that place, started out one night with his wife and children for the States. They were accompanied by Miss Phoebe Ross, who was to see them off at the station and then return. As she did not come back, her father made inquiries and found that Mr. Floyd had packed his wife and family off by the train to Michigan, or thereabouts, and had driven off south across the prairie, accompanied by Miss Ross. Mr. Ross has been hunting for the fugitives but no trace can be found as yet.

Gust Lind, a cabinet maker sixty-two years old, took twenty-four grains of morphine at Albert Lea, Minn., and was found in the bed in a dying condition by his daughter, Mrs. Ellick Gustavson, a brickworker's wife, with whom he lived. He had been drinking lately and became despondent. On going to bed he told his daughter to bury him as she would find him dead in the morning as he should take poison. She told him he could not get it, not believing that he could, and tried to comfort him. He then had the morphine, however, and carried out his desperate purpose.

At Leech Lake, Minn., on Friday, Sept. 21st, while J. A. Thompson, the government blacksmith, was at work in the shop, he was attacked by an Indian named May-dway-gwon-o-nind. The Indian struck the blacksmith over the head with a large, heavy padlock and attemped to repeat the blow, saying, "I am going to kill you." The blacksmith seized a hammer but was prevented from using it by Indian by-standers. The blacksmith's wound is a serious one, the scalp being cut open in two places, one of the gashes being several inches in length. May-dway-gwon-o-nind has always been regarded as a desperate character and is feared by the Indians. He boasted before he went into the shop that he would kill the blacksmith and afterward the rest of the white men at the reservation. He is now under arrest, guarded by the physican and preacher. Thompson has returned from Brainerd. He could not get a warrant, the county attorney refusing to issue one.

Foreign Cullings.

The Sunday Times publishes a telegram from Vienna stating that the Princess of Wales and daughters, while driving in a pony carriage a day or two ago approached a level railway crossing heedless of the ringing of a electric bell giving warning of a coming train. The princess made no halt as she reached the crossing until two draw bars, worked by distant signal boxes, were lowered. These prevented either advance or retreat, and the train was rapidly nearing the crossing. Col. Clarke, who was attending the princess, leaped from the carriage, and, ducking under the bar, caught the pony by the head and turned him into a fence just as the train passed. The escape of the party from death was almost providential.

Accidents and Casualties.

The five-story brick brewery in East Fifty-fourth street, New York owned and occupied by the Henry Elias Brewing company, was completely destroyed by fire. The loss will reach about $600,000, with an insurance of only $200,000.

Lewis Sutherland purchased a box of "Rough-on-Rats" at Chippewa Falls, Wis., took it home and placed it on a shelf. His 4-year-old son noticed the box being placed there and succeeded with the aid of a stick in knocking it off. He helped himself to a liberal dose but was saved by a stomach pump.

The losses by prairie fires near Ellendale, Dak., during the past few days aggregate $50,000. Some hard battles have been fought by settlers in saving their property from destruction. Many narrow escapes from disaster and death are recorded, particularly between Ellendale and Ludden and around La Moure and Valley Junction. In a few instances farmers lost all their buildings and grain, while in scores of cases wheat and haystacks representing a whole season's toil and a considerable investment were consumed.

A terrible drowning accident happened five miles west of Brockville, Canada. H. A. Field, a hardware merchant; Henry Bugg, a bookkeeper, and Herbert and Fred Shepherd, sons of Herman Shepherd, a merchant, were drowned by the sinking of a sailing yacht in mid-channel. A gale was blowing at the time and the yacht shipped considerable water, and, being heavily ballasted, she sank. Frank Turner, a druggist, was the only one of the party saved. He was picked up by a yawl boat from a passing vessel.

Gentlemen who are interested in the passing of the bill to open Oklahoma to settlement say that no further efforts will be made to pass the bill at the session, notwithstanding the advantageous position that the bill has had in the house. The difficulty is that the few opponents of this measure are so determined that they will insist upon calling a quorum whenever the bill is brought up for action.

Truth Stronger than Fiction.

Recently E. G. Walters of New York and John Williams of Brockville, Mo., arrived at Brainerd, Minn., from Fargo and other Dakota points where they had been in search of Williams' Villiams, a middle-aged man, possibly a Southerner, supposed to be a farmer or gardener. By chance they ran across a teamster who had driven such a party to a government homestead claim eighteen miles in the country. The two took such a ride with this teamster, but did not find their man. They kept their business pretty close, and it became whispered about that some important transgressor was wanted. Finally, some one knew of a man answering the name, working for Samuel English, a market gardener, and repairing thither, in the very field where Williams was working a strange identification occurred. The New York man showed he was agent for a syndicate which was purchasing certain coal lands in West Virginia. The other stranger showed that he was John Williams, son of Pleasant Williams, long since deceased, who was the owner of the said coal lands when they were the old homestead in Powell's valley, near Cumberland Gap. William Williams showed he was the elder brother of John, whom he had not seen since the war broke the family assunder, and, as he supposed, killed his father and destroyed all their worldly possessions. The brother John was then but a child of half a dozen years. As a result of the strange meeting William's signature as an heir will complete the syndicate's title to the property, for which they pay a large sum, and William's share is sufficient to make him comfortable all his life—believed to be about $25,000. They paid him a goodly sum of cash before leaving.

Mr. Walters, the syndicate agent, gave the following statement of the matter, which both of the Williams brothers authenticate. William was in school in Kentucky when the war broke out, and went into the Union cause, the family being mostly the opposite in sentiment. As a soldier of the Twentieth Kentucky, and afterward of the Twenty-sixth, he served through the war in the Army of the Cumberland, and had the fortune of war to capture his own brother-in-law as a Confederate in the battle of Perryville. The war feud were so bitter in his family that he went North on leaving the war, going to the Northwest in 1866, where his family believed him to have died. The family ruined by the war, removed to Missouri, except the father who had died of his troubles. They became well-to-do, some of them very wealthy. In the developments of the coal discoveries of Western Verginia, the old plantation was found to cover great deposits, and a syndicate made its purchase, requiring Williams' assent as an heir, or proof of his death, confidently believed, in tracing which he was found to be alive, and identified as stated. The agent and brother (John) have departed, the one East, the other to his home in Missouri, to bear to his mother, who still lives, the good news. William takes his good fortune modestly, and will for the present remain here.

Canadian Railroad Riot.

News has reached Montreal of a serious riot in the county of Compton, Canada. Contractors on a section of the Hereford branch railroad drew a check for $25,000 from the company on account of construction and left the country with the proceeds. They had in their employ over 700 Italian laborers, who had not been paid a cent of wages since Aug. 1 and were in a destitute condition. As soon as the duped foreigners learned of the departure of their employers they became desperate, and when the railroad company attempted to resume the work of construction they flatly refused to do a stroke and at once began destroying all they could lay their hands on. They soon took possession of the village of Sawyerville, and threatened to destroy it unless they were paid. A party of citizens, with some Hungarians employed by the railway company, interfered to save railroad property, and a desperate fight followed. One Italian and four Hungarians were killed, it is reported, and between thirty and forty injured.

Italian navies, now assembled at Panquetteville on the border between Canada and the United States, chased off a track laying gang working on the Canada side, and the latter were obliged to take refuge on the American side. The Italians have encamped themselves at Panquetteville and vicinity, and hold in their possession a number of construction cars and other material, having placed a strong guard over them. They removed a number of rails from the ties, after having chased away the track layers. So far they have not crossed into the United Stated, but threaten to kill General Manager Sweet should he cross over into Canada.

There appears to be little or no ammunition among the volunteers, who have been called upon for assistance, the Sherbrook battalion having had to send 200 rounds—all that was in their possession. Several cases of ammunition, however, are on the way from Montreal. The Hereford railway, now under construction, is to run from Sawyerville, Quebec, to West Stewartstown, N. H.

Mormon Deviltry.

This scene is reported from Castle Garden, New York city. Two gross, coarse, sensuous-featured men in greasy broadcloth coats paced up and down before the enclosure of the landing bureau casting anxious glances at a group of twenty persons inside, until they were ordered to leave the garden. They were W. G. Phelps and Henry Walsh, elders of the Mormon church, and the people huddled inside the enclosure were a part of a small army of converts whom they brought from England on the steamer Wisconsin. Most of them will probably be returned to their native land. One Swiss family of seven people were bound for Idaho. The father declared that he had been a Mormon for twenty-three years. The whole family will be sent back. Hermenia Van Leiben from Holland had three small children and Miss Marie Dextra, fourteen years old, who left parents and friends in Holland to come out and join the Mormons. She is unusually, alarmingly precocious, and argues in behalf of Mormonism, and even polygamy, with a display of knowledge startling in one so young. These deluded people, who are almost without money, will probably be returned. But the saddest cases are those of five little girls and three boys who have come to America, allured here by the stories of the Mormon exhorters. The children will probably be sent on to San Francisco, where they have friends. A man named Howard, who brought the children over, will be sent back to England. A pale-faced little girl, with pretty features, but in dirty tatters, sobbed:

I am Sarah Ashley. I am eleven years old and came from Worksop, England. I was at service. It was so hard, mamma and papa let me come with Brother Walsh. I am to go at service with a gentleman fifteen miles from Salt Lake City.

Nellie Tomlinson from Brompton was a mature girl of twelve. She said she came with a "gentleman and two ladies" and was going to be a Mormon, though she hardly knew what that meant. There were some more girls between the ages of thirteen and fifteen who will be returned to their homes.

St. Paul's Archbishop.

The greatest day in the history of the Catholic church in the Northwest was the 27th of September when the City of St. Paul was elevated to an archepiscopal see and John Ireland, of St. Paul was promoted to the dignity of Archbishop. The ceremonies were as impressing as possible, and hosts of Roman Catholic clergy from all parts of the country, were present as participants. The procession formed in the archepiscopal residence, and commenced the march to the church. As they appeared, robed in the apparel of their office, a murmur went through the crowd, and in an instant every hat was doffed. As the acolytes, preceded by the ushers, Father Murphy acting as deacon and bearing the cross, entered the door, the organ struck up a grand voluntary, and slowly the procession came up the aisles. Fathers Gibbons Shanley awaited them in the sanctuary, and, assisted by Father Burns, assigned the clergy to their places. There were about 300 priests in line, each robed in the black cassock and white lace surplice of the order. After the priests had advanced to the altar they filed into the seats on either side of the sanctuary. Following them came the bishops in their purple robes, Father Calliet as deacon of honor, and Fathers O'Gorman and Lawrence acting as subdeacons; and last the Rt. Rev. John Ireland, clothed in the purple bishops's gown, with the royal purple outer garment of an archbishop, two acolytes bearing his train. He took his seat on the bishop's throne on the left, with the deacons on either side. Bishop Marty of Dakota took his seat on the right, and the other bishops were assigned places just inside of the sanctuary rail. After assuming the sacred robes of office, Bishop Marty celebrated the pontifical high mass, being assisted by Father Calliet as assistant priest, Father Trobre acting as deacon and Father Cother of Winona as subdeacon. The choir meantime sang the grand "Messe Sollonelle," by Gounod, the choir being augmented and assisted by Seibert's orchestra of twenty pieces. The air, which had before been tinctured by the odor from the flowers which everywhere abounded, now had the perfume of the burning incense added. As the grand ceremonial proceeded, the students from St. Thomas' seminary, concealed behind the altar, chanted the responses.

After a sermon by Bishop Keane Bishop Marty was divested of the robes and Bishops Ireland and Grace arrayed in the sacred vestments. The ceremony of conferring the pallium was then performed, and, simple as it was, deeply affected the hearts of the congregation. Father Cotter, standing on Bishop Ireland's right, first read in Latin the briefs from the pope establishing the metropolitan see of St. Paul and appointing Bishop Ireland to the post of archbishop, and then read the English translations thereof. Bishop Grace, then advanced to the front of the alter and took his seat on a stool there provided. Bishop Ireland, with bowed head, and accompanied by his deacons, also advanced and knelt before him. In a voice scarcely audible even to those in the sanctury, he took the vows and obligations of the archbishopric.

Bishop Grace then took up the pallium, which had been placed upon the altar, and after blessing it placed it around Bishop Ireland's neck. The archbishop then arose, and turning, blessed the congregation.

At 2:30 in the afternoon the visiting and resident clergy and the gentlemen on the various committees sat down to dinner at the Hotel Ryan. The tables were five in number, the main one being placed at the eastern end of the large dining-room, and the four others running at right angles thereto. Covers were laid for 400 guests. Archbishop Ireland sat at the center of the main table, with Archbishop Tasche of Winnipeg on his right and Bishop Grace on his left. The other tables were presided over by the chairman of the various committees. At the close of the dinner Rev. Father Shanley arose and announced from the rear of the archepiscopal chair that a cablegram had been received by the archbishop from the Pope, in Latin, of which the following is a translation;

The supreme pontiff bestows upon you a special benediction.

This announcement of the additional honor conferred upon the distinguished prelate was received with deafening applause.

Cannibalism in Canada.

A terrible tale of starvation and destitution among the Indians comes from Athabasca and the Peace river country in Northwest British America. It comes in the form of a petition to the minister of the interior for Canada, and is signed by the Anglican bishop for that diocese, six clergymen and missionaries and several justices of the peace. It is an official document passed by the synod of Athabasca diocese. It sets forth that, owing to the scarcity of beaver and other small game, the Indians, both last winter and summer, have been in a state of starvation. Both the food supply of the Indians and their power of procuring clothing have been affected. They are now in a complete state of destitution, and unable to provide themselves with clothing, ammunition, etc., for the winter. The petition says, among other things: "The above scarcity has greatly decreased the number of their dogs, so necessary to the Indian for traveling and hunting, which have perished, thus seriously increasing the difficulty of obtaining a livelihood. At Lake Athabasca and at some other lakes there is a great failure of the fall and winter fisheries, during the winter of 1886-87, between the Peace and Athabasca rivers, on account of starvation and consequent cannibalism, a party of twenty-nine Cree Indians was reduced to three. In the Mackenzie river district there were several cases of death by by starvation and one or more of cannibalism during the winter 1887-88 among the Fort Chippewain Indians. Between twenty and thirty starved to death, and the death of others accelerated by want of food. A party of about twenty Beavers had to be conveyed from Grand Prairie, near Dunvegan, Peace river, to Lesser Slave Lake to prevent their starving to death. Some of them died after arriving there. Within the personal knowledge of the undersigned many other Indians, Crees, Beavers and Chippewians, at almost all points where there are missions of trading posts, would certainly have starved to death but for the help furnished by the traders and missionaries at those places, furnished very often at great personal inconvenience. Owing to all these facts scores of families having lost their heads by starvation are now perfectly helpless and must starve to death or eat one another unless help comes. The people are terribly agitated over the anticipated fate of these poor people. Heartrendering stories of suffering and cannibalism continue to come in.

Dakota Prairie Fires.

A Jamestown, Dak., special says: Reports of loss from the prairie fire continue to come in at a rate that indicate an alarming aggregate when the total loss shall be ascertained. No losses occurred in the immediate vicinity of Jamestown but from a point nine miles south a strip of country from fifty to a hundred miles wide was burned over. Instances of the unconquerable velocity of the fire's progress are frequent. W. Boyer, who was one of the fire's victims, says: I was threshing when the fire swept down over the hill west of me at a rate of thirty-five miles an hour. It was only with the greatest difficulty that the threshing machine and 114 bushels of wheat already threshed and loaded on wagons was saved. The grain in stock and stack was all consumed. Among the largest losses reported are W. B. Trimble, 2,000 bushels of wheat in shock and a fine barn; Lot Campion, barn and 450 bushels of wheat in stack. It is reported that a farmer named Warren, near Ypsilanti, lost 400 acres of wheat in shock. Among the small farmers the following sustained heavy losses of grain, hay and buildings: Charles Mastin, William Derby, Joseph Noel, J. A. Carter, Alfred Gee, M. Lane. Around Montpelier, this county, Prosper Nazee, Julius Nazee, Mrs. F. M. Gardiner, Joe Camp and Henry Kimlar sustained losses ranging from $200 to $800. No reports have been received from the Bulgarian settlement in the southern part of the county, but losses in that vicinity are undoubtedly heavy and many, it being in the heart of the fire. Light rain fell last night, and the fire has probably been extinguished. If experience ever teaches a lesson, this fire will cause farmers to plow more and wider fire breaks next year.

No Mormon State Desired.

The majority report of the Utah commission, signed by G. L. Godfrey, A. B. Williams and Arthur L. Thomas, was received at Washington by the secretary of the interior. The recommendation of the last annual report is renewed that Utah should not be admitted to the Union until such time as the Mormon people shall manifest by their future acts that they have abandoned polygamy in good faith, and not then until an amendment shall have been made to the constitution of the United States prohibiting the practice of polygamy. The report adds:

The convention which adopted the proposed constitution upon which an appeal was made to congress for admission to the Union was held without authority from any proper source. The proposed constitution is silent with respect to the crime of polygamy. The government cannot afford to surrender the great advantages which it now holds and which has been secured at much expense and trouble. No harm can result from delay in the admission of the territory. The Democratic and Republican parties of Utah in their conventions, recently held, endorsed the positions taken in the majority report. Since the report of last year, the legislative assembly of Utah has granted to the minority, or the un-Mormon element, representation in the control of the public institutions and provided for local representation in Salt Lake and other cities. The recommendation of last year that the governor of the territory be given power to appoint county officers as follows: Selectmen, clerks, assessors, recorders, and superintendents of public schools, is renewed. The legislative assembly at its session in January last denied to the governor the right to appoint the territorial treasurer, auditor and other officers. Thus is presented the spectacle of the chief representative of the federal government in Utah being denied the right to exercise his legal authority, while at the same time the agents and leaders of those who are responsible for this action are at the capital of the nation, proclaiming the loyal submission of the Mormon people to the laws, and demanding that they be rewarded for it. In our opinion one of the chief causes for the long delay in the settlement of the contest in Utah has been the exercise of political power subordinate to the interests of the church. The Mormon church is committed to a policy which, if successful, will prove destructive to the public school system in Utah. The recommendation is, therefore, renewed that superintendents of public schools be appointable by the governor. The work under the law of congress, with respect to the registration of votes and the conduct of elections, has been satisfactorily performed. During the year there have been eight indictments for polygamy and four convictions, 340 indictments for unlawful cohabitation and 326 convictions. An energetic enforcement of the laws should be continued as should also the political disability.

A Yellow Fever Episode.

There is not one railroad officer in Jacksonville. The loss incurred by the people must be enormous, but it is hard to make an estimate of it. The cordon around Jacksonville now extends from a point on the St. John's river westward and southward around the city to a point one-quarter of a mile south of Riverside, on the St. John's river, and thence along the north bank of the river to the first point. This cordon is divided into four grand divisions, and each grand division, except the river division, into twelve equal parts, each marked by a yellow fever flag, and each flag a sentry post. The chief, the captain, the four lieutenants, and the twelve roundsmen are ordered to allow no one to pass through line without a lawful pass except members of the relief committee with badge and physicians. Already some conflicts have arisen between the travelers and the guard, and recently an armed band of negroes forced their way through the cordon. A man who ten days ago had delirum tremens was taken down with yellow fever. A good nurse and an excellent physician brought him through the crisis, and Wednesday he was able to sit up. At 6 o'clock that evening he dismissed his nurse till midnight. The doctor called later. When he had gone a dissolute companion of the sick man, accompanied by two women, went in to spend the evening. Supper was brought in from a neighboring restaurant, with plenty of wine and liquor, and the sick man assisted in the revel. The nurse on his return at midnight found him alarmingly ill. He and the physicians did all they could, but in vain. The man died at noon in his delirium, singing, or attempting to sing the ribald songs of the night before.

Another Mortgage Swindle.

The discovery of another big swindle was made known in New York when the trustees of the produce exchange gratuity fund announced that William R. Foster, Jr., their counsel, had defrauded that fund to the amount of $168,000 by means of bogus mortgages, as was done by James E. Bedell formerly with the law firm of Shipman, Barlow, Larocque & Choate. It was due to the Bedell forgeries that the crime of Foster was discovered. The counsel had entire charge of the financial affairs of the fund, gave no bonds and had the full confidence of the trustees. Foster made a frivolus excuse when spoken to about the matter, but arranged to meet the trustees. He failed to appear, and Alexander E. Orr, chairman of the board of trustees, and Secretary Norvell took a number of mortgages to the register's office on Wednesday, and there it was found that thirteen of them were forgeries, and that the amount involved was $168,000. Pinkerton detectives were put on the case and the matter was kept as quiet as possible by the trustees in the hope of catching Foster, but he got away. Foster's methods were exactly like those of Bedell, and consisted of forgeries of the registers of mortgages signature, stamps, etc. The exposure created great excitement on the exchange, but it was reported that Foster's father, who is reported to be worth $2,000,000, promised to make the defalcation good. Foster is a man about forty-five years of age, and was never known to speculate.

The coroner at Helena, Montana, held three inquests on one day. First was the case of Harry Trethowan, a miner from Empire, who hanged himself with a trunk strap. The coroner's jury rendered a verdict of premeditated suicide. No cause is known for the act. Trethowan was thirty years old and came from England to Montana two years ago. The others were a Chinaman, who died in Helena, from the effects of a pistol wound, and an unknown teamster who met his death on the Rimini road. The Chinaman's name was Low Yung Sam and he was a placer miner in Jefferson gulch, near Avon, Deer Lodge county. He was shot by his partner in the mine during a quarrel over their respective rights. The inquest implicated this partner, also a Chinaman, who will be arrested and held for murder. The man found on Rimini road was an aged teamster, name not known, who was thrown from a lumber wagon and killed while coming to Helena.

Postmaster General Dickinson, assisted by W. L. Bancroft, general superintendent of the railway mail service has just completed arrangements by which a new fast mail train will be established between Chicago and New York, commencing on the 30th inst. This train will be known as the "New York and Chicago fast mail east." It will be seventeen hours in transit from Chicago to New York.

Four couples were married in Red Wing on the 18th, and it wasn't much of a day for weddings, either.

Hon. D. J. Knox, of Aitkin, had two young deers in his park and a small dog only in play started after one, and the deer in its rapid flight fell down and broke its neck.

A son of George Osborn, a farmer living fifteen miles northwest of Fairmount, had his arm torn off at the shoulder in a threshing machine, from the effects of which he died in a few hours.

Recently a threshing machine on John Peterson's farm, northwest of Cedar Mills, McLead county, set fire to the straw, and the separator and 200 bushels of wheat were burned.

Miss Alice Downs and Mr. Todd, telegraph operators at Alexandria, attepted to leave town in each other's company, but were taken home, where they were married, and left town by the night train.

Congressman MacDonald secured the passage of a bill for the relief of Elizabeth E. Cole of Shakopee. The purpose of the bill is to give the mother the accrued back pension of the son who died some months ago.

A very serious accident occurred at the Polar Star mills at Faribault. A lad seventeen years of age name Werley Vail was out duck hunting on the mill pond, when he accidentally discharged the entire contents of one barrel of his gun into his face, killing him instantly.

John Bowman, six miles south of Ada, was attacked by a vicious steer and severely injured, and probably would have been killed had it not been for the brave efforts of his son, a lad of twelve years, who drove the vicious brute away with a club.

A. A. Hrfeman, in Steele county, is the owner of a hen which lays eggs remarkable for size at the rate of three a week. They each measure in circumference seven inches one way and eight and a half idches the other. He says the hen is healthy, and seems to enjoy herself.

Mrs. James Huron has sued her mother-in-law, Bridget Huron, for slander, and places her damages at $1,000, all at Wabasha. It seems that Mrs. James was not conducting herself in the most decorous way and that her mother-in-law attempted to give her some advice, hence the difficulty.

Frank Dadeck, fourteen years old, had his right leg badly injured in the trimmer at Libbey's mill at Hastings, his apron catching in the shaft and pulling him over into the endless chain. A lump of flesh as large as one's fist was gouged out above the cap and the skin and muscles of the thigh stripped up ten inches.

Fred, aged fifteen years, son of Mrs. Charles Foreman of West Albany township, Wabasha county started with a team to the blacksmith shop, a mile distant, and not returning when expected, his mother went to look for him. She found his dead body in the road with the neck broken, and near by was the team, tangled in the brush. The fatality was no doubt caused by the horses running away.

There lives three miles east of Madelia Isaac Slocum, seventy-eight years old, who voted for William H. Harrison in 1836 and in 1840. In 1840 Mr. Slocum, in company with the club of which he was a member, traveled for ten days with Gen. Harrison in Ohio, during which time they visited and the general spoke at Norwalk, Bellevue, Fremont, Perrysburg and Fort Meigs, where they repaired for three days and had a continual audience of 2,000 people. Fort Meigs is where Gen. Harrison fought the British. Mr. Slocum is hale and hearty.

How a Woman Is Won.

Good looks cut a small figure in love making, and lucre plays no part at all in youth. People have to get old before they become sordid, and then love has taken wings. A man may have a voice like an unhinged barn door, a nose like a cucumber, a foot like a fiddle box, hands like hams, teeth like a step ladder, eyes like a jay's and a mouth like a cellar door, and if he sues judiciously no arrows of misfortune can keep the wreath from his brow provided he keeps clean shaven, clean linen and a clean mouth. He may be attenuated to the very verge of emaciation, or be elephantine in movements and dimensions, but perfumed with the scent of fresh linen and possessed of wit enough to use his tongue, he may win any woman whom he studies with care.—Chicago Times.

The Real Englishman in America and His Troubles.

"I am subject to one form of persecution in this country," said an Englishman the other day, "which I find quite intolerable, though I can't in the least blame my persecutors. You know I speak quite like an Englishman, naturally, and conduct myself quite like one, as a matter of course. Really, inasmuch as I've been on this side only a month, you see, and am going home in another month, it would hardly be worth my while to attempt to master the accent and the manners of the country, don't you know. Now, I'm not in the least unwilling to be taken for an Englishman; that I am rather proud of, in fact. But I,m not taken for an Englishman, and there's the disagreeable feature of the thing. I'm constantly taken, don't you see, for an Anglomanic Yankee, a beastly cad whose native country is not good enough for him, and who caricatures us in a wild attempt to imitate us. To be taken for an Irish dynamiter or a Russian Nihilist would be a comparative compliment. The other day I called on a friend in the city to whom I had a letter, and as he wasn't in I fell into a little parley with the young men in the outer office about his return, and the like. Then I sat down in the inner office to wait a bit for him. Presently I heard over the half-partition, one of the young men say softly to his companion, with an imitation of my own accent: 'Bah jove! not bad, don't you know! Is it natural or acquired?' 'Painfully acquiahed, deah boy—painfully acquiahed,' said the other in the same tone.

'Cahn't be done in a day, deah boy,' he went on; 'there's Beverly Cadley, don't you know, who comes in here sometimes to bonh the governor; took him one-and-twenty months—yaas three-and-twenty months, to acquiah his accent. This hasn't been carried to the supehb perfection that Cadley's has, not at all, my boy, but he'll mahster it in a yeah or two, don't you know, with perseverence.' All this with an indescribable clipping of consonants and vowels made with the teeth—really very clever, you know. Then I heard a maddening chuckle from the two. This is very much the sort of treatment that I get everywhere. Sometimes men look as if they were going to kick me, until they learn that I am really an Englishman, and then they're the best and most cordial fellows in the world. Really, its very natural to treat me so, but it's deucedly unpleasant to be made odious in a strange land by a set of cads, don't you know!"—Boston Post.

The Russian Peasant.

Church festivals, marriages, christenings, burials and fairs leave only 200 days in the year for the Russian laborer. The climate is so severe as to prevent out-of-door work for months, and the enforced idleness increases the natural disposition to do nothing. "We are a lethargic people," says Gogol, "and require a stimulus from without, either that of an officer, a master, a driver, the rod, or vodki [a white spirit distilled from corn;] and this," he adds in another place, "whether the man be peasant, soldier, clerk, sailor, priest, merchant, seigneur, or Prince." At the time of the Crimean war it was always believed that the Russian soldier could only be driven up to an attack, such as that of Inkerman, under the influence of intoxication. The Russian peasant is indeed a barbarian at a very low stage of civilization. In the Crimean hospitals every nationality was to be found among the patients, and the Russian soldier was considered far the lowest of all. Stolid, stupid, hard, he never showed any gratitude for any amount of care and attention, or seemed, indeed, to understand them; and there was no doubt that during the war he continually put the wounded to death in order to possess himself of their clothes.—The Nineteenth Century.

The Grip of Habit.

If the period between 20 and 30 is the critical one in the formation of intellectual and professional habits, the period below 20 is more important still for the fixing of personal habits, properly so-called, such as vocalization, pronunciation, gesture, motion and address. Hardly ever is a language learned after 20 spoken without a foreign accent; hardly ever can a youth transferred to the society of his betters unlearn the nasality and other vices of speech bred in him by the associations of his growing years. Hardly ever, indeed, no matter how much money there be in his pocket, can he ever learn to dress like a gentleman born. The merchants offer their wares as eagerly to him as to the variest "swell," but he simply can't buy the right things. An invisible law, as strong as gravitation, keeps him within his orbit, arrayed this year as he was the last; and how his aristocratic acquaintances contrive to get the things they wear, will be for him a mystery till his dying day.—Popular Science.

The Richest Man in the South.

Hal. Dulaney, of Fauquier county, Va., who is the richest man in the south, is going to Scotland to marry a Scotch girl of noble family. Although Mr. Dulaney's wealth would be regarded as commonplace in New York, it is considered well nigh fabulous south of Mason and Dixon's line. His yearly income is over $200,000, drawn from lands in Virginia and in England and Scotland. He owns about 15,000 acres in the blue grass region of Loudoun and Fauquier counties, and has in England and Scotland estates which would quarter a half dozen of lords. He came by it all by inheritance, the lands having been in the family for generations. Mr. Dulaney is a good-looking young fellow, 24 years old, and has lived all his life in this country. The lady whom he is going to marry is said to be a descendent of a younger branch of the Argylls. She has no title, but is a cousin of the present duke. The prospective marriage has excited widespread interest in the Old Dominion.

Dr. W. H. Hale, an Edinburgh physician, who is traveling in this country, has a cane which he says cost $3,500. The head contains over three pounds of eighteen-carat gold, and is mounted with sixty-five diamonds.

If a man enter office pledged to do certain things, for a certain few people who happen to be in position to demand and perhaps compel pledges, he is manifestly doing an injustice to the rest of us. Is not that so? Speaking of pledges, Rev. M. L. Haines, General Harrison's pastor, says he happens to know that his distinguished parishioner gave just one pledge, and that was that if elected president of the United States he would conduct the administration on Republican principles. "Further than that," says Mr. Haines, "I know that General Harrison stands absolutely unpledged."

The St. Paul Globe says the republican state central committee has $500,000 at its command for campaign purposes. It then goes on and gives speakers $500 apiece, newspapers $1,500 each, and by the time it gets through apportioning makes up a bill that a million dollars would not liqudate. The Globe seems to have a very low estimate of the average intelligence of its readers if it thinks that the average intelligent Minnesotian cannot see its inconsistencies and be thoroughly disgusted with them. For some time it has labored to convince its readers that the "bloated bondholders of the east will not put in a cent for campaign purposes," and now it says they are putting millions in the campaign. The fact of the matter is the Globe don't care what kind of a lie it tells, only so its cause may win.

During the war the leading rebels circulated the story that all Yanks were a species of wild animal whom it was dangerous to have around. So strong did this feeling become among the masses that many expected to see a devil with horns when they should see a Yank and were very much surprised when they found out the mistake. Some such a warfare is now attempted by the democrats who would like to make people believe that Comstock is a sort of a wild beast like the rebels described the Yanks, but all who know him best like him best for they know the sterling worth of the man. Plain and unostentatious he is verily a man of the people, whose rights he is able to defend not only able but anxious. Coming to this country in the early day to practice his profession and finding no business in that line what did he do? Instead of laying around and beating his living out of honest men he did what many of his present defamers would scorn to do, he took a shovel and went to work on the railroad until winter. Then he put up a tent on the banks of the Red River at Moorhead, lived in it till spring working at any and all jobs that he could find to until the time came when he could find employment at his business. He has grown up with this country, is thoroughly familiar with its needs and is the best fitted man before the people to-day for the position. Even his enemies, trying as hard as they do cannot find one single point against him but are obliged to invent a network of silly, baseless lies. But let them go on. The more Mr. Comstock's record is brought out the more will his honest and faithful work be made known to all who do not now know it.

The Times is raking the earth with a fine tooth comb in its efforts to make out that the Hon. S. G. Comstock is not able to represent this district in Congress. If he was the kind of a man the Times tries so hard to make him out it is strange that Mr. Comstock's legislative district never found it out. Had Mr. Comstock remained in the senate the coming winter he would have represented his district for 14 years—a district composed of farmers by a large majority, who have been so perfectly satisfied with him that they have sent him to St. Paul term after term to represent their interests and who will now send him to congress for the same purpose. If there had been anything wrong about him, if he had not been perfectly in accord with the interests of the farmers and abundantly able to serve them it is quite reasonable to suppose that it would have been brought out long ago and he would have been emphatically left at home. Mr. Comstock is an honest, able and upright man in every sense and his long legislative experience renders him peculiarly fit for a congressman's duties. He is heartily and earnestly in favor of obtaining the pine on the Red Lake Reservation and he has the abilty to accomplish it if it is possible to be done. This one point alone is of as much value as any or all other questions involved and we should be very careful how we defeat the only man who would stand any show of getting it. It is a well known fact that legislative experience counts for a great deal, in fact it is everything when backed by the ability that Mr. Comstock possesses. The democratic party, in its efforts to elect its ticket does not scruple at falsehood and deceit and hence we see such misrepresentations as the Times man and others concoct. They know that Mr. Comstock is one of the best and strongest men in the country but for the sake of a party triumph they invent all manner of stories to defeat him. If Mr. Comstock should be defeated it would be the worse for this country especially as he is by far the ablest and best man now up for the position. This country cannot afford to defeat him just to gratify the democratic or third party. We have too vital interests at stake to trust them in the hands of inexperienced men whose only recommend is that that they don't belong to a certain political party.

Charles Canning is going about the district asking the farmers to send him to Congress. This is a very important office, requiring talents of the very highest order, and it is a pertinent question to ask of Mr. Canning what he has ever done to entitle him to the honor? Has he the necessary qualifications to fill that important office? He has for several years been a persistent agitator and four years ago the republican party chose him representative in the state legislature. This was upon the presumption that he was a republican. He accepted the position, well knowing the general feeling, knowing that if the fact of his being a democrat was known he could by no means go to the legislature. This showed his capacity for deception. Well, he went and what did he accomplish? What measure for the relief of the suffering farmer did he ever devise? How much strength did he develope in that body? It is true that he did a good deal of scolding and raving about Jim Hill and monopoly, but what good did that do? Who does not remember the disgraceful scene that occurred in committee room at the time he pitched into Jim Hill, and the intemperate words that he used? Does the district want to send that kind of a man to represent it in congress? These are pertinent questions that every voter has a right to ask—nay, should ask himself, as the honor Mr. Canning seeks is a great one, and the welfare of the whole district depends upon the kind of a man we send to represent it. The democrats will tell you that Mr. Canning is "an honest man!" If we admit that we are forced to the conclusion that he is a very indiscreet one from his record in the legislature where he proved wholly inadequate to discharge the duties entrusted to his care. But should we admit that he is an honest man, the position demands all of that and something more. It demands a man of ability, a broad and deep mind, capable of grasping all sides of a question at once, and not simply one point of it. No legislator ever accomplished any good for his constituents by calling his opponent scurrillous names, and one capable of such business is not fit to represent a decent people. A true man could never descend to such a level and none other is worthy to represent a free people in congress. We should blush for this country if we thought that its average sentiment did not demand talents of a higher order, and we feel assured that it does. What was Mr. Canning put up for? Jas. J. Hill is a democrat, is said to be putting up money for the election of the democratic nominee, Eugene M. Wilson. Is it reasonable to suppose that Mr. Hill would allow Kelley & Doran to put up Mr. Canning if he (Canning) was at heart the great enemy of Mr. Hill that he boasts of being? It is true that Mr. Canning has made a great parade of cursing "Jim Hill and the little black bulls," and why is it that we find him snugly in bed with the outfit? If he is such a bitter enemy of Jim Hill as he pretended, how is it that we find him hand in glove with Jim Hill's party? It is not reasonable to suppose that Mr. Hill would spend his money to help elect an enemy, so we are forced to the conclusion that either Mr. Hill or the people are being deceived in the matter. It is not reasonable to suppose that it is Mr. Hill. He is not built that way.

All One Way.

W. S. King, of Minneapolis, recently returned from the east, and on being interviewed, said:

"Its's all right; going one way, as sure as my name is Bill King. There is no possible chance for the re-election of Cleveland. There isn't a republican in the east who has the least possible doubt about the outcome. New York will go republican all the way from 40,000 to 60,000. Connecticut is as surely republican as Vermont, and Maine and Massachusetts will give a largely increased republican majority. Gen. Butler told me in Boston the other day that the republicans would score the greatest victory in the history of the party. New Jersey is the only northern state that is at all doubtful, and we are pretty sure to carry that state by a neat majority. The democrats are admitting defeat. The only northern state that is affected by the tariff heresy is Minnesota. And this is because the republican party has neglected to educate the people. The situation in Minnesota looks queer to me. There isn't a town in the state but what will get up a bonus and offer every inducement for some kind of a manufacturing establishment to locate there, and it is a worthy ambition. It helps build up the town and developes the agricultural interests adjacent. Free trade will cripple and even kill off these establishments. Why any voter in Minnesota favors free trade I can't understand."

Morris Tribune: The better acquainted we become with Hon. S. G. Comstock, our candidate for congress, and the more we learn of him, the more firmly are we convinced that the republican convention acted wisely when it nominated him. He is a man who makes friends wherever he goes, while those who have known him longest are the most enthusiastic in praise of him. No one can converse with him five minutes without being convinced that he is a man of brains. He uses no superfluous language, but speaks directly to the point, producing arguments instead of indulging in meaningless eloquence like so many of our public speakers. Mr. Comstock is a conservative man, but possesses a liberal share of independence which enables him to think for himself and to lead rather than to be led. He will ably fill the position now occupied by Hon. Knute Nelson. Stevens County will give him a large vote. That he will be elected by a large majority no sane man in the district has the least doubt.

Redwood Reveille: The result will be a united, enthusiastic, invincible republican party. Mr. Merriam will receive the cordial support of the party and will be triumphantly elected.

State Press Sayings.

Le Sueur News: With such a ticket in the field as that given to the state by the republican convention we may, without the shadow of a doubt, look forward to a sweeping victory in November.

Henderson Independent: The young republicans of the state have achieved a decided victory in the nomination of W. R. Merriam for governor. He is undoubtedly the strongest man in the party and no better selection could have been made even by the old war horses themselves.

Minneapolis Journal: Under the heading "The Rural Press Still Refuse to Endorse the Nomination of Merriam," the Globe prints a lot of opinions of democratic papers. The Globe must have thought Mr. Merriam exceptionally strong if it expected the democratic papers to come out for him, too.

Herman Enterprise: It is charged that S. G. Comstock is an attorney of the Manitoba railroad company, and as such is not the proper man to represent this district in congress. Hon. Knute Nelson occupied a similar position when he was first elected and this same charge was made against him in the famous Nelson-Kindred campaign; but Mr. Nelson was elected and nobody will allege that he has not served the people well. Mr. Comstock is in full sympathy with all of Mr. Nelson's views and will labor to carry out the work which our present representative has so well begun.

Lake Crystal Union: The St. Paul Globe continues to talk about McGill. Cannot some one who is acquainted with the editor of that paper run in and inform him that Merriam has been nominated for governor by the republicans? This continued howling about McGill is exciting comment up this way.

Duluth Tribune: It is a noteworthy fact that this campaign is free from personal slander. Grover Cleveland's Buffalo episode has not been reproduced; the characters of the republican candidates are so pure and clean that the democratic press, always ready to defile candidates, have not been able to concoct in their sensational imagination one word that would redoun to their personal discredit.

St. Peter Tribune: It make the blood of old soldiers throb with pleasure to read the words of honest praise from the sturdy old Ben Harrison, after four years of Cleveland's mockery of their wounds and veto satires on their claims to our nation's bounty. Gen. Harrison sent no substitute to the front, but was there himself, and he knows how the boys in blue feel about it. Read Harrison's letter of acceptance.

Mankato Free Press: There is much ground for the belief that many democratic editors think Mr. Blaine is running for president instead of Mr. Harrison. The Globe, for instance, to-day devotes two editorials to the Plumed Knight, abusing him as roundly as though he were not a private citizen entitled to the rights of being allowed to rest in the peace afforded others of his neighbors who are not candidates for office.

St. Peter Tribune: Grover Cleveland sent $20 to relieve the North Carolina earthquake sufferers; Levi P. Morton loaded a ship to relieve Irish sufferers. Grover Cleveland sent $10,000 to the democratic central committee to secure his own re-election; Levi P. Morton sent $10,000 to Florida to help the victims from the yellow scourge. Grover Cleveland is selfish and egotistic; Levi P. Mortoni s generous and unassuming.

Mankato Free Press: The democratic papers of Minnesota, from the leading St. Paul morning organ down to the whining two-for-a-cent sheets, have inaugurated a campaign of detestable personalities against the republican candidate for governor never before inflicted upon an intelligent reading public. The broad charge is made that Mr. Merriam purchased his nomination with money, while not a single proof of such an act has been produced.

Mankato Free Fress: The St. Paul Globe, in its affected interest for the republican party, can rest assured on one point and forever dischagre it from mind, and that is the republican nominee will not be withdrawn. He was placed in nomination to wipe out Wilson, and he will do it by a handsome majority—the crocodile tears of the Globe notwithstanding. If the Globe was possessed of one tithe of the honesty that Mr. Merriam is it would be entitled to vastly more credit than is now accorded it by the respectable portion of the community. What the democrats should demand is the suppression of the Globe until after election. Its course is daily adding votes to the republican olumn.

Harrison at Home.

THE HEAD OF AN AMERICAN CHRISTIAN HOUSEHOLD—THE FAMILY ALTAR.

Rev. M. L. Haines, pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Indianapolis, where General and Mrs. Benjamin Harrison have been members ever since they went to Indianapolis, just after they were married, says that even during political campaigns, General Harrison almost invariably managed to to so arrange his engagements as to be in his pew on Sundays. Often he spoke from six to ten times a week, and on Sunday afternoons met his Bible class, composed of half a hundred young men, looking as bright and as fresh as if just back from a vacation in the mountains.

"Those who hear General Harrison," writes Mr. Haines, "when called upon to lead in prayer in the Thursday evening service in his church, cannot but notice the simplicity and chasteness of expression, the humility of spirit and the deep sense of reverence that characterizes his utterances. I venture to allude to this because the real disposition of man's heart often comes to its clearest betrayal in his prayers.

"I will not presume to draw aside the veil that conceals the home life of General Harrison and his family; yet I feel free to say that it is a Christian American home, of the noblest type, where the affection that binds its members is purified and strengthened by faith in God, and where from the family altar that was erected more than a third of a century ago, there goes up each day the utterances of thanksgiving and confession and prayer to the Heavenly Father."

sort of time they will have after election. The republicans are driven into a corner, no matter what they do. They must join hands with the temperance people, and even a partial victory this fall would mean the destruction of the whole liquor traffic. There is only one safe way for the liquor interests. They must unite to a man to work, heart and soul, day and night, for the success of the democratic party, and the best way for the delegates to spend their time is to consider the best means to achieve the success of the democrats, state and national. We have not the slightest doubt of the outcome, but it will not be a walk-over by any means. Mr. Warner Miller knows a thing or two, and he will strain every nerve to get where he wants to. Gentlemen, it is for you to prevent his election if you have to take off your coats and work from now until the polls close on the 6th of November. It is not enough to elect your ticket. You must bury the temperance prohibition combination under such a crushing majority that they will lose faith in resurrection. Gentlemen, that is your main business at Buffalo. Attend to it."

What does that mean? It is simply the cold announcement of the chief organ of the liquor fraternity of this country on the line that anti-saloon republicans have known for a year past that they would mass their forces. That is, that all over this land, from Maine to California and from the lakes to the gulf, every man who cares more for the liquor business than he does for republican principles is going to vote the democratic ticket. And now the question is for prohibitionists, for temperance men in this country, are you going to take such a course as to aid these saloon men in securing the victory of the party in which they have concentrated themselves. It would seem as though under this state of facts that the great mass of the better element in the republican party, and with their general tendencies so well known, that there would be no division, and that all men who were really in earnest and temperance men, would come into the republican party and help out its victory, but unfortunately there are a large number of very good people who have taken it into their noddles that it is an easy matter, it will be for them, to destroy the republican party, and on its ruin build a better one that will do this work better than the republican party can. I have read these things so as to show them clearly and distinctly just how this common enemy, the dramshop, feels on the matter.

SIMPLY AN ADJUNCT. THE PROHIBITION PARTY MISSION IS SIMPLY TO ASSIST THE DEMOCRATS.

I want now to consider one proposition; we say, and say truly, that the prohibition party, so-called, is simply an adjunct and assistant of the democratic party. That is the effect of its operation. It is to benefit the democratic party, and many of the leaders of the third party desire and intend that result. That is sometimes denied, but generally it is admitted in this way; they say that the charge is true to this extent; that we want to destroy the republican party, because most of the temperance men in the north are republicans, but we are equally anxious to destroy the democratic party in the south, because most of the temperance men in the south are democrats. I want to say, my friends, that that statement is not true. The leaders of the prohibition party do not thus desire. I say it boldly, because their acts prove that they do not thus desire. Do you know why I say that their acts prove that? In the first place, and this is the first item, they make 20 speeches at the north against the republican party for every one that they make at the south against the republicans or democrats. Even the chief of their democratic-prohibition orators of the south do the most of their talking up north. The next thing in that connection is an extract from the Atlanta Constitution, of Atlanta, Ga., one of the two principal democratic papers in the south. It says:

"Cry havoc! and let loose the dogs of war!" Thus has the third party sounded its defiant alarm in the camps of the republicans, and the consternation which it has created amounts to a panic among the cohorts of the G. O. P. The republican leaders are confronted with the certainty of the dismemberment of their party, and they realize the fact that the immense prohibition vote which will leave their ranks this year renders almost hopeless their chances of success in the presidential campaign, on which the future existence of the party is staked. The third party has been recruited almost entirely from the republican strength, and the constant increase of its vote has shown a proportionate loss in that of the republicans."

There is proof from the highest democratic authority of the south. Now let me state another fact which is evident. Men are presumed to mean the natural consequences of what they do. The Indianapolis convention framed their platform the natural effect of which is to make it more difficult to recruit that party from the democratic ranks. They had the question of woman suffrage up before them. The prohibition members from the south plead against the adoption of that, and said, if that was put into the platform it would be impossible to build up the party down there. There were a good many northern republicans did the same thing, but Miss Frances Willard, that eloquent advocate of temperance and woman's suffrage, was in that convention and was determined that woman's suffrage should be endorsed. The male managers of that convention found that they had got to choose between Miss Willard and common sense, and they chose Miss Willard. It was the gallant thing to do, of course, but it was not politics. Every man that knows anything about it, knows that there is not one woman suffragist among the northern democrats to 20 of its members, and there is not one to a hundred down south. In putting in that plank in the platform it has made it simply a matter of impossibility almost to recruit from that party. It amounted simply to a democratic protection plank.

The speaker here read an extract from the Union Signal, of Chicago, containing a remark of Prof. Dickey that for women to be unrepresented in this century was a relic of savagery more barbarous and harmful than the liquor traffic, and said:

I do not say this out of opposition to woman's suffrage, because I believe in woman's suffrage myself, but I do not think that I can help any cause by adding to it another, which is more unpopular. I think that each one should stand upon its own bottom and that each one should be promoted just as fast as the people can be induced to promote it, and none should be held back until another can be brought up to it.

In 1882 John P. St. John was nominated for the third time as governor of Kansas. I was present and heard him make his address which closed in these words:

"I stand here before you a republican. I was at the birth of the grand old party of freedom, and I am proud to-night of that party as at any time of its history. It is a party of progress, it is a party of advanced ideas, it is a party of principles, a party of the people, a party that has always stood by and with the people. It is a party that has saved the life of the nation, and the nation owes a debt of gratitude to it that can never be repaid. Trusting that I may always so conduct myself as never to give you or the people you represent reason to regret your action here, I beg leave to retire now."

Two years after that Mr. St. John was denouncing the republican party, although during that time it had taken no backward step in legislation in any state in this union, although the only change that there had been during that time in its sentiment was a steady, gradual advance toward and in favor of anti-saloon principles, but because it did not go fast enough, that was the reason alleged, he goes out of the party and commences to try to destroy it, the party which he had, less than two years before, said, was entitled to a debt of gratitude that the nation could never repay—and all o'er the country the republican party has been attacked just exactly in that spirit. The moment these men have gone out, good men, honest men, the most of them, they have tried to rake up everything that they could and distort everything in their attacks against the republican party.

The speaker here called attention to the claim made by prohibitionists that the democratic party was as good a temperance party as the republican party, and to show the fallacy of the proposition, referred to a so-called "political ledger" published in a book called the "Political Prohibitionist," claiming that the statements contained therein were false and misleading, and said:

Here is the record of the republican party. It has given us all the prohibition—that is, its members have—all the prohibition that we have in this country, and I say furthermore, that there is not upon the statute book of any northern state a single law passed in the interest of temperance and against the opposition of the saloon interest but that did not receive the largest proportion of the vote in its favor from the republican members of those legislatures. I say furthermore that there is not a single law, and has not been since the organization of the party, passed in the interest of the saloon and against the opposition of the temperance members that did not receive much the largest proportion of its vote from democrats, and of its opposition from republicans. Here stands the record of the republican party composed of those elements that are naturally in favor of a promotion of temperance; it has given us our prohibition in six states; it has also given prohibition in a great number of counties and smaller districts; it has closed tens of thousands of saloons; it has sent scores of thousands of dram-sellers to jail or fined them for violation of the law; it has rescued a great multitude of drunken men from the temptation that was ruining them; it has bound up a multitude of the aching hearts of women, and saved thousands of children—"By their fruits shall ye know them."

Now, look at the record, my friends, of our party friends. "By their fruits shall we know them also." That party is 19 years old; it was organized in 1869, and has run tickets every year since then, and in this 19 years it has not given us in any state in this union a single temperance law, nor has it repealed a single saloon law. It has not closed up a single dram-shop anywhere; it has not saved a single drunkard anywhere; it has not relieved the distress of a single woman anywhere; it has not rescued a single child from destruction anywhere—"by their fruits shall ye know them!" "Men don't gather figs of thistles, nor grapes of thorns," and you can rest assured, my friends, that when you come to compare the record of the party that has done all these good things that no honest man will for a moment pretend to deny with the record of the other party that it raises an irresistible presumption that the grand old republican party, that the nation not only owes it a debt that we can never fully repay, but it also owes it a debt for what it has done upon this temperance line. I want to appeal to my good third party friends to come in and help us make that record more glorious, and to be entitled to a part of the glory and self-satisfaction of having helped the party. I am not one of those who abuse our third party friends. I think they are wofully mistaken; there are some of them very bad men, but the great mass of them are honest men; they are just as honest as the republicans, but not a bit more so; they are as honest as the democrats; they are as honest as the saloon men; I believe, for my part, that the great element are honest; they are not as intelligent or as well posted on these lines as we are, but they are honest. I don't say they are honest in everything, because most of them are not; but in those opinions they are honest. I want to say, furthermore, that paradoxical as it may seem, that some of the most dishonest men of the third party are very honest after all. They are like the apple that has been bruised and that is unsavory on the surface, but is all sound at the core. Their error and wrong results in their having elevated party above principle and having in their party zeal fallen into the regular common partisan ruts, and have adopted the very same tactics in the running of their party that so many republicans and democrats have adopted in the running of theirs. That is, they are ready to believe every thing that is said against their opponents and claim everything for themselves; and when men do that they are very sure to say a great many things that are not true.

Now, there is one or two other points that I must touch upon. One of the reasons given by our good friend why the republican party ought to be destroyed is that no party can do but one thing. It is organized for one purpose, and when that mission is performed it has only then to die and let some other party come and take its place. Fortunately, my friends, that is not true. If it was, it would be a bad thing for the cause of prohibition; it would be a very good reason why the prohibition party ought to be elected, because with human nature as it is, and the human nature of other men being just about alike, if it was true that just as quick as the mission of their party was performed, the party had got to turn up its little toes and die, then the men who were put in office by the third party men would be sure to prolong their days as long as they could, and they would take care to see that prohibition did not prohibit while they were in office.

Way back in the organization of the government there were two parties, the federal and the republican; the republican party kept on down to the present time, simply changing its name to democracy. According to our good third party friends they never could have done but one thing and ought to have died before this century opened; but it won't! And when you bring that fact out, they see too well that it is a party in negation and of course they never die. Then take the other party; there was the federal party; it was dissolved during the teens of this century, because it took such a position in the war of 1812 that it became very unpopular and had to die. After awhile there was only one party and then the national republican was organized in the 20's, which ran one campaign, and the next campaign it changed its name to whig and that went on until 1832, when the know-nothing party sprang up like Jonah's Gourd and went down in the same way, knocking the whig party to pieces and leaving the country then with only a strong democratic party on the one hand and half a dozen fragments on the other. And then when the Missouri compromise was repealed and startled the whole nation from its slumber, the republican party sprang into existence full-formed at once, and as I have told you when only four months old it carried six or eight states of this union, and when it was only 2 years came very near electing its president. There is another difference between these two parties. The abolition party was called into existence because there wasn't any party that was fighting slavery in line. As soon as the republican party was organized, although it said it didn't intend to interfere with slavery where it existed, but simply proposed to try and restrict it, it was organized as a restriction party. As soon as that was done, the abolition party dissolved immediately, and went into the republican ranks, but you are striking exactly where the abolitionists left off. Because it won't at present agree to abhor everything everywhere you organize your party and say we will compel you to come out and advocate these or we will see to it that the saloon keepers have their power. Now let me call your attention to one other important point.

When a practical good house-wife wants to make a good loaf of bread she dosen't put her leaven in a napkin and take it down cellar, she kneads it with the dough and in a little while it leavens the whole lump and it rises and she puts it into the oven and it comes out a splendid loaf of bread. So, if you want to leaven this country so as to secure better laws on the subject, or even prohibition, the way for you to do it is not to go off by yourselves and say to the rest of the people: Come running to us and follow us; you shall not do this good thing; but you ought to go right with the party that takes the great mass of the people who want to see this good thing done, and explain to them where they are in error, and plead with them to come up on the higher ground, steadily, year by year, and in so doing you will retain their good will and you will draw them upward. Have you ever looked at the thing in that light? Do you know how small a figure you cut, my friends? I have a table here, but I cannot take time to read it, but in 10 states who have had votes on the question of prohibition distinct and separate by itself, the votes for prohibition in those states have been 22 times as great as the vote for the "third party" candidates at the nearest election held to those elections.

Here you are, one man saying to 22 others, "We are all against the saloon, but we shall not have anything to do with anything to help suppress it unless it is suppressed on my line." Don't you know, my friends, what the bed-rock of republican institutions is founded upon? It is founded on the presumption that the majority shall rule, and that the minority should acquiesce in it. I know that the majority is not always right. I am not one of those who cry "vox populi, vox Dei." If a man feels thoroughly convinced that his duty calls upon him to take a certain course he should take it if the whole world is against him.

But he should be very careful and not allow his vanity to make him think that he knows more than the 22. I heard a notable man once say that "God and one man was a majority." God would have been in the majority if that man had been left out of the count entirely. It is very true that God and one man is a majority, but, my friends, God and 22 men is a bigger majority. It is a little strange sometimes how everybody who finds himself in a minority, and especially if he has a kind of a sneaking idea that he is also in the wrong, is found hiding behind God and assuming that He is on his side. When you find two sets of men, one good christian man on one side and 22 good christian men on the other, there is 22 times as much presumption that God is on that side as there is that he is on the side of the single man. It would take a good deal of vanity, not to say cheek, to assert to the contrary. Now, two more points and I am through. The first is, that at the present time as a matter of fact, that the third party is nothing more nor less than a saloon-protectory-prohibition party.

Now, I am not trying to hurt any one's feelings. I do not want to do that. I am simply speaking of the actual facts. And the reason of it is that you all know that there is no possibility of your electing your candidates, and you know if you get any considerable number of votes that the result will be that the party that is most intensely in favor of the saloon, which has the largest number of saloon friends in it, a party in which almost the entire liquor fraternity is now concentrated, that that party will be victorious, and its victory, as a matter of course, prolongs the ascendency of the saloon in politics and the saloon in society. Its victory as a matter of course, cannot be otherwise than that it will protect the saloons for the time being. It may be that at some future time if you keep on and get in power, that then you will overthrow it, and if you should ever be able to overthrow it then you would not be a saloon protecting power, if you used that power rightly; but of the present time I am speaking now, while you are in the minority, you are, and must continue, so long to be absolutely a saloon protecting party, and I ask you instead of doing that to come in with us and hasten the time when we can all be saloon suppressing prohibitionists. Have you ever stopped to think how many ifs there were in the way of your arriving at the time when you can do this good. You say that it is necessary to destroy the republican party and build an actual absolute prohibition party before the saloon can be suppressed, and that, therefore, it is right to allow the evil at the present time in order to hasten the greater good in the future. If your premises are right, your conclusions are right, undoubtedly, and I don't question your honesty in them, but just look at it and see what are the difficulties in the way. Why, you have got in the first place to destroy this party which has in its ranks 6,000,000. You have got to destroy this party, around which are clustered the memory of more than a quarter of a century of men of glorious deeds. You have got to crush this party that sustains so many measures and principles that are interwoven with the prosperity and well being of the country, and in order to do that you have got to say to the good people of this party, you must not only come and adopt prohibition, but you must for the time being give up all your interest in either free trade or protection. You must give up all your interest in the civil service; you must give up all your interest in the labor question; you must give up all your interest in the immigration question, and in all the engrossing questions; you must give up all your interest in them and help the party that is opposed to your ideas on all of these to be in power and weakening in mind. You must do all these, not simply for one year, but perhaps for 10 years, and you must do all these simply in the hope that after a while we will be able to have a party that can suppress the saloon. Now look at the ifs in the way; your position amounts to this: If we can get votes enough this year to elect Grover Cleveland and the democratic party in the nation and in the state, and if after we have done this thing, the republican party proves to be a party of power and goes all to pieces, and if its principles having more love for temperance than they have of human nature, that allows men to fight back after they have found their party beaten, they turn around and come to us and lick the hand that smote them, and say we will follow you hereafter and do your bidding, and if there are enough of your members to make your party a majority party, and if when they all come together in your ranks you don't find a man coming up and saying, "Unless you bring woman's suffrage to the front, or some labor question, or some other question to the front we will take and defeat you just as you did the republican party"—if you don't find any such rock at that, then you are going to be in power; but my friends, it will be a long time before you get any of those ifs.

Every generous man when he has made a mistake prefers to bear the burden of that mistake to having it visited upon others, but you will not do that. The terrible error is coming on the innocent and the helpless. You will be the party who will have done it. You will be the party who will be responsible for it, because if you had taken another course these woes would have come to an end sooner. Now my friends, I want to appeal to you to put vanity, put vexation, put anger, put ambition, put all those motives aside, and look at this matter again, dispassionately, and ask yourselves what course shall I pursue at this time in order to secure the greatest good to the greatest number of people now, and when you have decided that matter, decided it acording to the dictates of your own consciences and your own reason, decided it after asking help from God, if you are a Christian, then no matter if it does place you in the attitude of having changed twice between a few months, then take and come out on the side that you know will enable you to do some good at the present time.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Sept. 6th, 1888.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Daniel L. Kelley and Mary E. Kelley, his wife, mortgagors, to Caleb W. No Doubtful States.

Chicago Tribune: "I have been in New York for some time," said national committeeman Christ, of Arizona, yesterday at the Grand Pacific, "and no republican can realize the enthusiasm among the party voters in the east unless he had the opportunity I have had. We are going to carry New York, and I never saw anything like the letters received daily at republican headquarters. We are making no mistakes this year, and if the election in New York were to-morrow we would carry it by 50,000. This may seem incredible, but the facts will sustain the statement. Not only are we sure of New York, but the belief is growing that we will carry every northern state. California, I am reliably informed, will give us the largest majority in her history, and I received a letter a day or two ago from chairman Houston stating that Indiana was safe. Connecticut is all right, and New Jersey will be also. In New York city and Brooklyn the democrats cannot get over 45,000 majority, and we will come down to Harlem bridge with more than 90,000. The Cleveland and Hill democrats will worry and scratch each other, and thus it is that the skillful management of chairmen Quay and Clarkson and the tariff issue are making victory sure."

That able journal, the New York Independent, puts the logic of the situation into an epigram when it says that a vote for the democratic party is a vote for the saloon; a vote for the republican party is a vote against the saloon. Between these two parties lies the only actual choice; for either Harrison, who is a pronounced anti-saloon republican, and the nominee of a temperance party, or Cleveland, a pronounced anti-sumptuary-legislation democrat and the nominee of a saloon party, will be elected. The votes that count for Harrison and temperance will be those that are cast for the republican party; the votes that count for Cleveland and the saloon will be those that are cast for the democratic and third parties.

Mrs. Harrison has not received the notice from the general public to which her prominence, her womanly character, and her many graces of mind and manner justly entitle her. She has long been a worthy assistant to her husband in all his religious and charitable activity. For a number of years she was at the head of the infant department of the First Church Sunday school. She takes a leading part in the missionary and social work of the ladies of the church, and is prominent in the management of several of Indianapolis' public benevolences.

Synopsis of Proposed Constitutional Amendments, prepared By the Attorney General, pursuant to Chapter 157, of General Laws of 1887.

The Legislature of 1887 provided for submitting certain amendments to the State Constitution, to be submitted at the general election to be held in 1888.

The proposed amendments to the provisions of the Constitution to be affected thereby are as follows:

Chapter 1, of the General Laws of 1887, provides that the following amendment to Article 4 of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota, be proposed to the people of said State at the next general election, that is to say, that the said article be amended by adding thereto the following additional section, to be numbered as Section 35: "SEC. 35. Any combination of persons, either as individuals or as members or officers of any corporation to monopolize the markets for food products in this State, or to interfere with or restrict the freedom of such markets is hereby declared to be a criminal conspiracy, and shall be punished in such manner as the Legislature shall provide."

The ballots to be used in voting upon this Amendment shall be as follows: First, ballots in favor of the amendment shall have written or printed or partly written and partly printed thereon the following words: "Amendment to article 4 of the Constitution, by adding thereto a new section in relation to freedom of markets Yes." Second, ballots used against such amendment shall have written or printed or partly written and partly printed thereon the words: "Amendment to article 4 of the Constitution, by adding thereto a new section in relation to the freedom of markets—No."

Article 4 of the Constitution, of which the above section is proposed as an amendment comprises the constitutional provisions relating to the legislative department of the State, and at present contains no provision relating to combinations sought to be prohibited by the proposed amendment.

Section 12 or Article 1 of the State Constitution now reads as follows: "No person shall be imprisoned for debt in this State, and this shall not prevent the Legislature from providing for imprisonment or holding to bail persons charged with fraud in contracting said debt, and a reasonable amount of property shall be exempt from seizure and sale for the payment of any debt or liability. The amount of such exemption shall be determined by law."

It is proposed to amend this as follows: Chapter 2 of the General Laws of 1887 provides that the following amendment to Section 12 of Article 1, of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota, be proposed to the voters of this State at the next general election, to-wit: "Provided, however, that all property so exempted shall be liable to seizure and sale for any debts incurred to any person for work done or material furnished in the construction, repair or improvement of the same, And, provided farther, that such liability to seizure and sale shall also extend to all real property for any debt incurred to any laborer or servant for labor or service performed.

The ballots to be used in voting in favor of this amendment shall have written or printed, or partly written and partly printed thereon the following words: "Amendment to Section 12 of Article 1 of the Constitution of this State for protection of the rights of working men or women—Yes." The ballots to be used in voting against such amendment shall have written or printed or partly written and partly printed thereon the following words: "Amendment to Section 12 of Article 1 of the Constitution of this State, for protection of the rights of working men or women—No."

The effect of this amendment will be to render all property liable for debts incurred for work done or materials furnished in the construction, improvement or repair of such property.

Section 1 of Article 4, of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota, now reads as follows: SECTION 1, Legislature, Session. The Legislature of the State shall consist of the Senate and House of Representatives and shall meet biennially at the seat of government of the State, at such times as shall be prescribed by law, and no session shall exceed the term of sixty days."

It is proposed to amend this section as follows: Chapter 3 of the General Laws of the State of Minnesota of 1887, provides that the following amendment to Section 1 of Article 4, of the Constitution of the State of Minnesota, be proposed to the people of said State at the next general election, that is to say, that said section shall be amended so as to read as follows: "SECTION 1. The Legislature shall consist of the Senate and House of Representatives, which shall meet biennially at the seat of government of the State, at such times as shall be prescribed by law, but no session shall exceed the term of ninety legislative days, and no new bill shall be introduced in either branch, except on the written request of the Governor, during the last twenty days of such session, except the attention of the Legislature shall be called to some matter of general interest by a special message of the Governor."

The ballots to be used in voting in favor of this amendment shall have written or printed or partly written and partly printed thereon the following words: "For the amendment of Section 1 of Article 4, of the Constitution of this State, providing for biennial sessions of the Legislature—Yes," and ballots to be used in voting against said amendment shall have written or printed or partly written and partly printed thereon the following words: "For the amendment of Section 1 of Article 4, of the Constitution of this State, providing for biennial sessions of the Legislature—No."

The Constitution at present provides for biennial sessions, and the effect of this last amendment will be to continue biennial sessions, but instead of such sessions being limited to sixty days, as they are now, they would be limited to ninety days, and no bill could be introduced during the last twenty days except as provided for in such amendment

Dated July 1st, 1888.

Attorney General.

Harrison as a Citizen.

HIS PASTOR OF MANY YEARS SPEAKS OF HIS PROFESSIONS AND PRACTICES.

Some famous men, like prophets, have least honor in their own country; but truly great men, those whose greatness is inherent and not borrowed, are as well able to bear the every-day scrunity of their neighbors as the occasional glimpse of strangers. Of the latter class is General Benjamin Harrison, for here is his pastor, Rev. M. L. Haines, of the First Presbyterian church of Indianapolis, a man who has known the republican candidate for years, writing of him in a leading journal:

"There is about General Harrison an utter absence of pretence or affectation. He discards any attempt to make a show of himself, and would be the last person to speak or act for mere effect. Open and straightforward in both language and actions, he lacks that quality of a politician which makes one expert at 'pulling wires' and 'laying pipes.'

He impresses one as being a man of balanced mind and clear convictions, who would give any truth brought before him a fair chance, but who would allow nothing to swerve him from the path of duty. With him a promise is sacred; with him 'yes' means yes and 'no' means no. He is not a man desirous of dictating to others, nor will he allow himself to be dictated to.

Decided in his convictions, broad in his views, inspired by a high moral purpose, ruled by a conscience both strong and informed, he has led a life in this city conspicuous for its probity and its stainless integrity."

Knifing Each Other.

Pioneer Press.

If the political situation in New York was considered, three weeks ago, to be to the advantage of the republican ticket, the changes which have taken place in that interval ought to turn all doubt into certainty. New York is a state where there is always an immense amount of corrupt dickering between the managers of the several factions and municipal organizations. But this year the internal fight bids fair to outdo all of its predecessors. And the occasion of this primarily, is the course of the so-called independent papers, which are supporting Cleveland and opposing Hill. It is probable that the president never bestowed upon a party opponent with hearty good will such curses as he is now calling down upon his incautious allies. The nomination of Hill for governor is, of course, an utter disgrace to the democratic party and to the state. The basest of demagogues, the mere creature of the associated liquor dealers, the enemy of all good legislation and the proved participant in and beneficiary of the great aqueduct steal, he is not a man for whom a self-respecting citizen should be able to vote. But Mr. Cleveland and his friends were prepared to swallow all this without a grimace. It was the arrangement that, when Gov. Hill disappeared from the presidential lists, he was to support Cleveland, and Cleveland's friends were to help him. This arrangement involved, on the part of the president, no greater sacrifice of honor than his voluntary endorsement of the candidacy of Col. Fellows in the last municipal campaign; and that the compact was fairly carried out on his part was seen in the unopposed control of the state convention by Gov. Hill.

But the mugwumps are fractious again. Instead of coinciding with the president's view of practical politics, they have begun an exceedingly active campaign against Hill and in favor of Mr. Miller for the governorship. This is carried on not only through the newspapers, but by work almost as systematically organized as that of the regular party campaign committees. Circulars showing Hill's record in the aqueduct matter and on the high license and electoral reform bills have been prepared, and it is said that 2,000,000 documents will have been scattered over the state before election day. In addition to this, cards pledging the signer to vote for Cleveland and against Hill are forward to every independent and doubtful democrat on the list. Of these it is reported that 40,000 have already been returned signed, and others are coming in at the rate of 500 per day. Now the interesting feature of this is that it is likely to hurt Mr. Cleveland far more than Gov. Hill. The support of the mugwumps is no passport to success, as Mr. Davenport learned a short time ago; and Gov. Hill is probably no more alarmed now than he was then. But for Mr. Cleveland the thing has its serious side. Hill and his friends are not the sort of men to let such a trade pass unpunished, and their facilities for knifing are unlimited. They have the excuse of being put upon the defensive, and can now proceed, through the New York city organizations and liquor agencies throughout the state, to trade right and left votes for Harrison in exchange for votes for Hill. To prevent this Mr. Cleveland made all his concessions to the most unprincipled elements in New York politics; and now he finds his labors worse than nullified by a pernicious activity of the league of independents, who are giving him a few bad hours in return for the mortification which his civil service policy has imposed upon them. From this time on the efforts of the straight New York democracy will be directed especially toward the re-election of Hill; and this can be accomplished only by the sacrifice of the Cleveland ticket, which combines for them, in rare degree, the elements of self-interest and inclination.

Minneapolis Journal: Considerable fuss has been made by the democratic organs because the state of Minnesota only gets 3 per cent. interest from the banks on time deposits. Three per cent. for funds held subject to call is pretty good interest; it is at least a great deal better than nothing. The general government has $60,000,000 loaned to favorite banks, for which they pay nothing to the government, but for which hey are supposed to pay liberally to the democratic campaign fund. The state democratic organs are not in a position to grumble about the loaning of money to Merriam's bank at 3 per cent. while there is over $1,000,000 paying no interest in the bank of which Col. Brice, the democratic campaign manager, is president, and the democratic house refuses to consider a resolution to investigate the matter.

C. H. SAAKE,
The Jeweler, Main St., Opposite Merchants' Nat'l Bank.

The wage-earners of the one State of Massachusetts have been able to save out of their earnings, and deposit in savings banks, for use on rainy days, more money than have all the wage-earners in Great Britain and Ireland together. They have done this, too, under a protective tariff. This one fact is the whole protective idea in a nutshell, and is of more practical value as an argument in political economy than all the theories in the world. Give it to the first revenue reformer who wants to argue his case with you. He can't get over it if he talks all day, and you need to add nothing to it, unless you say that General Harrison not only represents this brand of protection, but that that he also represents the best mind, manner and manhood of American life.

Harrison's Unique Part.

General Harrison has played a unique part in this campaign. Never before was a presidential candidate of any party visited, day after day, by so many men representing so many trades and avocations as has General Harrison since the day of his nomination, and scarcely ever in the history of any campaign has any candidate been able to touch upon so many live topics of the day without "putting his foot in it.' His speeches have been characterized from the first by the greatest good sense, the highest order of ability in public speaking, and of winning politeness in public speaking. This has been no surprise to General Harrison's friends, for they knew the man, and knew that he had never been found unequal to any occasion. This was true of him in the school-room and on the stump, in his law office and in the court room, on the battle-field and in the senate. Accounting for this happy condition of things the Cincinnati Commercial Gazette says: "General Harrison is strong and ready because he has been a hard-working man all his life, and his faculties have been disciplined and made alert and executive. He has earned all he has, and his habits of application abide with him. He is not elated or oppressed by his position, but he takes it coolly, and is in full possession of himself. The living rock is under his feet, and overhead the sky is clear. He has absolute sincerity and unqualified courage—and he has had such a breadth of experience as few men have profited by, while each day of his life has been in some way good to him. He has lost no time in idleness and wasted no power in dissipation."

Duluth Tribune: Editor McClure, of the Philadelphia Times, (democratic) predicted before the Vermont election that if the republican majority in that state reached 22,000 it would be proof of a tidal wave which would sweep the country and elect the republican ticket. Well, the Vermont majority is neaaly 7,000 greater than Mr. McClure's figures.

Duluth Tribune: The more the people of Minnesota see and hear of the campaign methods of the democrats the more determined they are to vote the republican ticket.

Mr. Wilson's Canvass.

St. Paul Dispatch: No better illustration was ever offered of the stupid folly of endeavoring to promote the fortunes of a candidate for public office by using the weapons of falsehood and abuse against his opponent than that afforded in the case of Eugene M. Wilson. Mr. Wilson is not strictly speaking, the candidate of the democracy of Minnesota; he is the candidate of a special interest within that democracy. The mass of voters who helped to bring Doctor Ames to the very door of the executive chamber have no interest whatever in his election.

They not only express no such interest, but they very deliberately stand apart from his supporters and gently indicate their determination that if he is elected it will not be because of their support. But it will be in many cases, in spite of their concealed hostility.

Nothing will be said against Mr. Wilson. Nothing has been said and nothing need be said. What he is and what and who he represents is known to every intelligent voter in the state.

He is confronted by an opponent of as useful, as clean and as successful life as his. No one short of a nincompoop, possessed of a passing notion that he is capable of influencing the current of events, would have conceived the idea that Mr. Wilson's cause was to be advanced by the defamation of his opponent. The two candidates for governor in this state are two of its best known and most successful men of business. If one possesses merits which the other does not enjoy; if the principles which animate the one in public life are more commendable than those animating the other, the public should be, and will be, apprised of the fact. The discovery that a man is a scoundrel, which follows only upon his nomination for high office is one which long ago ceased to impose upon the judgment of the American elector. He who publicly claims its authorship nowadays writes himself down an ass.

Mr. William R. Merriam stands upon the principles and record of his party in the state and nation, as well as on the character which he has won for himself as a public man and a man of business. He has lived all his days here, and his neighbors and the public generally are familiar with his career and his capacity. He is a typical representative of the young element of his party. He is bound to no man by personal or political obligation and, if elected, no reason has been shown why he shall not be as fearless and as impartial as govenor, as he proved himself to be, two years ago, as speaker of the state house of representatives. He is consistant. No republican paper has been compelled to anticipate, by publishing the abuse heaped by him, on a former occasion, on the men and the nfluences that he affiliates with in politics today. He has no grievancei and he has no enemies except those whose enmity can find no rational explanation either in what he has said or in what he has done.

The issue between Mr. Merriam and Mr. Wilson in this election is not which of the two, if either, is the rascal, but which of the two, taking into account private and public character, private and public associations and political principles, is the better man for governor of Minnesota.

Chas. dAutremont said "This is a campaign of argument, of reason." He may have been sincere in this but he certainly forgot the St. Paul Globe that has been filled with lies against every republican candidate in the field. He forgets the cry of boodle, raised by the Globe and echoed and re-echoed by every democratic organ and speaker in the state. If the democrats call this a campaign of argument and reason we hope never to experience one of their personal campaigns.

On Monday evening the democrats had a quiet meeting at the opera house: Chas. d'Autremont, and D. B. Johnson talked. Mr. d'Autremont commenced with the statement that this is a campaign of reason, very different from the last campaign which was composed of personal abuse. Said he rejoiced in the fact that this was a campaign of reason and then went on and rang the changes on the "dollar a day" and "Chinese" chestnuts. On the tariff he has some very peculiar notions and upon his own showing the democratic Mills bill makes no more reduction than does the republican senate bill which bill makes no onslaught upon northern industries which the Mills bill does, and also protects southern interests all right enough. He said that the object of the attack on the woolen interests in the Mills bill was to furnish cheaper clothing for poor people in this cold country, but he failed to show how. "Why," said he, "you know it don't cost much to raise sheep. All you have to do to keep a flock of 5,000 is to get a cheap Chinaman and range enough,—the Chinaman don't cost much and the range costs nothing!" With such "arguments" as these the speaker labored for an hour and a half in the effort to convince people that the democratic party is not a free trade party and that their free trade policy is the best one for the country. He misinterprets the intelligence of his audience if he thinks that our people can be caught with such chaff. Mr. Johnson got up and lauded Doc. Ames and Cleveland's administration to the skies, showing clearly what a bad mistake the democratic party made by allowing Me and Mike to down Ames and put up Wilson, (a mistake that will cost them the election.) He talked along in his breezy, rattling style till one man tumbled in a fit and the meeting broke up in excitement.

The Times tries very hard to misconstrue what we said about the insult to Mr. Hill in that committee meeting two years ago, trying to make us out an apologist for monopoly. It matters not, Mr. McKenzie, how much of a monopolist a man may be, that furnishes no excuse for such language as Mr. Canning used to him. Mr. Canning was greatly incensed at the exhorbitant railroad charges, but that was no reason that he should forget himself so far as to use language unbecoming a gentleman and a representative of this great district. The Times knows that as well as we do, but could not forbear to use what it considered an opportunity to injure THE JOURNAL by a mean little low-lived fling like that. THE JOURNAL was fighting the Monopoly long before the Times young man was born—into the newspaper world—and all the Times can say can have no influence one way or the other.

Frank Adams passed through on the down train Saturday, en route for Minneapolis. He spent the summer on the western slope, visiting San Francisco, Tacoma, Seattle, Portland and other places of note. He was a member of the Portland club which cleaned out everything it met until it met its Waterloo in the Willamette club, being beaten by a scratch by it. Frank says the loss of his mill broke Bigham all up and he has been doing little of anything since. He saw Bob Houston at work on a barge for H. M. Pierce, who is doing a big lumber business. He saw Tom Box, who now owns a third interest in a grocery store. L. O'Brien has plenty of mason work at $5 per day. He saw W. H. Jennings, at 7:05 on Monday morning, Oct. 1st, standing near his large shingle mill, anxiously looking for the appearance of his engineer, who had not shown up yet. Says Jennings is coining wealth in shingles, (is using New York oil as a lubricator,) and is as happy as a clam at high tide—has struck oil this time. Frank met Mrs. Box and the children at the Glazier house, half way to Tacoma, on Wednesday noon. The trains met there and took dinner, and thus he had a good opportunity for a little chat. Says Mrs. B. was enduring the journey nicely. Frank will remain in St. Paul this winter or, as he said, "until after the shower." Says the winter rain had set in and it would rain without let up until next spring. He thinks by the way people are pouring into that country everything must soon be largely overdone. He may join the Portland's next season.

Prof. Casey was up on Friday evening. There is blood on the moon. He alighted firmly from the train, and in a calm, dignified manner, peculiarly his own when he feels that way, walked deliberately from the depot to—Cowings, by the back way, where he was seen to purchase a—revolver. He was overheard to exclaim as he gazed firmly into the open—barrel: "Come off, (Mc) Duff (y) and d(oggone)d be he who &c." There is blood on the moon.

H. G. Palmer was in the city on Saturday night. Mr. Palmer is engaged in the butter and egg business at Waterloo, Iowa. He says that business is a mine of wealth to the Iowa farmers, and he thinks in time this country will be extensively engaged in it. He says the conditions are far more favorable here than there, owing to climatic reasons, if nothing more, the nights there being sultry and hot, unfavorable to keeping butter, and our native grasses are peculiarly adapted to making good butter. He thinks the time is not far distant when Polk County will be as noted for her excellent butter as she now is for her her superior wheat.

After Many Years of Waiting THE DULUTH & WINNIPEG R. R. Will Be Built.

THE CONTRACT

For Grading to the Mississippi River Let to Responsible Parties who are to Complete it this Fall.

On Friday, Mr. E. D. Childs returned from Chicago where he had been to attend a directors meeting of the Duluth & Winnipeg R. R., at which meeting more important work was done than ever before in the history of that road, as the contract to grade to the Mississippi River was let, the work to be done before Jan. 1st '89. It is the intention of the company to push the work to completion as rapidly as possible. The road will run via Crookston and Fisher north to the boundary line and will be ready for business one year from now if men and money can accomplish it. Men will be kept at work clearing the right of way all winter or until that work is completed through the wooded country, ties will be got out and everything in readiness for lively work all along the line next spring, and by next fall Crookston will see what she has long waited and hoped for direct communication with Duluth. Let us hear no more croaking in the future but let us all now take hold with a will to place our city where she belongs in the ranks of the foremost cities of the state, for now dawns the day we have so long and patiently longed for.

Evidently Skipped.

Mr. E. D. Childs is just now very much interested as to the whereabouts of Frank V. Lytle who don't seem to be in the country neither is the wheat he raised this year. It seems that by his contract with Childs & Co., for a section of land, he was to deliver a certain quantity of wheat this year. Mr. C. had advanced $500 to pay his threshing bills and the next thing he knew Frank had gone, also the wheat, leaving the men unpaid. It has a very bad look.

How's This.

The Times howls for free wool in order that the poor laborer may have cheap clothing. In that same paper is an advertisement of "500 ALL WOOL suits at $8 each!" Comment is unnecessary.

Look out for Them.

It has been the custom of the democrats, just before election when too late to show their falsehood to spring a lot of campaign lies against the republican candidates in hopes to catch a few votes by the deception. It was so in the case of the Morey letter, which, no doubt deceived many, causing them to vote against Blaine, and so it will no doubt be in this campaign. In fact we have pretty good authority for the prediction that already they are preparing a lot of stuff to be launched on the eve of election. A story that has to wait until too late for the other side to offer anything in rebuttal is only for campaign effect and is unworthy of any confidence whatever. Do not be deceived by them.

SANDERS, Oct. 8, 1888.

ED. JOURNAL: It is a matter of great importance to whom we trust the education of our children, whether he be a teacher or the superintendent. "As the teacher is, so will the school be." The same term may be applied to the superintendent in regard to both the schools and the teachers; he is a teacher, and the principal. The teacher's deportment should be such that his influence will be great over the young for all that is good, noble and elevating. He should be a man whose very thoughts are worthy of imitation, in fact a perfect model of the virtues. His every word and act should tell his pupils and patrons that he possesses the true spirit of morality and christianity. At the pending election the superintendent's destiny in politics for the next two years is determined. A man upon whom we could depend ought to be elected. I have been under the supervision of five different superintendents, but have not seen one who labored so faithfully and impartially for the benefit and improvement of the schools as our present worthy superintendent. He has a large experience in school affairs and capable for his office. He ought to be elected by an overwhelming majority.
O. T. TANBERG.

Crumdodger's Partner.

On the Fourth of July a little episode occurred in San Antonio, Texas, which is calculated to shake the reader's faith in the existence of such a thing as human gratitude and make him believe that friendship is a myth, and that the only bosom friends are the warm chest protector and the affectionate porous plaster.

Pat Murphy is the proprietor of the Little Gem restaurant on Soledad street. Not long since he leased a man named Crumdodger to act as waiter in his restaurant. Although very green, Crumdodger was not a colored waiter. He was a "sallow complected" white man, whose only claim to personal beauty was a pair of long, emaciated legs that had curves in them like the delivery of a professional base ball pitcher. He also owned a long nose, so sharp at the end that it would have disemboweled a fly to alight on it. But Crumdodger had a kind and sympathetic heart for his fellow-man, and that is what got him into trouble: Murphy rented Crumdodger on probation and $7 a week; he was also allowed to become, free of charge, the sepulcher of as much hash as his system called for.

On the Fourth of July Murphy, like a patriotic Irishman that he is, took part in the parade, leaving Crumdodger superintendent and viceroy of the hostelrie. As usual, whenever Murphy was away, Crumdodger became soaked with the idea that he was the sole proprietor of the Little Gem restaurant, and that Murphy was only a little dog tied behind the wagon. About half-past twelve, the usual time for business people in San Antonio to telescope their food, there was quite a brilliant coterie in the restaurant. Some of the guests were inserting food into their conversational apertures, while others were using their facial gashes to swear at Crumdodger for his slowness, which was truly monumental.

Just at this crisis a stranger entered and requested food, which he apparently needed to prolong animal life. His appearance indicated him to be a middle-aged tramp, but he had all the modern improvements. He did not impress the guests favorably, and Judge Noonan, who is very neat in his personal attire, thought that the stranger, as a sanitary measure, ought to be fired out of a mortar loaded with carbolic acid. Handsome Colonel Anton Adam, another guest, intimated that the tramp was so ugly that he ought to sleep twenty hours a day to give his features a rest, while a New York drummer said he would be willing to gamble that even a Jersey woman would run from the intruder.

Crumdodger, in his exalted position as crown prince of the beanery, turned fiercely on the tramp and was on the verge of giving him a complimentary ride out of the door on the prow of his boot, when he paused—a look of recognition flashed across his face—and a moment later the guests were treated to a Damon and Pythias tableau, with no blue lights, but real tears.

"Why, Bunge! Old fell! For heaven's sake where did you come from? how glad I am to see you!" and Crumdodger wiped real tears from his eyes with the mop rag.

"Haw! Haw!" roared the tramp, "yer kin jest bet I'm glad ter see yer. For two days I've had nothing ter eat. Yer can't imagine the feeling I've got here," patting himself where his watchpocket ought to be.

"Just sit down here, Bunge old boy, and browse away until every durned wrinkle in that coat is filled out. I'll show you the kind of a friend I am. I'm like muscilage—I stick to prosperity and adversity," replied Crumdodger.

It was not necessary for Bunge to refer this invitation to any committee, as it was promptly accepted in the spirit in which it was tendered. On this subject Bunge was a unit.

Crumdodger carefully put the vag's cane—a large bludgeon covered with a large crop of adult wens—in a corner, and hung his subterfuge for a hat on a nail, removing a gentleman's new shiny stovepipe hat to the floor to make room for it, into which as absent-minded reporter of the local paper in which the Little Gem ad. appeared expectorated copiously at intervals.

"Waiter," roared Colonel Anton Adam, pounding on the table with the handle of his knife, "when am I going to get that beefsteak and onions I ordered an hour ago? I can't stay here all the afternoon. You must have an idea that because I am a public official my time is of no value."

"Yes," said Judge Noonan, mildly, "and, waiter, if that fried chicken is done I would like to tackle it. A woman could get ready to go to the theater in the time it takes you to fill an order."

Crumdodger left his new found friend, and going in the rear of the screen behind which the mysteries of the cuisine are ambushed, soon returned with a tray of beefsteak and onions, fried chicken and other things calculated to quell the demon hunger in his lair. Colonel Adam's mouth was watering with hunger, and he smiled as pleasantly as a man who rips open an envelope in which a check is inclosed, and tucking his napkin under his chin he squared himself for action. Judge Noonan also looked wistfully at the approaching feast, and wore an expression such as is sometimes seen on the face of the man who finds a dime in his last year's vest.

They were surprised, however, when Crumdodger sailed past them with uplifted tray and a "not-forget-you" look on his face, and place the viands before the friend of his youth, his old chum, Bunge, who proceeded to pull himself over the supplies hand over fist, as it were.

With a single effort Crumdodger's chum retired Colonel Anton Adam's steak from circulation, and a moment later he warehoused all the sweet potatoes in sight. At the same time he converted his throat into a miniature Niagara by flushing his bronchial tubes with a large pitcher of milk.

"Gents, that grub of yours will be ready after a while. Don't be impatient; no use lacerating your clothes. The world wasn't made in a minute and a half," said Crumdodger to the exasperated devotees of beef-stake and fried chicken.

"Talk about gall," said Colonel Anton Adam through his teeth, "this beats anything I ever saw. Julius Cæsar wrote that all Gaul was divided into three parts, but this confounded waiter seems to have gotten it all, undivided; and, as for his friend, when it comes to upholstering his digestive parlors with our dinners, he seems to be somewhat of an enthusiast."

"Glad his seedy friend isn't twins," remarked Judge Noonan, eyeing Bunge, "otherwise we would have to fasten tin bills to our noses and take our chances with the hens in scratching gravel for angle-worms. I, for one, am going across the street to the Delmonico."

"So am I," replied Colonel Adam, and their coat-tails fluttered mournfully as they passed out of the door.

"By the eternal gods!" yelled an undertaker, whose patience had given out, although he generally takes things coolly, "the boss shall hear of this in fifteen minutes. I won't stand it;" and kicking over his chair he left for the Alamo Plaza in search of Pat Murphy, who had on previous occasions come very near furnishing him with business.

Incidentally it may be mentioned that Murphy was a fighter from way back and when he remonstrated with a man it meant six months in a hospital with careful nursing.

After Bunge had gorged himself until he was out of danger of suffocation, he leisurely walked out, picking his teeth, without as much as thanking his benefactor. As Bunge went out the front door, a man in plug hat and regalia and fire in his eye, darted into the back door. It was Murphy, the real boss of the restaurant, who had been informed of the debauchery going on in his establishment, and had hurried back to straighten things out, particularly Crumdodger.

There was a sound of revelry by day. People passing imagined a ward meeting was in session inside. Thuds, cries of pain and crude profanity with an imported accent floated out into the street, and at last out came Crumdodger. Most of his pleasant expression had been knocked off his face before he could get out. It is difficult to describe the evolutions of the kind hearted waiter after he was on the sidewalk. He acted as if he was in a hurry to see somebody on the opposite side of the street, but owing to a kick by Murphy he came near frescoeing a convenient telegraph pole with his brains. However, he contented himself with simply encrusting it with a few of his front teeth. He then collapsed into an assortment of arms and legs, but he pulled himself together and sought to tear himself away. A jeering crowd gathered, at the head of which was his dear chum, Bunge, whose loud "haw! haw!" could be heard over all others.

Poor Crumdodger managed to get to his feet and started down the street, closely followed by Murphy (who was still pounding him), and a large crowd, among which—despite his heavy dinner—waddled Bunge, who occasionally prodded his benefactor with his stick, in spite of the "et tu Brute" glances of the aforesaid wretched Crumdodger. With every punch of his warty stick the overfed bum yelled:

"Slug him! Slug the bow-legged hash-slinger! Don't be particklar where you smash him! He's got no friends! Break his face!" etc., etc.,

Poor Crumdodger was finally rescued from Bunge and the rest of the mob by the police and locked up, all of which goes to show, as I have already intimated, that gratitude is one of the lost arts, and that he who expects to find any of it in a tramp might as well search for a tear in the eye of a darning needle.

A Pretty Lively "Microbe."

A Mr. Clark called on Inspector Byrnes recently with a letter he had received from Jacksonville, Fla., and which contained a yellow insect, which the writer a druggist, described as a "yellow-fever microbe," adding: "It circled in front of my store and made an attack upon several prominent citizens, and I send it to you as a curiosity."

Mr. Clark became alarmed and sent it to headquarters at once. A sergeant-detective piloted Mr. Clark over to Dr. Edson's office and desired the chief of the bureau of contagious deseases to explain the relation this parasite bore to the dreadful scourge which has wrought such sad havoc in Florida. Dr. Edson examined the "microbe" beneath a powerful microscope and pronounced it to be a full-fledged yellow hornet.—New York World.

Tried to Trade Wives!

An Indianapolis special to the Philadelphia Press says:

"In a divorce suit filed at Lafayette the plaintiff, Lena Christoffer, alleged that three months after marriage her husband went on a spree and made a trade to sell his wife to Jacob Demerly. In return Christopher was to recive Demerly's wife. The trade was perfectly satisfactory until a few days afterward, when Demerly called at the house and Christoffer attempted to deliver the property.

"The plaintiff refused to be delivered, and this so angered the husband that he threatened to kill her if she did not leave the house. In great fear she left the premises and has since continued to reside with an aunt. The defendant is quite wealthy and his wife an intelligent and a rather prepossessing woman."

A Bird of Good Omen.

Territorial Enterprise.

Vincent Scappatura, the man who a week or two ago wandered away from a party engaged in surveying a route for the Salt Lake and Los Angeles railroad, and was alone for four days in the Pahranagat desert, Eastern Nevada, is now safe with his relatives in Salt Lake City. For four days before he was rescued he remained near a small spring and had a scant allowance of water only on which to sustain life. He found shelter from the sun in the shadow of a shelving rock about a thousand feet above his spring.

The spring was intermittent in its flow. One day he could hardly collect enough water to fill his canteen. The third day he suffered much from hunger. He tried to eat a species of cactus, but could not swallow it. He had been sick and weak before he was lost, and the fourth day made up his mind that he could go down to the spring no more.

The night before a pack of coyotes howled about the rock under which he lay, and one of the animals came quite near and looked at him. Scappatura says: "The grim thought came that he was making calculations on eating me shortly."

On the fourth day when he was thinking about the several fasting cranks, and wondering how long he would last, a little bird came to him. It settled down on the rock near him and gave him a song.

He then felt that help was coming and that he would be rescued that day. He kept a bright outlook, and as the day wore on saw a black object far away on the desert. Presently he could make out two men on a buckboard and behind them a man on horseback. They drove to the spring and halted to cook a meal. Scappatura felt that he was saved.

As he rose and started down the face of the mountain the little bird again came into his mind and he turned to look for it. It was seated on the shelving rock under which he had lain, and fluttering its wings.

The men had come out in search of Scappatura, and they took him to Hiko, Lincoln county, and cared for him until he was able to travel. He will always believe that the little bird came to tell him to keep a bright lookout for the help that was coming.

His Just Wrath.

Editorials in the Hickory Fork Sentinel: "It has come to our ears that the Rev. John Horn, during a prayer before his congregation at Elk Creek Church recently, made some very uncomplimentary and uncalled-for remarks in regard to the editor of this paper. He prayed that our paper might wither as it falls from the press and that the hand that writes its editorials might be paralyzed. Now, here is the reason why Mr. Horn uttered such a prayer: Last year he came out as candidate for justice of the peace. We had nothing against him, although he is a Methodist and we a Baptist, and would have supported him, but when we asked him to put his announcement in our paper he hemmed and hawed, and that, too, after we had offered him the half-rate which we usually extend to the clergy. Then we told him that if he would give us $3 we would print his announcement. What did he do? He wrote out a lot of notices and stuck them up on trees. Could an American citizen brook such an insult? We think not. Is a citizen of this great commonwealth called upon to bear such contempt? We do not think he is: so, with the pen of just retribution, we, 'pricked this bull calf till he roared again.' We threw ourselves into the campaign; we in the language of Logan chief, the Mingoes, glutted our vengeance. We saw the reverend gentleman defeated, and then we quietly sought our humble abode. Now, this man must run us into one of his prayers. He must hold us up before a congregation and persuade his hearers to look upon us with contempt. Pray on, weak vessel, covered with the rust of iniquity—pray on, for the prayers of the wicked are of no avail, but if ever you come near us, you gobbler-headed hypocrite, we'll give you a kicking that will appeal to every ungodly joint in your body."—Arkansaw Traveler.

A Stolen Secret.

The following anecdote is told in English Mechanic: There used to be, close to Temple Bar, in London, an old chemist's shop. The proprietor of it in days gone by, enjoyed the monopoly of making citric acid. More favorably circumstanced than other secret manufacturers, his was a process that required no assistance. He employed no workmen. Experts came to sample and assort and bottle his products. They never entered his laboratory. The mystic operations by which he grew rich were confined to himself. One day having locked the doors and blinded the windows sure, as usual, our chemist went home. A chimney-sweep, or boy disguised as such, wide awake in chemistry, was on the watch. Following the secret-keeper so far on his way to Charing Cross as to be sure he would not return that day, the sooty philosopher hied rapidly back to Temple Bar, ascended the low building, dropped down the chimney-flue, saw all he wanted and returned, carrying with him the mystery of making citric acid. The monopoly of the inventor was gone. A few months after, and the price was reduced by four-fifths. The poor man was heart-broken, and died shortly afterwards ignorant of the trick by which he had been victimized. Like Miss Tabitha Bramble, when informed that the thunder had spoiled two barrels of beer in her cellar, he might have said, "How the thunder should get there when the cellar was double locked, I can't understand."

A large mountain lion is terrorizing the inhabitants in the vicinity of Boulder park, near Deadwood. No one ventures forth at night without a gun.

James Miller, accused of passing a forged check on a merchant in Grand Forks, admitted his guilt recently and was sent to jail in default of $1,000 bail.

It leaks out in well informed political circles that the confirmation of Judge Templeton by the senate is not likely to follow soon. His nomination is said to be hung up.

The superintendent of the public schools at Sioux Falls has made his report for the month of September showing an attendance of 893 scholars, 738 of whom were neither absent nor tardy.

A Burleigh county farmer, who refused 85 cents per bushel for his wheat, says that considering the price which wheat will bring within two months the Missouri Valley has raised the biggest crop in its history this year.

George Devoe, near Yankton, recently thrashed his flax and by actual measurement the product yielded fifteen bushels to the acre. This is said to be the largest yield yet reported in Yankton county, and the flax is of the best quality.

A farmer near Lake Madison harvested a crop of rye this year from one acre of ground which yielded twelve bushels. The most remarkable part of the story is that he had never sown any rye on that piece of ground and is unable to account for the growth.

A five-foot vein of coal has been discovered on the farm of H. H. Brekke, living ten miles from Pierre. The coal is pronounced of a quality similar to the Hocking Valley. The vein is thirty feet deep and promises to supply all Dakota with cheap coal.

The Deadwood Pioneer makes this statement: "As an indication of the changed condition of business in Deadwood, a month ago only one man and boy were employed in the job printing department of the Pioneer. At present it requires five men and two boys to keep pace with the orders."

The Sioux Falls Press wants a hospital and by way of a starter remarks: "Physicians give it as their opinion that the coming winter will witness more sickness, suffering and destitution, and more demands, on the county for aid, than any previous year in the county's history. This ought to hurry the hospital matter along."

The Rapid City Republican makes the following prediction for the marble industries in the Hills: "The time is not far distant when the marble industry of the Hills will occupy one of the front seats. In quality the marble is not excelled by any marble of the same shade on the American continent. It takes a high polish and its color is rather pleasing to the eye.

Mrs. Sadie Stewart committed suicide near Aberdeen by drowning in a well. About a year ago she married a man employed in a ticket office at Wahpeton, and about three months afterwards learned that he had another wife so she left him. About two weeks ago she gave birth to a child. She was a lady of good education and pleasing address.

The Salvation army has decided to make a vigorous campaign in Bismarck during the session of the legislature. The officers of this army of reformers have written to Bismarck stating that as their finances would not warrant their sending a whole company they hoped that the local reform talent would furnish singers and exhorters for two meetings each day in the capitol building during the session.

Michael Lynch and James Rich of Manvel, were arrested for violating the local option law and had a hearing before Justice Sullivan. Both men were held to the grand jury and gave $500 bonds for their appearance. The local option law in this locality at least, is farcical. To-day there is a display of injunctions. The saloons are closed. To-morrow every rum dive is in full blast and doors wide open.

There has been a good deal of complaint against the Northern Pacific and the Manitoba roads, since it has been definitely ascertained that there will be a short wheat crop, because of the grain rates of these two roads. The roads and the commissioners have had several conferences in regard to the matter, and it is expected that arrangements will be made to bring about a reduction.

Experience.

Teaches that certain vegetables exert in digestion a powerful influence on the blood; deficient nutrition is stimulated, the burdened current is unloaded, and poisons withheld from the parts which they polute and defile. This simple, natural action, purifying the blood, is promptly accomplished by Hood's Sarsaparilla, a skillful combination of such vegetable extracts, whose active qualities and native excellencies are concentrated by a process peculiar to itself, and found in no other preparation. Hood's Sarsaparilla does actually strain out impurities, removes obstructions, and opens the natural outlets of the system.

THE GIRLS THAT ARE WANTED.

The girls that are wanted are good girls—
Good from the heart to the lips;
Pure as the lily is white and pure,
From its heart to its sweet leaf tips.

The girls that are wanted are home girls—
Girls that are mother's right hand,
That fathers and brothers can trust to,
And the little ones understand.

Girls that are fair on the hearthstone,
And pleasant when nobody sees;
Kind and sweet to their own folk,
Ready and anxious to please.

The girls that are wanted are wise girls
That know what to do and to say;
That drive with a smile or a soft word
The wrath of the household away.

The girls that are wanted are the girls of sense,
Whom fashion can never deceive;
Who can follow whatever is pretty,
And dare, what is silly, to leave.

The girls that are wanted are careful girls,
Who count what a thing will cost;
Who use with a prudent, generous hand,
But see that nothing is lost.

The girls that are wanted are girls with hearts;
They are wanted for mothers and wives;
Wanted to cradle in loving arms
The strongest and frailest of lives.

The clever, the witty, the brilliant girl,
They are very few, understand;
But, oh! for the wise, loving, home girls
There's a constant and steady demand.
—New York Ledger.

THE PERILS OF AUTHORSHIP.

Mildred's pretty face wore a new expression as she toyed with her teaspoon and tried to finish her roll and coffee. John had just left her for his office. They had been married three months, and the serious aspects of life were for the first time presenting themselves.

The problem of income and outgo had made a fair showing on paper. A small apartment—fuel and gas included—one servant, and with such loads of wedding presents, absolutely nothing to buy, they could actually save money. But, somehow, there were leaks which had not been considered, and ten dollars covered a much smaller amount in time and space than John or Mildred had supposed.

"I wish I could do something to help John," thought Mildred as she gazed abstractedly out of the window. "He has to work so hard," and gave a little sigh.

"What can I do?" she pondered. "What can I do?" she asked herself again and again, as with deft touch she straightened and arranged the dainty apartment.

Suddenly her face looked as if a door had opened and flooded it with sunlight.

"I know what I will do; I will write a story. I know I can if I try. People do not have to be so awfully clever to do that. It is a knack, not a talent. There is Mrs ——, who has made heaps of money; and her stories are only poor trash—all of them. John says so."

Before another hour had passed the outline of a plot was dancing in her excited young brain, and as soon as she could get the time she sat down with pad and sharpened pencil. Then came a pause. "How shall I begin?"

She drew little geometric figures on the margin of her paper as she reflected, her thoughts seeming to revolve in a circle, returning ever to the place from whence they started. Finally she wrote:

"In a small village on the banks of—"

"Oh, that is so commonplace. No; that will not do." And she tore off the first sheet of her pad and reflected again, then wrote:

"Frank Atwood was the only son of a—"

"No, no; that is too stupid," and the second sheet of the pad went into the waste paper basket.

She recalled what John had said of the superfluous first three pages, which might with benefit to most stories be eliminated—for John was a journalist and literary critic, and his standards and ideals were just on the measure of her own. So she thought with great deference of what he had said about tedious preambles.

"He is right," she said with decision. "It is the personal interest in the characters which we are looking for in reading a story. All that comes before that is tedious superfluity.

"I will dash right on with a letter from the heroine, which will at once explain the situation." So with the confidence which came from feeling herself at last on the right track, she wrote:

"'Dear Frank: I return herewith the letters, which of course I have now no right to keep. I need not tell you what it costs me.

"I have reflected much upon what you said yesterday, but I am at last resolved. I will not see you again. Any attempt to make me break this resolve will be fruitless. God knows you have only yourself to blame that this marriage has—'

"Please ma'am," said the cook, coming suddenly in upon the young authoress. "Please ma'am, the butcher is here. Will you come and see him and give the order yerself about havin' them chops frenched or whatever it is."

"Oh, what a bore," sighed Mildred. "I was just getting into the swing of it." And she left the manuscript upon her desk to be resumed later.

The matter of the chops disposed of there were other things requiring attention.

At last, however, she was at her desk again. She read over the letter with which her story opened to see how it sounded. "Really," said she, "I think that starts off very well," and then she took up the broken thread. "Only yourself to blame that this marriage has—" A violent ringing at the telephone again broke the current. "Hallo," said our young novelist.

"Mildred, is that you?"

"Yes, is it you, Alice?"

"Yes. Mamma does not feel very well and wishes you to take luncheon with us. She has sent the carriage. Be ready to come soon as it arrives." Obviously no more authorship today. So slipping her paper into her desk she departed.

Now John was a nice sort of a fellow. But we may as well acknowledge at once that he was not so heroic, nor so wise, nor so infallible an authority as his wife supposed.

She had taken the outline of the real John, touched it up with the glowing colors of her imagination and out of it had made an ideal John, which while it bore a strong resemblance to the real was nevertheless largely a work of art.

But, after subtracting these additions from the real, there was still left a very excellent fellow, with good talents, which he was using with rather brilliant effectiveness in journalism and various kinds of literary work, who was adoringly fond of his wife, and had not yet recovered from his surprise at his excessive good fortune in possessing that much coveted treasure—for whom he had contended, with many others, in those anxious days of courtship. And now—there she was at home, waiting for him, while he was urging his brain to the top of its speed, and driving his quill in eager haste, thinking only of what it would bring for him to lay at her feet.

Mildred was right in thinking he felt anxious at times, for things did not always turn out as he hoped. And he oftentimes felt disheartened when he thought that with the fullest measure of success which he could achieve his profession could never yield what so peerless a wife as Mildred deserved. For, of course, he had with his imagination retouched the real Mildred too.

The new purpose of authorship brought a great light and hope into Mildred's life. She felt important—indeed that she was much more important than people was aware. That she was carrying a very large secret—that if John only knew!

Then she pictured to herself his reading her story, possibly reviewing it. After he has written all kinds of nice things about it I will tell him I am the author; or—or and her heart turned cold and sick—what if he should say it was trash? For of course, like other good critics, John was seldom pleased. If things were all excellent, what would be the need of critics? So he had cultivated the art of discovering flaws in what seemed to ordinary readers pure gems. He had developed rather a talent for pilloring people in a single terse phrase, and was much valued for his skill in beating down with the editorial club tender young aspirants who were trying to make themselves heard. This sounds brutal. But he was only professionally brutal. In his personal characteristics none could be more tender or sympathetic.

Mildred knew of this caustic vein and believed it too—as she did also of John's attributes and gifts—"but," she thought, "if he should say any of those dreadful things about me; what should I do? I should never—never—tell him."

And so during the entire day she thought and planned. New intricacies of plot suggesting themselves—vivid and interesting scenes coming before her stimulated imagination.

Her mother urged her remaining and sending for her husband to dine with them. Her secret desire was to return, but she looked at her mother's wistful face and had not the heart to refuse. She would stay and send for John.

That gentleman arrived at home at the usual hour. As he put his latchkey into the door he smiled thinking of the quick ear which was listening for it, and of the pretty apparition which would meet him in the hall. "By jove," he thought, "what a lucky fellow I am."

But the expected figure did not come to meet him. He was conscious of a little chill of disappointment, and still more as he wandered through the rooms and found all silent and deserted.

He rang for the maid.

"Where is your mistress?"

"She is out, sir. There's a note, sir, somewhere," and she looked anxiously about. "Oh, it is on her desk," said she with returning memory, starting to go for it.

"No matter, I will get it," and John turned his impatient steps to ards his wife's room.

There was no note on the desk and quite naturally he opened the lid. His eyes were riveted upon the words before him.

Dear Frank: I return herewith the letters which I have no longer any right to keep. I need not tell you what it costs me—

He felt as if his blood were turned into ice.

I have reflected much upon what you said yesterday—

"Yesterday!"—John felt as if he were going mad. "Yesterday!"—and he had so trusted her! The room had grown black and a great sledge hammer was beating in his brain, but he read on——upon what you said yesterday, but I am at last resolved. I will not see you again. Any attempt to make me break this resolve will be fruitless. God knows you have only yourself to blame that this marriage has—

John stood for a few moments as if turned into stone, his face blanched, his muscles tense. Then a ray of hope seemed to come to him. "There is no signature; it is not hers." He looked again. How could he doubt it? He knew too well the turn of every letter. He was alternately livid with rage and choking with grief. His dream of happiness vanished. Something like a curse came from between his closed teeth.

"She loves this man, and she meets him and tells him so, and only yesterday. Oh, it is too horrible! too horrible!" He buried his face in his hands and groaned. "I shall go away; I shall never—" At that moment the telephone bell rang. He took no notice of it. "I shall never—" Again it rang long and loud. What should he do? There was no one else to answer it; he must go. So he said huskily, "Hello!"

Mildred's silvery voice replied, "John, is that you?"

The situation was shocking. How could he reply?—but—there was no time for reflection. He knew that the Central Office would share all his confidences through that infernal piece of black walnut and ebony. So he said: "Yes."

"Why do you not come? Dinner is waiting for you."

How well he knew the pretty inflexion of that voice!

"I wish no dinner—I am going away—good-bye."

It might have been the conventional telephonic "good-bye," or it might contain a profounder meaning.

The effect at the other end of the line cannot be described. Ten minutes later a cab drove furiously up to the door of the Apartment House, and Mildred, with white face and fast beating heart, rushed into the room, and would have rushed into John's arms if he had let her.

"You are going away?" she said breathlessly.

"You are a clever actress," said that gentleman repulsing her intended embrace.

"A what?" said she, amazed. "John, what's the—"

"A very clever actress," said he quite as if she had not spoked, "but hereafter we will have a more perfect understanding and you need not trouble yourself."

"Why, John," said she, "have you lost your senses?"

"No; on the contrary, I have recovered them. I am no longer a dupe. I was fool enough to think you—"

"John, for God's sake tell me what this means!"

"Oh, Mildred! Mildred!" said he breaking down utterly. "Why did you not tell me like an honest woman that you loved some one else?"

"John, you know. I—"

"Stop!" said he. "Stop! do not stain your soul with any more falsehood."

"You need not have married me," went on the wretched man. "God knows I wish you had not."

She tried to put her arms about him as he paced to and fro in rapid strides, but he pushed her away angrily. "No, no more of that. That has lost its charm."

Mildred burst into tears.

"I never—would—have—believed—you would be—so—truel," sobbed she. "What—have I done?"

"Done?" shouted the exasperated man, "done? Why, you have spoiled the life of an honest man, who doted on you, believed in you—like a trusting fool—who would have risked his life on your honesty—"

"Stop," said Mildred, and she gathered herself up to a fuller height than John's eyes had ever before beheld in her. She too was angry now.

"If you have charges to make I demand that they be definite, and not in base innuendo. You are very cruel and also very insulting to me. I shall not remain in this house to-night; nor return to it until you have apologized." And she swept from the room and from John's astonished sight.

A moment later he heard the messenger call, then heard his wife give an order for a cab, then saw her packing a handbag. He intended doing the same things himself. But somehow having her do them was infinitely harder to bear.

Mildred was very angry. "Not a thing of his," she said to herself as she stripped off her rings and gathered her trinkets. "My purse, too," she thought and went to the desk to find it. Her husband had been watching for this. He knew she would try to secure that letter.

"Ah," said he, "you are a little too late. You should have thought of that before."

These, to his unmeaning words, uttered with much concentrated bitterness, made her seriously doubt his sanity. She looked at him curiously. How else could she construe this incomprehensible fury? She pursued, the thought had calmed her resentment. She went to his side, placed her hand kindly on his arm. "My dear John," said she, "will you explain to me what all this means?"

He felt touched, and oh, how he longed to take her to his heart; but that could never be again.

"Will you first explain to me," he answered, trying to be hard and cold; "explain to me where you were yesterday?"

"Certainly he is mad," she thought, and she tried to be very calm.

"Ah, yes," he went on. "You can look very innocent, but, woman, look at that," and with tragic gesture he held up the paper.

Mildred looked at it bewildered; then she read, "Dear Frank." A gleam of light first came into her face, and gradually deepened into an expression of interest and amusement. She understood it all.

John looked to see her crushed, despairing and penitent; and instead he witnessed this unaccustomed, this extraordinary, change; and laughter—peal after peal of silvery laughter—rang through the rooms. She tried to speak, but could not.

John in his turn began to think she was mad.

At last, with tears rolling down her cheeks, not from grief this time, she said:

"Oh, you dear silly—silly thing. Oh, you dear goose—that's my story—and I was going to surprise you—and bring you ever—ever so much money—and now you have gone—and spoiled—" and here she began to cry in earnest. "And—you—have—said—such—cruel—cruel—"

Her sobs, together with John's great enfolding arms, stifled the rest. "Oh, my angel, my angel, I have been such a brute. Can you ever forgive me?"

That was what John said, but this pen refuses to attempt the portrayal of what he felt. He had been a willing and a loving slave before, and now he was in addition a penitent and crest-fallen one besides. And so his chains were riveted anew.

As hinted before, John had a professional character quite distinct from his domestic one. This duality affords a much needed outlet to perturbed spirits; hence as he turned towards his office the next morning an ominously stern look came into his face.

The unfortunate man whose first book he reviewed that day never suspected that the savage criticism which very nearly threw him into a nervous fever, and quite into despair, was almost entirely inspired by the misadventures just related.

Our Wealth and Our Army.

As regards wealth the United States ranks first among the nations of the world. In revenue France, Great Britain and Ireland and Germany are ahead of her, placing this country fourth. In expenditure she ranks eight. In the amount of debt France, the United Kingdom, Russia and Italy are far ahead of this country. In regard to commerce only three nations, the United Kingdom, Germany and France are ahead of us. The United States have more miles of railroad and telegraph lines than any other nation and the value of American manufactures is greater than that of any other nation. The army of the United States if placed on a war footing would be excelled in numbers by only one nation in the world, France. On a peace footing the army of this country ranks below Russia, Italy, China, France, Germany, Austria, India, the United Kingdom, Turkey, Spain, Switzerland, Holland, Mexico, Belgium, Sweden, Japan, Denmark, Portugal, the Dutch East Indies and Persia. This by a singular anomaly, the richest country in the world, keeps a smaller standing army than the Dutch East Indies and many impoverished and unimportant countries. She has no effective coast fortifications and only three modern ships of war.

THE FARM.

Some Good Recipes.

Baked Steak.—Place a steak in a shallow pan, season with salt and pepper and a few slices of onions, cover with another pan and bake three-quarters of an hour. The onions may be omitted if the flavor is disagreeable.

Tomato Sauce.—Cook one-half can tomatoes, one slice onion one bay leaf and one sprig parsley together for ten minutes. Strain. Melt one tablespoonful butter, add one tablespoonful flour, pour on slowly the the strained tomato; season with salt and pepper.

Stewed hog's head.—Parboil and split, remove the bones, lay the head open and fill up with dressing, sew up and return to the pot, stew slowly. Take up, add to the gravy a lump of butter rolled in flour and a tablespoonful of walnut catchup. Pour over the stewed head.

Ginger nuts.—One cup molasses, one cup sugar, one cup shortening, one tablespoonful ginger in a little water, a pinch of salt, and as much flour as it will take by stirring with a spoon or knife. Then break off pieces as large as marbles, roll between palms of the hands and place in a pan so they do not touch. Bake and leave in a pan a few moments after taking from the oven.

The Bright Side of Farming.

Although there are clouds in farming, as in all other occupations, who can say that there is not a bright side also? Certainly not the man who loves nature and country life, because he will see too many things to admire to be constantly looking at the "clouds" and complaining of everything. There is a good deal of hard work to be done on the farm. I know from thirty-five years' experience, but there are a great many pleasures and advantages to counterbalance it. We have the freedom of God's bright sunshine, and many beautiful things to look at while at work. We can beautify our homes with fine trees—both fruit and ornamental—shrubs, vines and beautiful flowers; from these there is truly a great deal of pleasure to be derived. Who can have such beautiful trees as the farmer?

There is also a pleasure in having a fine garden, and other good crops, and good animals, too. Indeed, I think there is more pleasure to be derived from tilling the soil, than from any other occupation. There is nothing monotonous about it; the labors are ever changing, and there is also a change continually taking place in the garden, field and orchard, and new attractions continually being brought out. If the farmer has a flower garden it will help to make the home bright and cheerful and add attractiveness thereto; not only for the farmer's family, but for the visitors and traveller as well. When passing a farm house I almost always look for the flowers and the garden, and the nicer these are the more I admire them and the higher opinion I have of the inmates of that home.

There is a fascination in planting and caring for flowers and vegetables, and is it not interesting to watch the growth of our choice vines? Harry said that a Prentiss grape vine had grown three inches in twenty-four hours, and on taking out my rule I found it to be a fact. What man can spend a day to attend a picnic or entertain company with so little break in his business as the farmer. When the farmer sits down and counts up his blessings ought he not to be the happiest man on the face of the earth? Don't let us always look on the dark side and continually find fault with the weather, or something else beyond our control, but, rather, let us look about us and see how much happiness we can get out of life and how much of it we can impart to others. I believe we were placed on this earth to enjoy it, and now let us cultivate the beautiful.—F. H. D. in Prairie Farmer.

A Safety Lantern for Barns.

The loss of many valuable horses by the late fires suggests that too much care cannot be taken around stables and barns to prevent similar disaster. Such danger has been a source of great anxiety for many years at the Caton stock farm, and so of a study how to reduce the danger to a minimum. All of our stables are provided with outside doors, which can be opened from the outside. But the kerosene lamps, which had to be used for an hour or two by all the men morning and evening during the long nights, caused me the greatest anxiety. Lard oil was tried as less dangerous, but in very cold weather with the most improved make of lamp the oil would congeal and the light would go out. A year ago I furnished the farm with nineteen lanterns, made as follows: I took conductors' lamps, removed the lamps from the bottom, and in place of the oil receptacle inserted a tube of the proper height, length, size and finish for a coach candle, with a bottom base four and one-half inches in diameter and filled with, say three pounds of sand. This coach candle gives as good a light as ever the kerosene did, and burns about twelve hours. This lantern is not easily upset, and if, by accident, it is broken, it does not scatter the fire everywhere, as kerosene, or even lard oil, would. I believe this lantern affords a maximum of security from fire in our barns with no appreciable increase of cost. Their use at the stables of public fairs would tend to quiet the fears of many owners of valuable animals there stabled, and it is worthy the consideration of the managers of such institutions whether it would not be wise to prohibit the use of any other lanterns and especially of kerosene in their stables. I have taken out no patent on this invention, so all can use it and welcome.—John Dean Caton in Farmer's Review.

A Claim to Human Gratitude.

Charlotte Corday, the sad-faced tender-hearted peasant girl of Normandy made great history by one desperate act!

Sickened by the saturnalia of the French revolution and moved to desperation as Robespierre and Marat were leading the flower of France to the guillotine, she determined that she would put an end to Marat's bloody reign.

Marat had demanded two hundred thousand victims for the guillotine!

He proposed to kill off the enemies of the Revolution to make it perpetual!

Horrible thought!

No wonder it fired the blood of this patriotic peasant maid!

Gaining access to his closely guarded quarters by a subterfuge, she found him in his bath, even then inexorable and given written directions for further slaughter!

He asked her the names of the inimical deputies who had taken refuge in Caen. She told him, and he wrote them down. "That is well! Before a week is over they shall all be brought to the guillotine."

At these words, Charlotte drew from her bosom the knife, and plunged it with supernatural force up to the hilt in the heart of Marat.

"Come to me, my dear friend, come to me," cried Marat, and expired under the blow!

In the Corcoran gallery at Washington is a famous painting of Charlotte, represented as behind the prison bars the day before her execution.

It is a thrilling sad picture, full of sorrow for her suffering country, and of unconquerable hate for her country's enemies.

What a lesson in this tragic story! Two hundred, nay, five hundred thousand people would Marat have sacrificed to his unholy passion of power!

Methods are quite as murderous and inexorable as men, and they number their victims by the millions.

The page of history is full of murders by authority and by mistaken ideas! In the practice of medicine alone how many hundreds of millions have been allowed to die and as many more killed by unjustifiable bigotry and by bungling!

But the age is bettering. Men and methods are improving. A few years ago it was worth one's professional life to advise or permit the use of a proprietary medicine. To-day there are not two physicians in any town in this country who do not regularly prescribe some form of proprietary remedy!

H. H. Warner, famed all over the world as the discoverer of Warner's safe cure, began hunting up the old remedies of the Log Cabin days; after long and patient research he succeeded in securing some of the most valuable, among family records, and called them Warner's Log Cabin remedies—the simple preparations of roots, leaves, balsams and herbs which were the successful standbys of our grandmothers. These simple, old-fashioned sarsaparilla, hops and buchu, cough and consumption and other remedies have struck a popular chord and are in extraordinary demand all over the land. They are not the untried and imaginary remedies of some dabster chemist intent on making money, but the long-sought principles of the healing art which for generations kept our ancestors in perfect health, put forth for the good of humanity by one who is known all over the world as a philanthropist—a lover of his fellow man,—whose name is a guarantee of the highest standard of exellence.

The preparations are of decided and known influence over disease, and as in the hands of our grandmothers they raised up the sick, cured the lame, and bound up the wounds of death, so in their new form but olden power as Log Cabin remedies, they are sure to prove the "healing of the nations."

Corday did the world an incalculable service in ridding France of the bigoted and murderous Marat, just as this man is doing humanity a service by re-introducing to the world the simpler and better methods of our ancestors.

Canadians More American Than British.

From the Toronto Globe.

That good feeling between Americans and Canadians which is displayed wherever they meet to-gether is not due merely to seventy-six years of unbroken peace and friendly commerce and a common language and similar origin, but to a closer blood relationship than common British descent implies. Is it not a fact that we of Canada are closer kin to Americans than to Britons? The United States loyalists who first settled Upper Canada and large districts of the maritime provinces were American people, related by the closest family ties to those who took the revolutionary side, in "The Virginians" Thackeray puts one of the Warrington brothers in Washington's army and the other on the side of King George. That was a fair representative of the family divisions effected by the politics of the time. Just as Canadian families would be separated if either "grits" or "tories" were to emigrate, so, of course, in less degree, were American families broken up by the United States loyalist emigration, in spite of the breach there was identity of blood, manners, social arrangements, creed, accent and general "way of thinking" between the loyalists and the relations from whom they parted in anger and disgust. Of the few still alive who remember some of the original U. S., L.'s and of the man, who remember the second U. S. L. generation, will any one deny that the U. S. loyalists were, except in political sentiment, much more like the "Yankees" they professed to hate than like the Englishmen they professed to resemble. This close blood relationship between Americans and Canadians has been maintained by much intermarriage, by the settlement of a million Canadians in the states, and by the settlement of tens of thousands of Americans in Canada. The identity of the two peoples is obvious all along the line. Certainly New Yorkers, Vermonters, Michiganders, all New Englanders are much more like Canadians than like Americans of the Southern states. Toronto is often said to be "so American," but Buffalo and Chicago and Detroit might as well be called "so Canadian." From Canada's most northerly settlement down to the middle states we are a big party of "near relations," and, squabble as the politician may across the political boundary line, the family peace is not likely to be seriously disturbed.

Log Cabins were strongholds of love, contentment, health and happiness. Coon skins were nailed to the door and they were the happy homes of strong, healthy, noble men and women. The simple but effective remedies which carried them to green old age are now reproduced in Warner's "Tippecanoe," and Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla and other Log Cabin Remedies.

The Soul as an Heir-at-Law.

From the St. James' Gazette.

Two sisters in 1862 left to their own souls as the heirs property to the value of £280. Of this the executor, with permission from the archbishop lends £56 to Michael, their nephew, to pay for his education to be afterward returned; £16 he gives in alms, £23 for masses. He proposes to give £4 more in alms, and the rest as honoria for masses. A request is now made to him for the £56 previously lent to Michael to be given as an alms to the young ladies belonging to the same family. The executor seeks from Rome an approval of his past disbursements and authorization for those proposed. The archbishop sanctions the step. Reiffenstuel is quoted to show that money left for the salvation of one's soul and for the glory of God may be lawfully devoted to pious purposes or to the poor, since whatever is expended upon such purposes is spent for the glory of God and the good of the testator's soul. Pitonious teaches the same, and the Sacred Rota has approved of such administration of property. Many masses have been said for the intention. The answer of the cardinals is that no authorization is needed, thus, of course, sanctioning the several disbursements.

"DOCTORING OLD TIME."

A Striking Picture—A Revival of Old Time Simplicities.

In one of Harper's issues is given a very fine illustration of Roberts' celebrated painting, known as "Doctoring Old Time." It represents a typical old-timer, with his bellows, blowing the dust from an ancient clock, with its cords and weights carefully secured. One of these clocks in this generation is appreciated only as a rare relic.

The suggestive name, "Doctoring Old Time," brings to our mind another version of the title, used for another purpose.—"Old Time Doctoring."

We learn, through a reliable source, that one of the enterprising proprietary medicine firms of the country, has been for years investigating the formulas and medical preparations used in the beginning of this century, and even before, with a view of ascertaining why people in our great-grandfathers' time enjoyed a health and physical vigor so seldom found in the present generation. They now think they have secured the secret or secrets. They find that the prevailing opinion that then existed, that "Nature has a remedy for every existing disorder," was true and acting under this belief, our grandparents used the common herbs and plants. Continual trespass upon the forest domain, has made these herbs less abundant and has driven them further from civilization, until they have been discarded, as remedial agents because of the difficulty of obtaining them.

H. H. Warner, proprietor of Warner's safe cure and founder of the Warner observatory, Rochester, N. Y., has been pressing investigations in this direction, into the annals of old family histories, until he has secured some very valuable formulas, from which his firm is now preparing medicines, to be sold by all druggists.

They will, we learn, be known under the general title of "Warner's Log Cabin remedies." Among these medicines will be a "sarsaparilla," for the blood and liver, "Log Cabin hops and buchu remedy," for the stomach, etc., "Log Cabin cough and consumption remedy," "Log Cabin hair tonic," "Log Cabin extract," for internal and external use, and an old valuable discovery for catarrh, called "Log Cabin rose cream." Among the list is also a "Log Cabin plaster," and a "Log Cabin liver pill."

From the number of remedies, it will be seen that they do not propose to cure all diseases with one preparation. It is believed by many that with these r medies a new era is to dawn upon suffering humanity and that the close of the nineteenth century will see these roots and herbs, as compounded under the title of Warner's Log Cabin remedies, as popular as they were at its beginning. Although they come in the form of proprietary medicines, yet they will be none the less welcome, for suffering humanity has become tired of modern doctoring and the public has great confidence in any remedies put up by the firm of which H. H. Warner is the head. The people have become suspicious of the effects of doctoring with poisonous drugs. Few realize the injurious effects following the prescriptions of many modern physicians. These effects of poisonous drugs, already prominent, will become more pronounced in coming generations. Therefore we can cordially wish the old-fashioned new remedies the best of success.

A Swedish woodchopper named August Bergquest, was found dead in his shanty near Rhinelander, Wis. He was about thirty years of age. There was great excitement over the report that the man had been murdered by tramps but an inquest proved that death resulted from natural causes.

A prairie fire that started four miles north of Ayer, Dak., swept the country north and east for miles. The damage is variously estimated at from $5,000 to $10,000; no insurance. Frost nearly ruined the grain, and fire has finished it in that locality.

An accident occurred on the Chicago & Atlantic Railway at Kuntz, Ind. A work train with a gang of Italians on board, who were engaged upon repairs on the road, stopped at the tank to take water, when a fast train ran into it, causing a general smash. Three Italians were seriously, though it is not believed fatally, wounded, and from thirty-five to forty others more or less cut or bruised, but not dangerously.

The members of the Sioux commission, Capt. Pratt, J. G. K. Wright and Rev. Mr. Cleveland, who are at Washington, express themselves as confident of ultimate success in obtaining the acceptance of the treaty. It is thought, however, that it may be necessary for the government to first grant certain concessions upon which the Indians have thus far insisted. Up to the time the commission left the territory, they had obtained 382 signatures accepting the treaty. Out of the 300 Indians at the Crow Creek agency 118, and 240 out of 320 at the Lower Brule agency had signed, but out of the 1,100 at Standing Rock but twenty-four signatures were obtained. It seems to be the opinion of the commission that the only substantial and well founded objection which the Indians have urged is the one of price, and it is probably that they will urge the government to pay the 50 cents per acre for the whole amount—11,000,000 acres. This proposition, it is believed, the Indians will accept.

Consumption, Wasting Diseases,

And General Debility. Doctors disagree as to the relative value of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites; the one supplying strength and flesh, the other giving nerve power, and acting as a tonic to the digestive and entire system. But in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites the two are combined, and the effect is wonderful. Thousands who have derived no permanent benefit from other preparations have been cured by this. Scott's Emulsion is perfectly palatable and is easily digested by those who cannot tolerate plain Cod Liver Oil.

FIFTIETH CONGRESS.

Tuesday, October 2.

SENATE.—The senate bill to allow persons who have abandoned or relinquished their homestead entries came up in the house. Amendments were adopted providing: Whenever it shall be made to appear to the register of any land office that any settler on the public domain is unable, by reason of drought or other unavoidable reason, to secure support for himself the register may grant such settler leave of absence from the claim for a period not exceeding one year. All public lands designated as double minimum pre-emption lands shall be reduced to the uniform rate of $1.25 per acre. Any homestead settler who has entered less than one-quarter section may enter additional land contiguous to the original entry with which such entry shall not exceed 160 acres. The bill was then passed.

HOUSE.—Judge Gifford in the House succeeded in his many attempted efforts to present the report of the committee of conference on the Senate amendments to the House bill granting the right of way to the Yankton & Missouri River Railway Company through the Yankton reservation in Dakota. Breckenridge, of Kentucky, had just moved that the House adjourn. Judge Gifford asked him to permit him to introduce the report, which privilege was granted, and the House then adjourned. The bill is now out of the hole and can be called up any time for question of privilege.

Wednesday, Oct. 3.

SENATE.—The Senate tariff bill was reported and read at length.

The Senate then resumed consideration of Mr. Hale's resolution calling on the secretary of war for an explanation of Gen. Benet's circular as to discharges of Republican employes in United States arsenals and armories.

HOUSE.—Congressman Haughen to-day unsheathed his political knife and made a savage lunge at Knute Nelson, but missed him and hurt a Minnesota farmer. Nelson called up the bill to authorize the secretary of the treasury to issue certain duplicate bonds to J. E. Andrews of Wadena, in place of certain bonds destroyed by fire March 31, 1886, when his dwelling was burned and contents destroyed. The report of the committee shows conclusively that the bill is just and Mr. Andrews clearly entitled to duplicate bonds but Mr. Haughen objected, and the bill could not pass.

Thursday Oct. 4.

SENATE.—The senate bill relating to the classification of postoffices, and amendatory of the act of the 3d of March, 1883, "To adjust the salaries of postmasters," passed the senate.

The senate adopted the Hale resolution relating to the Benet circular order, calling on the secretary of war for a statement of the circumstances under which it was issued. Amendments were adopted to include in the request information concerning any other orders of similar character issued by the department, and asking the secretary of war to state what measures had been taken under the Benet order to ascertain the politics of women and children in the employ of the ordinance department.

HOUSE.—Members of both houses of congress are indulging in a good deal of talk to-day about a recess for the elections in November. The 10th and 16th insts. are the dates most mentioned. Senator Allison says the Republicans in the Senate are willing to take a recess of 10 days two weeks hence, and the Democrats in the House say they are willing to take a recess immediately after the general deficiency bill is finally passed. Generally speaking, the impression prevails that congress will not be in session over a couple of weeks. A resolution will probably be passed by the House this week, proposing adjournment on the 10th or the 16th inst.

Friday, October 5.

SENATE.—There is nothing clear about adjournment yet. Adjournment is the chief subject of discussion by the members of both houses. For the time being it is assumed that the Democrats have decided it is their policy to remain in session. That this is the wise Democratic policy is declared to be the fact by a Democrat of the ways and means committee. The remonstrance of Mr. Breckinridge, and the threat, or intimation, or the fear that he would raise the point of no quorum if the adjournment resolution was proposed was sufficient on Friday afternoon to induce the Democrat who had prepared the resolution, Mr. Turner, another member of the committee on way and means, to withhold it.

HOUSE.—Mr. Nelson's bill authorizing the secretary of the treasury to pay James Divine of Brown county, Minn., $700 for damages done his land by the United States troops in cutting timber on the same for the building of Fort Hanska and for fuel and other purposes while in possession of said troops during the outbreak of the Sioux war in 1862.—Passed without controversy.

When Mr. Haugen's bill for bridging the Mississippi came up Mr. Nelson shouted, "I object," and then offered his own Duluth bill as an amendment, saying that he was willing to compromise with the gentleman from Wisconsin and let both bills pass. But Haugen, who was checkmated again by the wily Norwegian, declined to consider a compromise, and again the bill went over under the rules.

Saturday, Oct. 6.

SENATE.—On Monday the tariff bill will be taken up, Senator Allison will make a speech in support of the senate substitute. The bill will be temporarily laid aside whenever the conferees on the general deficiency bill reach an agreement. With this exception it is expected to command the attention of the senate until disposed of. The assertion is made by some Republican senators that the bill will be passed within three weeks.

HOUSE.—Mr. Haugen, being asked what the prospects were of the passage of the bill of the Soo & Southwestern Railroad company for a bridge across the Mississippi at Alma, which is the bill to which Mr. Nelson of Minnesota objected, and that it would undoubtedly pass when a quorum is present, which will not be till after election. Mr. Haugen accuses Mr. Wilson, of Minnesota, of aiding Mr. Nelson in killing this bridge bill, at the expense of (Wilson's) constituents.

Monday Oct. 8.

SENATE.—The Senate confirmed the following nominations: L. W. Crofoot and C. F. Templeton, associate justices of Dakota; John H. Oberly, commissioner of Indian affairs.

Mr. Blair offered a resolution which was laid over, calling on the president for information as to the trial for treason, conviction and execution in Canada on the 16th of November, 1885, of Louis David Riel who claimed to have been a naturalized citizen of the United States, and whether the proceedings in the case were according to due process of law, including the presentation of the fact of Riel's citizenship and decree of insanity.

HOUSE—At an informal conference of several Democratic members of the committee on ways and means it was decided that it would not be politic under present conditions for the Democrats in the house to send any resolution of adjournment to the senate.

The Yellowstone National Park bill was taken up, but not for consideration. It was pushed forward by McRae of Arkansas in the absence of Holman of Indiana, who is opposed to the bill, as a suggestion for speeches on other subjects. Two members were allowed to make tariff speeches under cover of it, and then McRae withdrew it. It is not likely to get consideration this session, and not at all if Holman can prevent it. Should it pass the house the committee's amendment gives the Cinnabar & Clark's Fork railway right of way through the park would probably set Vest so wild that he would go to work and kill his own bill.

Last April H. G. Andrews, a young man of thirty years, was married to Miss Nina Kalger, of Leon, Iowa. They went to the northwest part of the state and began housekeeping. After four weeks they separated, she returning to her home and he going to Illinois. Not long since she began divorce proceedings against him. He soon came on and went to her friends to get her to live with him again, which she refused to do. Andrews went to her brother, Blufford Kalger, where his wife is staying, on a like errand. He had some words about Kalger, and without further provocation drew his revolver and shot him, the ball taking effect in the left side. The wound is of a very serious nature and may prove fatal.

The Chicago Wheat Corner.

At the close of the session of the Chicago board of trade on Saturday, Sept. 29, two dollars was paid for September wheat, and the great Hutchinson corner terminated according to the advertised programme. Immediately after the bell tapped at 1:15 o'clock, wheat which the cash option was offered at $1.02¼. A shrinkage of 97¾c in less than a minute, which is practically what occurred, is something calculated to doze the oldest inhabitant. The price was put up a dollar a bushel in three days. Such a rapid advance has never been seen on the board of trade, and in some respects it is the most remarkable corner that has ever been run. The September option really cornered itself. Hutchinson says that when he began buying he never thought of getting better than $1.10 for it, but when he discovered what a surprising scarcity of contract wheat there was in the country, he decided to hold on to his purchases. He was a liberal seller of September during the month, showing no disposition to take advantage of anybody, and this circumstance, in connection with the fact that he was never known to run a corner, made the shorts comparatively indifferent. They did not realize their danger. Finally when the old gentleman decided that the wheat was really worth $1.25 or more as an investment, and declined to sell as he had been doing all along, a panic seized the shorts. Even then it is probably that the price would never have gone above $1.25, but for the vituperation with which Hutchinson was so fiercely assailed. He was suspended from the board last year for irregular trading. Though restored to all his former privileges before the period of his suspension expired, he kept away from the board and did not again appear on change until after his son had been elected its president. Hutchinson seldom said anything to indicate that he took his punishment much to heart, but his intimate friends say that the old man was badly broken up in his feelings, and no doubt nourished the intention of getting even with those whom he believed chiefly responsible for his disgrace. This feeling was still rankling in his bosom when the bitter attacks were made on him by September shorts. He is naturally kind hearted, and kept many a poor fellow's head above the financial waves that threatened to engulf him, but he is quick to feel an insult, and as revengeful as an Indian when he feels that he has been unjustly attacked. His anger was aroused by the sneers flung at him, and after determining that the shorts should take their medicine there was no changing his purpose. On Thursday he said he would sell cash wheat at $1.25, and those who did not take it then would have to pay $1.50 on Friday. This proved true, and there was no deviation from his terms. Near the close of Friday's session he announced $2 as the settling price for Saturday. Very many thought he would change his mind at the last hour and deal more gently with the obdurate shorts, but so far as can be learned he stuck strictly to his programme. He bought 5,000 bushels at $1.45, but sold none less than $2. It is said a considerable number of the depositors of the Corn Exchange bank threatened to withdraw their accounts if he insisted on his pound of flesh, but although he thinks a great deal of his bank and the son who is president of it, there was no yielding on his part. He carried his corner sternly through to the bitter end.

Numerous Murders in London.

The two women found murdered near the scene of the former butcheries in Whitechapel in London have been recognized as dissolute characters who have long frequented that vicinity. One of them was found in Berner street with her throat cut from ear to ear. The other was discovered lying in Mitre square. She, like the first mentioned victim, had her throat cut, but in addition she had been disemboweled and her nose had been cut off. The murderer had evidently been disturbed in his work in Berner street, and had no time to mutilate the body of his victim. The discovery of the bodies completely paralyzed the police, and Gen. Sir Charles Warren, chief commissioner, was at once called out of bed. He repaired immediately to the scene of the murders, and gave orders to have the police force in that district strongly reinforced. London is in a fever of excitement and the denizens of Whitechapel are in a state of terror, owing to the resumption of the horrible butcheries, the fourth of which it was hoped, and quite generally believed, would be the last of the ghastly series. The police are positively helpless and their tacit admission of failure to find any clue whatsoever to the perpetrator of the terrible crimes only serves to add to the consternation of the unfortunate creatures whose calling has manifestly made them the objects of the inhuman butcher's fury. The number of theories advanced as accounting for the murders and seeking to establish the identity of the murderer is positively bewildering, but none of them is accepted by the police as the correct one, although the Scotland Yard detectives have nothing more plausible to offer for themselves in a letter, which is written in a scrawling hand, familarly addressed "Dear Boss," and signed, "Jack, the Ripper." After boasting that he committed all of the Whitechapel murders, the writer continues:

"I love my work and I want to start at it again. The next job I do I shall cut off the lady's ear and send it to the police. Keep this letter back till I do a bit more work, and then give it out to the police straight.

A remarkable feature of the Mitre square murder is the fact that one of the dead woman's ears was nearly severed, and this circumstance is held to indicate that the real murderer wrote the letter.

What the Sioux Want.

The Lower Brule council broke up without reaching any conclusion. The delegates in attendance from Standing Rock were Maj. McLaughlin, agent, and chiefs John Grass, Gray Eagle, Sitting Bull, Walking Eagle, Mad Bull, Big Head, Thunder Hawk, Bear Rib and Walking Shooter from the Cheyenne agency, Mr. McChesney, Charger, Swift Bird, Hump, White Swan, Little No Heart and Chiefs American Horse, No Flesh and Two Strike from the Rosebud Swift Bear. Good Voice and Hollow Horn Bear from Brule, Big Man and Medicine Bull. John Grass, Swift Bird, Charger and White Swan acted as orators for the occasion. The Indians were united in their opposition to the bill as it now stands, but in the harangues they made a proposition offering to sign for $1.25 per acre, to be deposited in the national treasury without being contingent on the sale of the lands under the homestead law. They also wanted the school clause of the treaty of 1868 extended and continued to the provisions of the present treaty, that is, the treaty of 1868 provided the Indians with free schools for twenty years, and, as ten years elapsed without the building of any schools, they want the number of years thus lost added to the provisions of the present treaty, which also provides for free schools for twenty years, making thirty years in all. Maj. McLaughlin and Dr. McChesney are both of the opinion that unless the terms of the treaty are modified the Indians will never sign. The commission left for Washington, and will, as soon as possible, lay before congress the modifications of the treaty required by the Indians. It is not likely that any more work will be done inside of a month, and unless a modification of the treaty is obtained from congress the present treaty will be rejected.

Horrible Freaks of a Maniac.

A Mattoon, Ill. telegram of Sept. 30th. conveys a piece of news like this: Peter Straub, a Chicago machinist out of funds, came to Mattoon Friday. About 9 o'clock Saturday night he became possessed of the hallucination of being controlled by spirits and at their command danced until 3 oclock Sunday morning, when he fled from his room without coat, hat, or shoes to get away from them. He jumped over the fence into an adjoining yard, but they continued to torture him. He rushed out on a broad street, but when he stopped to recover his wasting vigor he was again surrounded by millions of spirits. In appealing tones he said:

"What can I do to induce you to cease your torture?"

The spirits said: "Tear out your eyes."

"I have but one good eye and do not want to lose it."

They were inexorable, however, and insisted on the execution of their demand. He then ran the forefinger of each hand into the sockets and gouged his eyes out. He was found about 7 o'clock this morning insensible near a barn three fourths of a mile from the boarding house. He presented a ghastly appearance. He was taken in charge by the police and physicians placed the balls in their proper position, but on account of inflammation it was impossible to determine whether or not the sight of the good eye was injured. While he is no longer disturbed by the spirits yet the mania is still up——

IT IS THE CLOUD.

Dr. Talmage Tells His Hearers of the Chariot of the Lord.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., Sept. 30.—The hymn sung at the opening of the services in the Brooklyn tabernacle this morning was:

"Welcome, sweet day of rest,
That saw the Lord arise."

After expounding appropriate passages of Scripture, the Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D. D., took the text: Psalm civ., 3: "Who maketh the clouds His chariot." Dr. Talmage said:

Brutes are constructed so as to look down. Those earthly creatures that have wings when they rise from the earth still look down, and the eagle searches for mice in the grass, and the raven for carcasses in the field. Man alone is made to look up. To induce him to look up God makes the sky a picture gallery, a Dusseldorf, a Louvre, a Luxembourg, a Vatican that eclipses all that German or French or Italian art ever accomplished. But God has failed so far to attract the attention of most of us by the scenery of the sky. We go into raptures over flowers in the soil, but have little or no appreciation of the "morning glories" that bloom on the wall of the sky at sunrise or the dahlias in the clouds at sunset. We are in ecstacies over a gobelin tapestry or a bridal veil of fair fabric, or a snowbank of exquisite curve, but see not at all, or see without emotion, the bridal veils of mist that cover that face of the Catskills, or the swaying upholstery around and couch of the dying day, or the snowbanks of vapor piled up in the heavens.

My text bids us lift our chin three or four inches and open the two telescopes which under the forehead are put on swivel easily turned upward, and see that the clouds are not merely uninteresting signs of wet or dry weather, but that they are embroidered canopies of shade, that they are the conservatories of the sky, that they are thrones o pomp, that they are crystalline bars, that they are paintings in water color, that they are the angels of the mist, that they are great cathedrals of light with broad aisles for angelic feet to walk through and bow at altars of amber and alabaster, that they are the mothers of the dew, that they are ladders for ascending glories, Cotopaxis of belching flame, Niagaras of color, that they are masterpieces of the Lord God Almighty. The clouds are a favorite Bible simile and the sacred writers have made much use of them. After the deluge God hung on a cloud in concentric bands the colors of the spectrum, saying: "I do set my bow in the cloud." As a mountain is sometimes entirely hidden by the vapors, so, says God, "I have blotted out as a thick cloud thy transgressions." David measures the divine goodness and found it so high he apostrophized: "Thy faithfulness reacheth unto the clouds." As sometimes there are thousands of fleeces of vapor scurrying across the heavens, so, says Isaiah, will be the converts in the millenium, "as clouds and as doves." As in the wet season no sooner does the sky clear than there comes another abscuration, so, says Solomon, one ache or ailment of old folks has no more than gone than another pain comes "as clouds return in the rain." A column of illumined cloud led the Israelites across the wilderness. In the book of Job, Elihu, watching the clouds, could not understand why they did not fall or why they did not all roll together, the laws of evaporation and condensation then not being understood, and he cries out, "Doest thou know the balancing of the clouds?" When I read my text it suggests to me that the clouds are the Creator's equipage, and their whirling masses are the wheels, and the tongue of the cloud is the pole of the celestial vehicle, and the winds are the harnessed steeds, and God is the royal occupant and driver "who maketh the clouds His Chariot."

To understand the psalmist's meaning in the text you must know that the chariot of old was sometimes a sculptured brilliancy made out of ivory, sometimes of solid silver, and rolled on two wheels which were fastened to the axle by stout pins, and the awful defeat of Oconmaus by Pelops was caused by the fact that a traitorous charioteer has inserted a linchpin of wax instead of a linch pin of iron. All of the 600 chariots of Pharaoh lost their linchpins in the Red sea, for the Bible says: The Lord took of their wheels." Look at the long flash of Solomon's 1,400 chariots, and the 30,000 chariots of the Philistines. If you have ever visited the buildings where a king or queen keeps the coaches of state, as I have, you know that kings and queens have great varieties of turnout. The keeper tells you: "This is the state carriage and used only on great occasions." "This is the coronation carriage, and in it the King rode on the day he took the throne." "In this the Queen went to open parliament." "This is the coach in which the Czar and the sultan rode on the occasion of their visit." All costly and tesselated and enriched and emblazoned are they, and when the driver takes the reigns of the 10 white horses in his hands, and amid the mounted troops and bands in full force sounding the national air, the splendor starts and rolls on under arches entwined with banners, and amid the hazza of hundreds of thousands ot spectators the scene is memorable. But my text puts all such occasions into insignificance, as it represents the King of the Universe coming to the door of His palace, and the gilded vapors of the heavens rolling up to His feet, and He stepping in and taking the reins of the galloping winds in His hand, starts in triumphal ride under the arches of sapphire, and over the atmospheric highways of opal and chrysolite, the clouds His chariot.

My hearers, do not think that God belittles Himself when He takes such conveyance. Do you know that the clouds are among the most wondrous and majestic things on the whole universe? Do you know that they are flying lakes and rivers and oceans? God waved his hand over them and said: "Come up higher!" and they obeyed the mandate. That cloud, instead of being, as it seems, a small gathering of vapor a few yards wide and high, is really seven or eight miles across, and is a mountain, from its base to its top, 15,000 feet, 18,000 feet, 20,000 feet, and cut through with ravines 5,000 feet deep. No, David did not make a fragile or unworthy representation of God in the text when he spoke of the clouds as His chariot. But as I suggested in the case of an earthly king, He has His morning cloud chariot and His evening cloud chariot in which he rode down to Sinia to open the law, and the cloud chariot in which He rode down to Tabor to honor the gospel, and the cloud chariot in which He will come to judgment.

When he rides out in His morning chariot at this season, about 6 o'clock, he puts golden coronets on the dome of cities, and silvers the rivers, and out of the dew makes a diamond ring for the finger of every grass blade, and bids good cheer to invalids who in the night said: "Would God it were morning." From this morning cloud chariot He distributes light, light for the earth and light for the heavens, light for the land and light for the sea, great bars of it great wreathes of it, colums of it, a world full of it. Hail Him in worship as every morning He drives out in His chariot of morning cloud, and cry with David: "My voice shalt Thou hear in the morning, in the morning will I direct my prayer into Thee and look up." I rejoice in these scripture ejaculations: "Joy cometh in the morning," "My soul waiteth for the more than they that watch for the morning," "If I take the wing of the morning," "The eyelids of the morning;" "The morning cometh;" "Who is she that looketh forth as the morning?" "His going forth is prepared as the morning;" "As the morning spread on the mountains;" "That thou shouldst visit him every morning." What a mighty thing the King throws from His chariot when He throws us the morning!

Yes, He has His evening cloud chariot. It is made out of the saffron and the gold and the purple and the orange and the vermillion and upshot flame of the sunset. That is the place where the splendors that have marched through the day, having ended the procession, throw down their torches and set the heavens on fire. That is the only hour of the day when the atmosphere is clear enough to let us see the wall of the heavenly city with its twelve manner of precious stones, from foundations of jasper to middle strata of sardins and on up to the coping of amethyst. At that hour without any of Elisha's supernatural vision whose horses of fire, and chariots of fire and banners of fire, and seas of fire, and it seems as if the last conflagration had begun and there is a world on fire. When God makes these clouds his chariot let us all kneel. Another day past—what have we done with it? Another day dead and this is its gorgeous catafalque. Now is the time for what David calls the "evening oblation." Oh! oh! what a chariot made out of evening cloud! Have you hung over the taffrail on the ocean and seen this cloudy vehicle roll over the pavement of a calm summer sea, the wheels dripping with the magnificence? Have you, from the top of Ben Lomond or the Cordilleras, or the Berkshire hills, seen the day pillowed for the night and yet had no aspiration of praise and homage? Oh, what a rich God we have that He can put on one evening sky pictures that excel Michael Angelo's "Last Judgment" and Ghirlandjo's "Adoration of the Magi" and whole galleries of Maddonnas, and for only an hour, and then throw them away, and the next evening put on the same sky something that excels all that the Raphaels and the Titians and the Rembrandts and the Corregios and the Leonardo da Vincis ever executed, and then draw a curtain of mist over them never again to be exhibited! How rich God must be to have a new chariot of clouds every evening!

But the Bible tells us that our King also has a black chariot. "Clouds and darkness," we are told, "are round about him." The chariot is cloven out of night, and that night is trouble. When he rides forth in that black chariot pestilence and earthquake and famine and hurricane and woe attend Him. Then let the earth tremble. Then let nations pray. Again and again He has ridden forth in that chariot of black clouds, across England and France and Italy and Russia and America and over all nations. That which men took for the sound of cannonading at Sebastopol, at Sedan, at Gettysburg, at Tel-el-Kebir, at Bunker Hill, were only the rumblings of the black chariot of the Almighty. Aye, it is the chariot of stormcloud armed with thunderbolts, and neither man nor angel nor devil nor earth nor hell nor heaven can resist Him. On these boulevards of blue this chariot never turns out for anything. Aye, no one else drives there. Under one wheel of that chariot Babylon was crushed and Baalbeck fell dead and the Roman empire was prostrated and Atlantis, a whole continent that once connected Europe with America, sank clear out of sight so that the longest anchor of ocean steamer cannot touch the top of the highest mountains. The throne of the Cæsars was less than a pebble under the right wheel of this chariot, and the Austrian despotism less than a snowflake the left wheel. And over destroyed worlds on worlds that chariot has rolled without a jar or jolt.

This black chariot of war cloud rolled up to the northwest of Europe in 1812, and 400,000 men marched to take Moscow; but that chariot of clouds rolled back, and only 25,000 out of the 400,000 troops lived to return. No great snow storm like that had ever since visited Russia. Aye, the chariot of the Lord is irresistible. There is only one thing that can hault or turn any of His chariots, and that is prayer. Again and again it has stopped it, wheeled it around, and the chariot of black clouds under that sanctified human breath has blossomed into such brightness and color that men and angels had to veil their faces from its brightness. Mark you, the ancient chariot which David uses as a symbol in my text, had only two wheels, and that was that they might turn quickly, two wheels taking less than half the time to turn that four wheels would have taken. And our Lord's chariot has only two wheels, and that means instant reversal and instant help and instant deliverance. While the combined forces of the universe in battle array could not stop his black chariot a second or diverge it an inch, the driver of that chariot says: "Call upon me in the day of trouble and I will deliver thee." "While they are yet speaking I will hear." Two-wheeled chariot, one wheel justice and the other wheel mercy. Aye, they are swift wheels. A cloud, whether it belongs to the sirrus the clouds that float highest; or belongs to the stratus, the central ranges; or the cumulus, the lowest ranges, seems to move slowly along the sky if it moves at all. But many of the clouds go at a speed that would make seem lethargic a vestibule limited lightning express train; so swift is the chariot of our God; yea, swifter than the storm, swifter than the light. Yet a child 10 years old has been known to reach up, and with the band of prayer take the courser of that chariot by the bit and slow it up, or stop it, or turn it aside, or turn it back. The boy Samuel stopped it. Elijah stopped it. Hezekiah stopped it. Daniel stopped it. Joshua stopped it. Esther stopped it. Ruth stopped it. Hannah stopped it. Mary stopped it. My father stopped it. My mother stopped it. My sister stopped it. We have in our Sabbath schools children who again and again and again have stopped it.

Notice that these old-time chariots, which my text uses for symbols, had what we would call a high dash-board at the front, but were open behind. And the King would stand at the dashboard and drive with his own hands. And I am glad that He, whose chariot the clouds are, drives Himself. He does not let natural law drive, for fate is merciless. But our Father King drives himself, and he puts His loving hand on the reins of the flying coursers, and He has a oving ear open to the cry of all who want to catch His attention. Oh, I am so glad that my Father drives, and never drives too fast, and never drives too slow, and never drives off the precipice, and that He controls by a bit that never breaks, the wildest and most raging circumstances. I heard of a ship captain who put out with his vessel with a large number of passengers from Buffalo on Lake Erie, very early in the season and while there was much ice. When they were well out the captain saw to his horor that the ice was closing in on him from all sides, and he saw no way out from destruction and death: He called into the cabin the passengers and all the crew that could be spared from their posts, and told them that the ship must be lost unless God interposed, and, although he was not a Christian man, he said: "Let us pray," and they all knelt asking God to come for their deliverance. They went back to the deck, and the man at the wheel shouted: "All right, cap'n, it's blowing nor' by nor'west now." While the prayer was going on in the cabin the wind changed and blew the ice out of the way. The mate asked: "Shall I put on more sail, cap'n?" "No!" responded the captain. "Don't touch her. Some one else is managing this ship. "Oh, men and women, shut in on all sides by icy troubles and misfortunes, in earnest prayer put all your affairs in the hands of God. You will come out all right. Some one else is managing the ship! It did not merely happen so that when Leyden was besieged and the Duke of Alva felt sure of his triumph, suddenly the wind turned, and the swollen waters compelled him to stop the seige, and the city was saved. God that night drove along the coast of the Netherlands in a black storm cloud, that Luther rose from the place where he was sitting just in time to keep from being crushed by a stone that the instant after fell on the very spot. Had he not escaped where would have been the Reformation. It did not merely happen so that Columbus was saved from drowning by an oar that was floating on the waters. Otherwise, who would have unveiled America? It did not merely happen so that when George Washington was in Brooklyn a great fog settled down over all the place where this church stands, and over all this end of Long Island, and that under that fog he and his army escaped from the clutches of Gens. Howe and Clinton. In a chariot of mist and cloud the God of American Independence rode along here. On that pillow of consolation I put down my head to sleep at night. On that solid foundation I build when I see this nation in political paroxysm every four years, not because they care two cents about whether it is high tariff, or low tariff or no tariff at all, but only whether the Democrats or the Republicans shall have the salaried offices. Yea, when European nations are holding their breath, wondering whether Russia or Germany will launch a war that will incarnadine a continent, a fall back on the faith that my Father drives. Yea, I cast this as an anchor, and plant this as a column of strength, and lift this as a telescope, and build this as a fortress, and propose without any perturbation to launch upon an unknown future triumphant in the fact that my Father drives. Yes, he drives very near. I know that many of the clouds that you see in summer are far off, the bases of some of them five miles above the earth. High on the highest peaks of the Andes travelers have seen clouds far higher than where they were standing. Gay Lussac, after he had risen in a balloon 23,000 feet, still saw clouds above him.

But there are clouds that touch the earth and discharge their rain, and, though the clouds out of which God's chariot is made may sometimes be far away, often they are close by, and they touch our shoulders, and they touch our homes, and they touch us all over. I have read of two rides that the Lord took in two different chariots of clouds, and of another that He will take. One day, in a chariot of clouds that were a mingling of fog and smoke and fire, God drove down to the top of a terrible crag 1,500 feet high, now called Jebel-Musa, then called Mount Sinai, and he stepped out of his chariot among the split shelvings of rock. The mountain shook as with an ague, and there were 10 volleys of thunder, each of the 10 emphasizing a tremendous "thou shalt," or "thou shalt not." Then the Lord resumed his chariot of cloud and drove up the hills of heaven. They were dark and portentous clouds that made that chariot at the giving of the law. But one day he took another ride, and this time down to Mount Tabor, the clouds out of which his chariot was made bright clouds, roseate clouds, illumined clouds, and music rained from all of them, and the music was a mingling of carol and chant and triumphal march: "This is my beloved son in whom I am well pleased." Transfiguration chariot!

"Oh," say hundreds of you, "I wish I could have seen those chariots—the black one that brought the Lord to Jebel-Musa at the giving of the law, and the white one that brought Him down to Tabor." Never mind, you will see something grander than that, and it will be a mightier mingling of the sombre and the radiant, and the pomp of it will be such that the chariots in which Trajan, and Diocletian, and Xenobia, and Cæsar, and Alexander, and all the conquerors of all the ages rode will be unworthy of mention; and what stirs me the most is that when He comes in that chariot of cloud and goes back, He will ask you and me to ride with Him both ways. How do I know that the judgment chariot will be made out of clouds? Revelation I, 7: Behold He cometh with clouds." Oh, He will not then ride through the heavens alone as He does now. He is going to bring along with Him escort of ten full regiments. Inspirations says: "Behold the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints." But these figures simply mean that there will be a great throng. And as we shall probably through the atonement of Christ be in heaven before that, I hope that we can come down in that escort of chariot. Christ in the center chariot, but chariot's before Him to clear the way, and chariots behind Him, and chariots on either side of Him. Perhaps the prophets and patriarchs of the old dispensation may ride ahead each one charioted—Abraham and Moses and Ezekiel and David and Joshua, who foretold his first coming. On either side of the central chariot apostles and martyrs who in the same or approximate centuries suffered for Him—Paul, Stephen and Ignatius and Polycarp and Justin Martyr and multitudes who went up in chariot of fire now coming in chariot of cloud, while in the rear of the central chariot shall be the multitudes of later days and of our own time who have tried to serve the Lord, ourselves, I hope, among them. "Behold the Lord cometh with 10,000 of His saints." Yes, although all unworthy of such companionship, we want to come with Him on that day to see the last of this old world which was once our residence. Coming through the skies myraids of chariots rolling on and rolling down. By that time how changed this world will be. Its deserts all flowers, its rocks all mossed and linchened, its poor houses all palaces. Its sorrows all joys, its sins all virtues, are in the same pasture field lion and calf, and on the same perch hawk and dove. Now the chariots of cloud strike the earth, filling all the valleys, and covering all the mountain sides, and halting in all the cemeteries and graveyards and over the waters deep where the dead sleep in coral sarcophagus. A loud blast of the resurrection trumpet is given and the bodies of the dead rise and join the spirits from which they have long been separated. Then Christ our King, rising in the center chariot of cloud, with his scarred hands waves the signal, and the chariots wheel and come into line for glorious ascent. Drive on! Drive up! Chariots of cloud ahead of the King, chariots of cloud on either side of the King, chariots of clouds following the King. Upward and apast starry hosts, and through immensities, and across infinitudes, higher, higher, higher, unto the gates, the shining gates. Lift up your heads, ye Everlasting Gates, for Him who maketh the clouds His chariot, and who through condescending and uplifting grace invites us to mount and ride with Him!

Girls in Candy Stores.

From the Chicago Journal.

In the confectionery establishment where half a dozen pretty young women are employed behind the counters I noticed one of the latter cram half a dozen caramels into her mouth at once and appear to enjoy them hugely. She stood in full view of the proprietor as she did so and I expected to see him administer a reproof. Instead of doing so he only looked at me and knowingly closed his left eye. "I should think terrible inroads must be made in your stock if all your young women have appetites like that," observed I. "Not a bit of it," he responded, "when a young woman is engaged to sell candy for this house she receives permission to eat just as much as she likes; with the strict understanding, however, that she is not to carry any out of the store. She avails herself of the permission readily enough, but she doesn't devour half so much the second day as she does the first; on the third she goes away with even less and at the end of a week she wouldn't give you ten cents for the contents of the whole shop so far as her appetite is concerned. The girl who bolted these caramels just now thinks she's the luckiest girl alive. In a week she won't care whether all the candy shops in the country keep school or not, so long as her employment is secure. My advice to a youth with a candy-devouring girl is for him to feed her steadily with it for a week. At the end of a week he can devote his salary to other uses."

Grim Juggernaut.

There is no horror more widespread than that of the car at Juggernaut. No church or chapel or Sunday-school room is unfamiliar with the visions of idolators throwing themselves beneath the bloodstained wheels. There are few American girls—boys even—who have not shed tears and dimes for the victims of that cruel idol. The dreadful immolation has added a proverbal similitude to pulpit and platform eloquence. Grim Juggernaut has gone into encyclopedias. But the chariot of truth is passing through the world; many cherished fallacies must be cast beneath its remorseless wheels; among them must be crushed this world-wide notion about Juggernaut. It is a delusion. Hard as it is to lose one's pet horror, this one must be given up. The supposed custom of immolation under the wheels of Juggernaut does not prevail, never did prevail; on the contrary, Juggernaut is the most humane of all Oriental deities, and his deities, and his cult the most civilized.

Truckee, California, was thrown into great excitement by the actions of a Washoe Indian, who went upon a bluff overlooking the town and fired three shots from his rifle into town, one shot striking a squaw. He then cast off his clothing and fired again at the multitude of white people on the principle street, fortunately harming no one. Citizens then secured rifles and gave chase. The Indian took refuge in the rocks and endeavored to shoot the leader of the party. Another member of the posse, who saw the Indian draw a bead, shot him dead before he could fire. This tribe of Indians has been troublesome of late, and it was learned that they had been securing liquor and opium from Chinamen at Truckee. The next evening 800 citizens waited on all the Chinamen and ordered them to leave town within 24 hours.

Exchange Places.

From the Youth's Companion.

There is a quaint Arabian legend which tells of the Pilgrimage to Mecca of two devout followers of the prophet. Abouk journeyed on foot; Selim was mounted on a camel. At nightfall both the pilgrims had reached a spring of water in the desert where grew a few palm trees. They prepared to spend the night together.

"It is a long and tedious journey," said Abouk.

"On the contrary it is short and pleasant," answered Selim. "I was cheered by a mirage on the horizon, wherein I saw the spires and temples of the Holy City."

"There was no mirage, no Holy City to be seen!" angrily declared Abouk. "There were, instead, legions of venomous ants in the sand that bit and poisoned my flesh."

"Not a single ant was on the desert," rejoined Selim.

The two pilgrims were quarreling fiercely, when a good priest, also journeying toward Mecca, came up. He listened to them patiently.

"Peace, my brethren," he said at last. "Let us leave the questions until to-morrow night to decide. In the meantime, let Selim go on foot, and Abouk ride the camel." They consented to this exchange of places.

On the next night it was Abouk who had seen the glorious vision, and found the journey pleasant, and it was Selim who had been bitten by the aunts.

"My brothers," said the priest, "we are all going to Mecca, whether we walk or ride; but Selim cannot see what Abouk sees unless he stands where Abouk stands. It is well to change places occasionally."

More than half of the quarrels and disputes in life grow out of the different position, character, and education of the disputants.

"One of my neighbors," writes Pleyn, "is a lean, stern Scotchman, who holds to the tenets of the Covenanters; another is a fat, merry Genoese, who goes to mass. Now, if I had been born in Scotland, I should have eaten oatmeal, and have pinned my faith to John Knox, or, if in Italy, I should probable hold the pope infallible. Shall I, then, knock these men on the head because we differ, or shall I look to find if they be true and friendly, and taking them by the band journey in company with them to heaven?"

"When I hear a new opinion or see an action in a man which I do not comprehend," says another thoughtful writer, "I do not remove them, but instantly strive to put myself in the place of my companion, so that I may understand the teaching or experience which has caused him thus to think and act. By following this plan I widen my knowledge of human nature and deepen my charity."

"God's light," a German poet exclaims, "shines on men through a temple, with many colored windows. "It may seem gray and gloomy to our neighbor, while to us it is rosy and brilliant. But it is the same light, and is sent to us by the same all-merciful God. It is only the very young or the very intolerant man who is sure that he alone sees the light in its purity, while all other men are in darkness."

A Wife Lost at the Fair.

Buffalo Express.

Several children have been lost during the fair. A more distressing case was that of a man who had lost his wife. They came to the fair early in the morning, and, depositing their baggage in the check stand, started upon the usual tour of observation. Hardly had they left the main staircase when they became separated. A short time thereafter the woman rushed into the superintendent's office, stated the case to him and started out again to find her husband. In the meantime the husband called at the check stand and got his baggage. The woman wandered aimlessly around until 9 o'clock at night. At last she sat and cried, completely tired out. She said she was from New York, and that her husband had the return tickets, and she did not keep enough money to get back with. The superintendent took her to one of the restaurants, got a supper for her, and said that if he could find a room for her he would do so. So he started out and at about 10:30 o'clock returned and told her he had secured a room where she could stay that night, but she began crying and said she could not sleep, she would worry so, and besides she did not know what people would think of her. Not knowing any one in the city she concluded at last to go to the depot and wait there, which she did. Whether or not she found her husband was never learned.

The Wrong Girl.

"When I was a young man I fell in love with a charming young girl I used to meet at balls and parties. I found out that she reciprocated my sentiments, and obtained her permission to speak to her father. The next morning I called on him, was shone into his study, and presented myself as a suitor for his daughter's hand. The old gentleman seemed surprised at first, but when I had assured him of the sincerity and stability of my affection he offered no further objections, and, accepting me as his son-in-law, sent for his daughter. As the door opened I ran to greet my fiancee—it was another young lady." "Your lover, my child," he continued, suavely smiling at Mlle. de Bourgoing. "I had abstractedly come to the wrong house, pressed my suit with the wrong father, and had been given to the wrong wife; but of course I could not retract or put upon the young person the indignity of refusing her."—Baron de Bourgoing's Recollections.

The most populor way of committing suicide in California is to sit on a keg of powder and touch it off. It's a sort of demise, coroner's inquest and funeral rolled together and saves no end of work for the relatives.

A Question of Cleanliness.

Smash the bottles? That's the latest war cry. To Explain: There is no telling for what and how soon a bottle is to be used again after once used. The bottle when new from the glassworks was filled with beer, or with medicine, or with wine, or with oxalic acid, or with tooth powder, or with anything else out of an endless list. Well it was used to keep its contents till emptied. That, the reformers contend, ought to definitely end the days of usefulness of that particular bottle. It ought to be broken and crushed into smithreens. But it isn't. We are living in a very utilitarian age and instead of breaking a bottle that has once been used, it is used over and over again for all sorts of things, and in all sorts of houses, until after, perhaps, years and years of service, it accidently breaks, and is done with. No harm in that, you say? Ah, but there is. The bottle was filled with exquisite perfume when it was new. It is thrown into the ash barrel when empty. An hour later it is picked up by the garbage fiend, and sold the same day to the junk dealer. He sells it next day to the druggist. The druggist fills it with medicine and properly labels it, and sends it into the sick room of a woman lying at the point of death with typhoid fever. On the day of her funeral that bottle forms once more part of a heap of household refuse. It goes on traveling from boudoir to cellar, from closet to dung heap; from junk dealer to dago shop—on an on in and endless chase, from mouth to mouth and hand to hand, from sick to healthy, and from filthy to finical, spreading contamination on his road. Do you like the idea? Is it safe? Is it decent? That is the contention.

As a matter of fact, the cry has been started by the bottle manufacturer, who want to create a wider market for their goods. Their argument is: "What do you save by saving bottles? You save the brewer or the distiller a cent or a cent and a half a bottle, being the difference in price between old and new bottles, but that's all. The consumer saves nothing."—Chicago Herald.

The Quality of Tact.

From the London Queen.

What diplomacy is brought to be in the intercourse of nations, such is tact in the intercourse of individuals. Tact has been described as a sixth sense, and this does not seem a bad definition of it. At any rate no combination of the other five will supply the deficiency caused by the absence of tact. Perhaps it would be better described as that quality of intuitive perception which enables us to realize fully the feelings of others, and thus to regulate our conduct accordingly. It is a quality, in short, which enables you to "put yourself in his place." It is a faculty, which, though it may be improved, cannot be acquired by any study, however careful or however arduous, but must be born in its happy possessor. It enables those who have it to take in, almost at a glance, the weak and strong points of a situation or of an individual, to steer clear of the threatening proclivities of either, and to avail themselves of the favorable points in each. What the barometer is to a sailor, that is tact to humanity at large, and the more sensitive this weather-glass of the mind the more quickly is the navigator aware of the proximity of bad weather in the voyage through life.

Politeness and good feeling are naturally more looked for among the educated and higher orders, but tact is the inheritance of no particular class; it is often found in the poorest cottager, and vainly sought for in the nobly born. For politeness may be merely the result of education, and good feeling the outcome of a kindly disposition, but tact is the outcome of neither, and often exists without the latter. Indeed, it is common enough for people to have the best intentions in the world, but to be totally devoid of that subtle and delicate quality of tact.

A Few Predictions.

A recent writer has collected a number of modern predictions, some of which have been fulfilled, and the result is a startling array of facts and guesses.

In the last century a British officer of high rank predicted that this country would one day be divided with the Mississippi river for a boundary line. It remains to be seen whether he was right or wrong. Early in the present century William Cobbett foretold the secession of the southern states. Heine was also remarkable gifted as a prophet. He predicted the Franco-Prussian war, the siege of Paris, the uprising of the communists and the destruction of the Vendome column. De Torqueville foresaw the fall of Louis Napoleon's empire eighteen years in advance. He said that it would wreck itself in some foreign enterprise.

But the latest prophet is a Canadian named Butler. This new foreteller of events informs us that during the coming year there will be a war between England and America, and that the United States will come out victorious and acquire all the British possessions on this continent.

There is something satisfactory about such a prediction. It is a big thing, and then it is definite, and we stand a chance of living to see how it will pan out.

John Stuart Mill believed that the day would come when men who understood the philosophy of history would be able to predict political events with unerring certainty. It may be that we have already reached that point, and that Mr. Butler, of Canada, will rank with Cobbett, Heine, De Torqueville and other successful prophets.

A young woman who married a one-legged man says it doesn't take much to make her husband hopping mad.

CROOKSTON, MINNESOTA.

Skeletons of three men and four women, with other relics of the mound-builders, were found in a mound on the Wood river two miles east of Alton, Illinois.

Archdeacon Sanders, who died recently, was a merciful as well as a philosophic person. He left directions in his will to have all his manuscript charges and sermons burned by his executors.

Seventeen criminals were sentenced to be whipped at the fall term of the criminal court in Wilmington, Delaware, and Sunday morning the sheriff administered the lashes, which numbered 225.

For several days the church clock at Harpenden, Eng., refused to work. On an inspection being made it was found that a swarm of bees had taken up their abode in the machinery.

The junk-dealer who bought the old United States war ship New York for $10 has finished carting it away from the Brooklyn Navy Yard. It cost him $1,800 to remove the vessel.

Canada is mad because the Mormons are settling there. What does Canada expect? Nothing but bank officials? She can't expect to have only the lucrative branch of American scoundrelism.

Lord Dufferin, viceroy of India, is now dependent upon an amanuensis. The tendons of both of his hands have contracted and he is unable to use a pen. The tendons have been cut, but it will be impossible for the noted diplomat to regain free use of his hands.

Senator Sawyer, of Wisconsin, recently said: "When my present term shall expire, my age will be such as to preclude all possibility of my name being mentioned for re-election. I will be 77 years old. When a man attains that age he ought to be willing to retire from political life. I certainly shall."

Mr. Blaine recently related that Garfield once said to him: "You have no idea of the utter loneliness of this life. The minute a man becomes President of the United States his relations with his closest friends assume a new and constrained form. I long for somebody to come and talk to me in the old way."

The French have discovered a method of making smokeless powder, the detonations of which are scarcely audible, so that the firing will not reveal the whereabouts of the army. This invention and the superiority of the Lebel rifle have excited great attention in military circles in Europe, and are likely to affect a revolution in warfare.

A young man attending church at Cisco, Tex., suddenly leaped to his feet with a yell, and commenced dashing around in a very lively manner. All fears that he had gone crazy were dispelled, when he held up to the view of the congregation the mortal remains of a huge tarantula. The sermon which had been interrupted, continued without further incident.

How much are they worth? Cleveland is rated at $200,000—$10,000 to be deducted for campaign purposes. Harrison is worth probably somewhat less than that. Fisk is worth considerable more; at any rate over a quarter of a million. Belva Lockwood is not quite poor; but Curtiss, candidate of the American party, is a two-millionaire. They are all expected to contribute liberally in money, time and hand-shaking, as well as personal influence.

Mr. George W. Cable is quoted as saying that "there is here and there in the South a county, village, or a Congressional district where the colored people have for a long time been allowed an unusual fullness of simple freedom, yet in most, if not all, these cases this condition has been attended by an exceptional degree of great Prosperity, peace, and good order, contrasting most creditably with other regions not far distant where the old idea has been made to prevail or holding the negro under by main force."

Jacob Bloom and Elmira Blank were married in Cincinnati thirty years ago. He was a Hebrew; she a Christian. Since that time Mrs. Bloom has often expressed to Rabbi Wise her desire to embrace the Hebrew religion, but the rabbi, who has a positive horror of proselyting, put her off, advising her to give the matter further thought. Six years ago her husband died, and after that she was more determined than ever to become a Jewess in religion, but it was not until a few weeks ago that the rabbi yielded to her wishes and received her into the family of Israel.

NEWS IN BRIEF.

News From all Parts of the World in a Condensed Form

Washington Brieflets.

The present local and congressional sensation is the discovery of frauds in the construction of the new Washington aqueduct tunnel. Every resident of this city has taken a great interest in this new aqueduct, for upon its construction it was expected that it would be possible to obtain water on many elevations where now it will only run at certain hours of the day, if at all. That the frauds are very extensive there is no longer any question. The only point apparently to be now determined is whether there has been any honest work done in the tunnel since Maj. Hoxie, of the engineer corps, who planned it, was ordered away in order to make a place in Washington for a political favorite and a member of the social army clique.

Sinful Siftings.

The dead body of a man with a bullet hole in the forehead was found floating in the river at Palisade near Sioux Falls, Dak. It has been identified as that of Charles Miller, a quarry man. His coat and vest were found on shore, with the pockets emptied. He had been paid off a few days before and murder is suspected.

A man giving the name of Morris Sullivan was arrested at Fargo on a telegram from Sheriff Kern of Traill county on suspicion of having murdered the tramp at Hillsboro. The complaint was made by a farm hand, who claims to have witnessed the killing and who furnished the description of Sullivan which led to his identification.

James H. Goodman, a lawyer, of New York, has fled from the wrath of the people whom he has victimized, and is supposed to be in Canada. The total of his stealings, so far as known, foots up $23,700, taken from women and orphans. Goodman, among other things, stole $10,000 from his wife. He also got money from orphans and widows by swindling them out of life insurance policies.

Deputy Sheriff Barnes of Fargo came in from Hillsboro and reported that a tramp was murdered there. About fifty of them were camping in the timber near the town, and all were more or less under the influence of liquor. Two became involved in a quarrel, and one shot the other through the body, killing him almost instantly. Eighteen or twenty of them were arrested, but all claimed to have been drunk and know nothing of the killing.

Firebugs worked up the most destructive fire known in Rushford, Minn., for six years. The loss is as follows: Davis, drygoods, $10,000; Dr. H. C. Graves, $500; Heiberg & Hazzard, druggists, $4,000; H. O. Halverson, merchant tailor, $5,000; building burned, belonging to G. G. Stevens, $5,000; Thomas Hall's stone block was damaged $1,000. In addition to the above the loss on goods moved into the street and to adjacent building will be at least $10,000. The insurance is $8,000.

The 100 and odd railway ticket scalpers in Chicago were victimized to the amount of about $20,000. A clever swindler made the round of the brokers' offices and at each one disposed of from two to five tickets from New Orleans to New York via Chicago, from which the coupons from New Orleans to Chicago had been detached. In each case the confidence man stated he had brought his family this far and had decided not to continue his journey to New York. The tickets were discovered to be clever forgeries.

A second attempt, this time successful, was made to burn the machinery sheds of the S. D. Peterson implement company at New Ulm. A few days ago the same buildings were set on fire and only saved by timely warning given by a passer by. This fire coming so soon after the mysterious burning of Mr. Mullen's residence looks like the work of fire bugs. There were seventeen new self binders and three separators burned. The insurance was $3,000, which will about cover the loss. Of this $2,000 was in the Commercial Union and $1,000 in the Oriental.

Foreign Cullings.

Additional information has been received of the recent fighting at Samoa between the forces of Tamasese and Malietoa, the deposed king, in which the Tamasese men were defeated. A correspondent writes from Apia that the battle ground was in and around that city and that several weeks before the fighting commenced the Tamasese forces had built forts and formidable intrenchments which were manned by over 1,000 men. Sept. 12 Malietoa's forces charged upon these works and in less than two hours the Mamasese men had been driven into the sea, where they took refuge upon rafts and finally got away in boats. During the fight Capt. Bissel, an Englishman living near Apia, was shot and killed. He was not engaged in the battle and the shooting is believed to have been accidental. Four hundred lives were lost, and the wounded were cared for by the British and American residents and assistance was also rendered by the surgeons on the United States war ship Adams, now at Apia.

Accidents and Casualties.

John Novitzki, of Avon, Minn. was accidently shot in the back by John Broda. They were out looking up land ten miles from Avon and Broda carried a gun. While dragging the weapon behind him it was discharged and the load entered the back of Novitzki. He is not expected to live.

George Howard, living near Claremont, Dak., while engaged in a drunken row with a companion, near Aberdeen, Dak., was shot in the leg, the ball passing entirely through, inflicting a dangerous wound. The wounded man lay on the prairie all night and till the afternoon of the next day when he was found and taken to the hospital for treatment.

Conductor Edward Pratt, of the Omaha way freight, attempted to jump from the moving train for the purpose of registering at the depot at West Superior. His feet slipped and he fell between the depot platform and the train, receiving injuries which will doubtless result in his death. He is well known in railroad circles at the head of the lakes and in St. Paul, where his wife and family reside.

The master, second officer and survivors of the British ship Earl Wemyss from San Francisco for Queenstown, which was sunk in a collision with the ship Ardencapel, were taken aboard the ship Creedmore, from Manila for New York, on Sept. 9, together with the deserters from the Ardencapel. The master's wife and children and the first officer and nineteen of the crew of the Earl Wemyss were drowned.

William H. Bon of Maplewood, Minn., was accidentally shot in the abdomen by his son, inflicting a very serious wound, though it is thought not necessarily fatal. Cole Christianson of Henning went to take his gun out of his boat, pulling the muzzle towards him. The hammer caught on the seat and the charge entered his right arm near the shoulder, breaking the bone and making an ugly wound, which will probably necessitate amputation.

Jacob Brabender, aged sixteen, a deformed boy of La Crosse, Wis., while hunting shot himself accidentally and died within a minute or two. Another boy was with him, and at once started for the city to give information of the event. On his way he tipped over in the boat, lost both the guns and narrowly escaped drowning. An inquest rendered a verdict of accidental death. The boy was using an old muzzle loader and probably drawing it through the grass, as the whole charge entered his right side, tearing a hole that an arm might be thrust into.

Two large frame warehouses, situated on the bank of the Minnesota river near Shakopee, formerly used for wheat storage purposes, were fired by somebody and entirely consumed with all their contents. They were occupied by the Wampach Manufacturing company who had a large amount of finished sleighs and wagons and a very large stock of seasoned hard wood lumber stored therein; the her was occupied by its owner, J. B. Couter, in storing a large amount of white lime, plastering hair, cement and fire brick, together with a large amount of wheat, all of which is a total loss. Incendiarism is clearly proven. Loss over $5,000, with no insurance.

Personal Gossip.

William Henry Andrews and Miss Catharine Gresham, daughter of Judge Walter Q. Gresham, were married at Chicago in the presence of a large number of invited guests. A quiet reception at the Palmer house followed the ceremony.

George F. Shephard, a wealthy, retired manufacturer of Brooklyn, died of an overdose of morphine. He had been trying for a year to overcome the morphine habit, and employed an attendant to care for him and keep him from getting the drug, except in small doses when absolutely necessary. He seemed to have already rid himself of the habit, but during the temporary absence of the attendant he evidently took a large quantity of the drug to overcome the feeling of prostration of which he had been complaining. He was over 70 years old.

Miscellaneous News Items.

A tannery in St. Paul was burned, and the building, with its contents, was entirely destroyed, entailing a loss of about $8,000, with only a small amount of insurance. A small frame house adjoining the tannery, owned by Theodore Erikson, was also destroyed, with a loss of about $200 and no insurance.

The administrators of the estate of the late Amos J. Snell, who was murdered in Chicago by a burglar, alleged to be William B. Tascott, on Feb. 8. last, and who have offered a reward of $20,000 for the apprehension of the murderer, now offer an additional reward of $10,000 for the recovery of the papers and documents taken from the Snell residence at that date. The offer is made over the name of A. J. Stone.

The Inman line Steamer City of New York, which arrived at Queenstown, made the passage from Sandy Hook in seven days and 23 hours. Her circulation pumps were defective and for four days only the starboard engine could be worked. She met severe gales during which two passengers were thrown to the floor and had several rigs broken. During the gales another passenger became insane and it was found necessary to put him in a straight jacket.

An attachment against the property of William R. Foster, Jr., the missing counsel of the New York produce exchange gratuity fund, has been obtained by the counsel of the produce exchange in a suit to recover $20,000. The attachment was granted on affidavits of the officers of the fund. It is supposed that Foster has fled to Canada. The Bayport which has been attacked, it is now claimed, does not belong to Foster, but his creditors are prepared to prove that it was purchased with their money.

Within four days the Northern Pacific has moved to St. Paul and Chicago over thirty trains of stock, over 600 cars. The boys have had no end of sport over the error in transmission which noted the beginning of the movememt, as eighteen "cars," when trains were meant. At the beginning less than twenty train loads were in sight. This has been nearly doubled, making a procession marketwards of unprecedented size in the same time. In the whole movement, now nearly past, there has not been an accident nor unusual delay.

One of the evidences of civilization and effects of education upon the Indian is the fact that as many of them as can afford it are discarding the method of simply wrapping a blanket around their dead when they bury them, and are patronizing the undertakers. They buy the cheapest cases they can get, but prefer them to the blanket. The marble man at Black River Falls, Wis., has also just completed a neat marble slab bearing the inscription, "Mary, Daughter of Winneshelk, and wife of Stand Straight, Died Sept. 15, Aged 23 Years." Some of them are staunch temperance advocates and will not touch a drop of liquor of any kind.

Hiram McChesney was appointed receiver of the Traders' bank, corner Madison and La Salle streets, Chicago, by Judge Shepard under a petition filed by Thomas P. Tollman, the cashier. Mr. McChesney gave a bond of $500,000 and was ordered to take charge of all the effects that belong to the bank or are held by it in trust. The news was received with a great deal of surprise and floated around with the usual swiftness of a rumor among the lawyers and caused more than one to excuse himself from a case and hurry around to protect clients who were the bank's creditors. The liabilities are on the verge of $1,000,000. The capital stock is $200,000 divided into 2,000 shares, of which Mr Rutter holds 1,500 and Mr. Tollman 500. There were no other shareholders. For six months, he says, Mr. Rutter, the president, has been an invalid and incapable of attending to the affairs of the bank.

Bishop Wm. Taylor, the distinguished African bishop of the Methodist church expresses his views on the disappearance of Henry M. Stanley, the African explorer. He says: From his knowledge of the conditions of things in Africa it was highly probable that Stanley had gone into the interior of the country where he could not be heard from in a year or two, and that interested persons were taking advantage of his absence to create friendship for individual schemes to organize searching parties, whose real object was something else than the recovery or assistance of Stanley. A desire for public sensations, perhaps, prompted many of the publications respecting the explorer. The bishop did not belive there would be any special cause for alarm if he was not heard from for a year or two yet.

The report was current that three persons had died during the day, of yellow fever at Gallipolis, a town on the Ohio river, 150 miles below Pittsburgh. Those who died are Capt. W. K. Hall, a prominent citizen, who was taken sick a few days ago while visiting at Catlettsburg, Ky.; a Mrs. Smeltzer and Miss Anna Robinson. A son of Capt. Hall is also ill. Physicians are reticent but say the symptoms are those of yellow fever. Citizens are terror stricken. Dr. Hutton, at Camp Perry, has telegraphed to Surgeon General Hamilton as follows: "Over fifty worthy destitute people in camp, discharged and unable to get away. I cannot turn women and children into the woods to starve. Please divert some charitable funds here to aid them. Shot gun quarantine will not allow them to go South of Atlanta." In response to this telegram Dr. Hutton was authorized to furnish transportation upon government vouchers to all such persons as are unable to leave the camp.

Minnesota Indian Lands.

Senator Sabin, from the committee on Indian affairs, reported Nelson's bill to negotiate with Chippewa Indians for the complete session and relinquishment of their lands in Minnesota, except Blue Earth and Red Lake reservations, and also so much of these two reservations as is not required to make full allotments. The important changes which were agreed to by Mr. Nelson and Mr. Sabin before this report was made consist in the manner of disposing of the pine lands, which are to be estimated by the thousand feet and offered at public auction under the same provisions as are state and school lands, in forty-acre tracts. The minimum price of stumpage is fixed at $3 per 1,000 feet, estimates of which shall be printed and furnished applicants by the land office at Crookston. The committee declined to entertain an amendment of Senator Sabin setting aside sections 15 and 36 to the State of Minnesota for school lands, Senator Dawes claiming these reservations are not ceded lands and the state has no right in them, and, furthermore, if this provision is inserted that it will prevent acceptance of the terms of the bill by the Indians, as it will take from them their funds arising out of the sale of the lands about $500,000. Senator Sabin says he could not afford to jeopardize the bill by inserting this provision, however much he desired to add this large sum to the permanent school fund of Minnesota. Opening this large territory will benefit the treeless portion of Minnesota and cannot be delayed by minor matters. The provisions for disposing of the agricultural lands is to homesteaders only, at $1.25 per acre in five annual payments, thus insuring it to actual settlers and shutting out land sharks and speculators.

The Washington Aqueduct.

The frauds in the construction of the Washington aqueduct will greatly injure the reputation of the engineer corps with congress. This corps has been justly regarded as the highest corps of the army. Its officers are men of high character, and have always been regarded as men of ability. Congress has felt that the interests of the government were safe when the expenditure of the appropriations for the rivers and harbors was entrusted to the officers of this corps. But there seems to be something in the social atmosphere of Washington which enervates some of the best men of the service. It is said that one of the army officers responsible for the construction of this work, whose signature that the work has been satisfactorily preformed is required for every voucher upon which payment is made to the contractors, has never yet set foot in the tunnel, except on one occasion when he accompanied a congressional committee there. An investigation is to be made by congress into all of this; but nothing has been heard that the war department contemplates any inquiry of its own, or that the officers themselves have asked for an official inquiry. Rugged old soldiers criticise the department for this and say that it could not happen unless there was great demoralization in the service and discipline was much relaxed.

Another Letter of Acceptance.

The following is Hon. Levi P. Morton's letter of acceptance of the nomination for the office of vice president of the United States:

Rhinecliffe, N. Y., Oct. 2, 1888.—The Hon. M. M. Estee and Others, Committee.—Gentleman: In making formal acceptance of my nomination as the Republican candidate for the vice-presidency, I desire to express my grateful appreciation of the confidence reposed in me by the convention. The duties devolving upon the vice president as presiding officers of the senate, and in certain contingencies a participant in the legislation of congress, make it proper that the people should know distinctly and unreservedly the political views of the candidate who may be presented for their suffrages. It fortunately happens that this duty for myself is easily discharged by referring to the principles embodied in the resolutions unanimously adopted by the national convention. These resolutions, unequivocal and comprehensive in character, reflect my personal convictions and have my hearty approval. It is difficult, in a political campaign, to fix popular attention on more than one issue, and in the pending election every voter in the United States clearly sees that the controlling question is whether the protective tariff duties now in force shall be so reduced as to destroy their efficiency, or whether these duties shall be retained with such modifications and adjustments as shall better adapt them to the great end of protecting the vast and important industries of the whole country. The Republican platform, while recognizing the necessity of reducing the revenue, declares that this reduction must not be made at the expense of these industries and of American labor. The American people have now.

ENJOYED THE PROTECTIVE SYSTEM

for a longer continuous period than ever before in the history of the national government. The result is that for more than a quarter of a century they have realized a degree of industrial and financial prosperity unprecedented in this country and never equaled in any other. The pressing reason given for once again trying the old experiment of a revenue tariff without protection as a motive or end, is that the present tariff has produced and is producing a surplus in the treasury. But it is not easily within the wisdom of congress to adjust the national income to the national expenditure without sacrificing or even imperiling an industrial system which has brought untold advantages to the entire country? Admitting that the present tariff, by lapse of time and the large expansion of trade, which it had stimulated, needs revision, is it not wiser and more patriotic to revise it with a careful regard to the interests of protection than with the purpose of lessening its protective features? These are some of the questions which must be answered at the national polls in November. For myself, as a citizen and as a candidate, I do not hesitate to declare that from long observation, I am an unwavering friend of the protective system. In a business life now extending over forty years I have witnessed and compared the effect upon the county of a revenue tariff tending to free trade, with a protective tariff encouraging home industries. Under the former the development of the country has always been arrested, while under the latter it has uniformerly been promoted. To the men who earn their bread by the sweat of their brows, the difference between the two systems is that of narrowing chances on the one hand, and extending opportunities on the other. Free trade would open America to competition with the whole world. Protection reserves America for Americans, native and adopted. The industrial system of a country is as sensitive as its public credit. A hostile movement in the public mind, and confidence, the only basis of successful trade, becomes impaired. New enterprises whither in the bud, capital grows timid, the field of labor is contracted and pressure for employment inevitably reduces the wages of all workingmen. With the views of the convention so frankly expressed in its resolutions upon all other questions of public interest, I find myself in hearty accord. In relation to silver and its important bearing upon the national currency, as well as its connection with the influence on the prosperity of large sections of our common country; in its advocacy of a judicious settlement of the public lands policy; in urging the necessity for better coast defenses, and the duty we owe to the shipping interests of the country, the platform but repeats the approved principles of the Republican party. The Republican platform proposes a distinctly American policy; not one of narrowness and bigotry, but one broad and philanthropic—a policy that best helps the whole world by the example of a great, growing, powerful nation, founded upon the equality of every man before the law. It is for the American people to develop and cultivate the continent to which, in the providence of God, they have fallen heirs. They should adopt a policy which looks steadily to the great end. With no spirit of narrowness toward other people, but rather in the highest interest of all, they should find under their own flag a field of limitless advance in the direction of the improvement, the prosperity and the happiness of man. Very respectfully yours,

LEVI P. MORTON.

The President Signs the Bill.

The president transmitted a message to congress, in which he says: "I have this day approved House bill No. 11,336 supplementary to an act entitled "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese immigration," approved May 6, 1882." The news was received in San Francisco with a marked degree of interest. Large crowds congregated around the newspaper bulletin boards and discussed the situation. The Chinese manifested considerable excitement. The principal subject of discussion is as to what effect the measure will have upon the several thousand Chinese who have arrived within the past year and been landed by the federal courts upon writs of habeas corpus and are on bail awaiting examination; and also upon the 2,000 more Chinese who are now on their way to this port. About 200 Chinese arrived here on the steamer City of New York. The Belgic will arrive with 800. Three other steamers are on the Pacific with over 1,000 celestials bound for San Francisco. Collector of the port Hagger expressed himself as being doubtful of the bill's effectiveness. He said:

The present bill is intended to exclude Chinese. So was the restriction act. But did the restriction act exclude them.? If the same principle is applied to this bill as was applied to the other I do not see that it is going to be any great improvement. If the courts can continue to land Chinese on writs of habeas corpus and allow them on our soil on bail, that will abrogate any kind of restriction attempted by congress. When they are allowed, they are in the country, and they then forfeit their bail and remain here in spite of the law.

The collector concluded by stating that in all probability, when officially informed of the passage and approval of the bill, he would refuse landing to Chinese whether bearing return certificates or not, unless a writ of habeas corpus were issued by the courts, in which case the matter would be out of his hands.

United States District Attorney Carey stated that in his opinion the bill could not affect the 5,000 Chinese now out on bail, but he believed that those now on their way here would be refused landing. He further stated that he did not believe writs of habeas corpus would be issued, except, possibly in one or two cases in order to make a test of the matter.

A prominent lawyer, who handles Chinese cases almost exclusively in federal courts, stated that in his opoinion writs of habeas corpus would still have to be issued to Chinese demanding them as it was a constitutional right, and that bail also would have to be issued as heretofore. He also expressed the belief that all Chinese holding return certificates could return to this country in spite of the exclusion bill, as the United States supreme court has decided on several occasions that congress cannot annul existing contracts such as these certificates are.

The arrest of Albert A. Reeves and Charles Stout, the Chicago ticket brokers, promises to bring to light a widespread conspiracy. It was authoritatively stated that the sum realized by the frauds is not less than $25,000, instead of $4,000, as first published. The forged ticket were sold simultaneously to brokers not only in Chicago, but also at St Louis, Cincinnati, Columbus, Louisville and Memphis. "Hungry Joe," the notorious New York confidence man, and a woman companion are said to be the persons who sold the tickets to the Chicago brokers. Reeves and Stout, it is understood, played merely a minor part, their crime consisting chiefly in helping to get the tickets printed. The two were held to the grand jury under heavy bonds.

Republican Argument.

Pickwickian Denunciations.

One of the funniest features of politics this year is the solemnity with which the democrats denounce "trusts" while their pockets are bulging with the profits of sugar and Standard Oil.—Brooklyn Union.

Congress Will Be Republican.

Whatever uncertainties surround the general result of the election, the re-establishment of Republicanism in Congress is not among them.—St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

Don't Go To Ireland.

A free trade contemporary says that "a good suit of clothes can be bought in Ireland for $6.56." That explains what we have long wished to know, the cause of Ireland's prosperity. It is cheap clothes. What more can a man want than a suit of clothes at $6.56? Still our advice to workingmen is: "Don't move to Ireland."—Burlington Hawkeye.

Getting Out of Debt.

Protection seems to work better than free trade in getting a nation out of debt. Free-trade Great Britain had a public debt in 1878 of $3,875,000,000. It is now $3,680,000,000, a decrease in ten years of $195,000,000. The United States in 1878 had a debt of $2,256,000,000. It is now $1,154,000,000, a decrease of $1,102,000,000.

Dodging their Boomerang.

Mr. Mills has gone South, not to appear again in the North during the present canvass. The Republicans up here are doing very well, and still are unwilling to spare his valuable services. While at the start the Democrats used the Mills bill as their principal campaign weapon, they are now kept busy dodging their own boomerang.

American Nationality.

The New York Press says: "On one side the confederacy and the British backed up by the northern tory, reinforced by the legions of ignorance and venality in the great cities of the north. On the other sides the forces of American nationality and the enlightened and heroic elements of our foreign-born citizens. History will repeat itself. We met our Bunker Hill in 1884. We will have our Yorktown in 1888. There is a reserve power in American nationality that has always asserted itself on great occasions. One of these great occasions presents itself to-day, and the American people will prove equal to the emergency."

The German-Americans and Protection.

The German-American voters in Ohio and in the old Northwest are deserting the democratic party to a degree that is highly complimentary to their good sense. This is largely due to the clearness, force and ability with which leading German newspapers out there have stated the great issue of the campaign. We refer to such journals as the Chicago Staats Zeitung and the Cincinnati Volksblatt and Freie Press. The first named we have more than once quoted from. No clearer analysis of the inevitable Free Trade tendencies of the Mills bill has been made anywhere than has been given by this widely-circulated and powerful newspaper.

The Cincinnati Volksblatt has a very effective style of exposing the sectional character of the Mills bill. For instance it says that the bill "retains a tariff of 60 per cent. on sugar, and 100 per cent. on rice. Is this done in order to reduce the necessaries of life? None but the sugar lords, as far as we can see derive a benefit from it, unless it be President Cleveland, to whose re-election these gentlemen contribute liberally."

The Freie Press ought to know the drift of German-American sentiment in Ohio, and it says that "the supposition that most of the citizens who have been naturalized since the last Presidential election will vote for Harrison and Morton and the protection of home industry is perfectly correct. These people appreciate the benefits which they and the whole country owe to protective Tariff. Their experience and comparison with their position in the old and new Fatherland will teach them that to vote with the democrats and Free Trade would be the lowering of their own wages."

These are encouraging indications. The intelligent German-American voters—whether they like or hate Bismarck—regard him as the greatest man living, and they know that German experience has proved that he was never wiser than when, in 1882, he urged a Protective policy in the German Richstag, "because," said he, "it is my deliberate judgment that the prosperity of America is mainly due to its system of Protective laws, I urge that Germany has now reached that point where it is necessary to imitate the tariff system of the United States."

Twenty Reasons Why.

Here are 20 reasons why the United States should continue the protective system:

First—Because the most patriotic Americans have favored it, Washington, Jefferson, Hamilton, Jackson, Madison, Monroe, the two Adamses and Lincoln were protectionists.

Second—Because free trade and secession are alike the products of sectional jealousy. The first serious attempt to destroy the Union was promoted by free traders, and in 1861 every secessionist was a free trader.

Third—Because the policy of free trade is of English origin and was confessedly originated to benefit the people of Great Britain.

Fourth—Because there is a necessary commercial antagonism between the United States and Great Britain. It has always existed and will probably continue until Britain, like Phœnicia and Carthage, after a long reign, surrenders her supremacy. Under the circumstances we, being her chief antagonist, would be fools to accept her suggestions.

Fifth—Because under her system the United States has reached the position of the wealthiest nation on the globe.

Sixth—Because by the aid of protection we have created a manufacturing industry which has no rival in magnitude.

Seventh—Because by greatly stimulating productivity and mechanical ingenuity, protection has put within the reach of wage earners comforts undreamed of by kings a couple of centuries ago.

Eight—Because it has created an enormous home market for the farmer, without which we would always have been subjected to the vicissitudes of a varying foreign demand.

Ninth—Because by bringing the shop and the farm close together it has greatly enhanced the value of all agricultural lands in the United States.

Tenth—Because it has enabled us in a brief period to pay off the major part of an immense national debt incurred in the suppression of a war waged for slavery and free trade.

Eleventh—Because it has always kept the United States treasury in a solvent condition; while free trade has always resulted in the destruction of the national credit, and a resort to loans in times of profound peace.

Twelfth—Because it helps the workingman to secure a fair compensation for his services by shielding him from fierce competition of the pauper labor of Europe.

Thirteenth—Because it is a fair system of taxation, which compels the foreigner to pay for the privilege of entering our markets, thus relieving the home producer of a portion of his burden.

Fourteenth—Because it is a rational system, inculcating the idea that it is wise for a nation to be self-sustaining.

Fifteenth—Because it has stimulated national pride by developing our resources on a grand scale.

Sixteenth—Because the material prosperity it has brought about has compelled the foreigner to recognize our country as a great one.

Seventeenth—Because it elevates to the first place the producer, considering his interest as of more importance than those of the mere consumer, who is too often of the class that toils nor spins not.

Eighteen—Because it promotes good workmanship, the live-and-let-live principle back of it making it unnecessary to resort to what Carlyle called the cheap and nasty method of production, which always characterize the work of free traders.

Nineteenth—Because it unhesitatingly condems as an economic error the theory that it is wise to put men on the level of beasts in order to secure cheapness for the consumer. Excessive competition, the invariable outcome of free trade, is bound to produce such a result by calling into play the stern maxim of the survival of the latest, which usually means in economics the worker who will permit himself to be crowded nearest the limit of substance.

Twentieth—Because it is American.

Prairie fires are doing damage on the "flats" south and west from Fergus Falls. Several farmers have lost stacks of hay and wheat, and unless a change in the present dry weather comes soon there is a good prospect of large areas being devastated. Many farmers are plowing wide strips around their homesteads for protection.

Rev. A. G. Wilson, for the past two years pastor of the Methodist Episcopal church of Glencoe, left with his family for Spokane Falls, where he has been called as pastor by the Methodist Episcopal church. Previous to his settlement at Glencoe Mr. Wilson was the pastor of a Methodist church in St. Paul, Granite Falls, Red Wing and Spring Valley, Minn.

J. W. Coates, attorney for Platt county, Mo., took $240,000 in new bonds of that county to Jefferson City, to have them registered. The bonds were duly received and Mr. Coates placed them in his valice, which was in his room at the hotel at Jefferson City while he was at dinner, but not out of his sight at any other time. Upon his arrival in St. Louis, where he intended to dispose of the bonds, Mr. Coates discovered that 20 funding bonds of the denomination of $1,000 each were missing, their number being from 20 to 39 inclusive and dated Oct. 1, 1888. It is presumed that the bonds were stolen. All efforts to locate them have failed.

The Eastern elevator plant now consists of the one transferred and a new one now under course of construction. The Great Northern, the largest single elevator in the world, holds 2,000,000 bushels and the new 1,700,000.

Brooks Bros.' elevator at Gilley, Dak., was burned. Two thousand bushels of wheat were destroyed. At an early hour next morning fire was discovered in the rear of the Hill block, on Third street. A pile of shavings and inflammable material were saturated with oil and kindling, the object evidently being the destriction of that block. The fire was speedily extinguished.

A brother of D. H. Jones of Decorah, who with his family was visiting in Decorah while en route to his home in Nebraska, died there from an overdose of morphine administered by a local resident physician.

The fire started in the afternoon and approached the city rapidly. All its residents are now out in force fighting the fire. In response to a request for aid a Northern Pacific car with fifty men just left to help save the town. Fires are also raging in other directions.

Had Its Dry Streaks.

It is said that the best way to collect a library is to know each book ere it goes to its place on the shelf. The old gentleman in the following anecdote evidently intended to follow the rule to the letter. A man happened to go into a Dakota settler's house one day and noticed the first volume of a cyclopedia on the shelf, and, casually suggested that it was a good thing to have in the house, or words to that effect.

"Yes," the settler replied, "it's handy. I only got the first book."

"How does it happen that you haven't the other?"

"Why, I hain't read that one yet, an' I haint ready for 'nother. Ye see I got it of an agent when I was livin' down in Iowa, an' about six months after 'round he comes again an' knocked at the door, an' I opened it, an' says he: 'Mister, here's the secon' book of your encyclopedy.'

"'Git out!' says I; 'I haint got the first one read yet!' and made him go, too, W'y, jes' think of it. That was nigh on to ten year ago, an' I aint more'n two-thirds through this now, and my wife is only jes' nicely started on the B's!

The ticket placed in the field by the republicans from the president to the coroner is a good strong one, worthy the active support of everybody and no true republican can have any excuse for scratching a single name. In our own county it is the best one in the field and will no doubt be elected by a good majority. In fact the men are all so good that the democrats have endorsed most of it and wanted to do so all 'round only they were ashamed to acknowledge the dearth of good timber in the democratic party. In the case of Mr. Lucken an unfortunate complication has arisen, caused, no doubt by the advice of some who place their own selfish wishes before the success of party principle, who think they have a personal grievance because the men they wished to see nominated did not obtain a majority of votes in the convention. Their man had every chance any fair minded man could ask but now, because Mr. Lucken had the most friends in the convention he evidently forgets his party principles and makes a fight when the only earthly good it can possibly do might be to elect a democrat. And what good is accomplished? Is the democratic nominee a better man for the place? Is not Mr. Lucken with his experience in the office the best man for the interests of the county of any of them? That man does not tread this green footstool who is any more honest or faithful than is our present treasurer, and if the people of Polk County have not entirely lost their senses, our tresurer for two years yet. You will honor P. J. McGuire again. Why? Because you think no better man for auditor lives than he. And you are right. When you can find such tried and true officials as these is is best for the interest of the county to keep them. But what is the matter with O. H. Lucken? Is he not as faithful and true in his office as is McGuire? You will elect Andrew Eiken for register of deeds and you do well for he is worthy, yet even he is no more worthy than is the faithful, the true, the fearless old soldier, O. H. Lucken. If there was one single charge that could be brought against him there might be some sense in turning him out, but there is not and everybody knows it, and the only reason under heaven for voting against him is to gratify the spirit of revenge of a handful of men who have so far forgotten their manhood as to be willing to sacrifice the interests of the county and of their party to a poor, mean paltry revenge. Revenge for what? Why because the party would not be dictated to by them put in nomination a faithful, honest servant when they demanded another man. The idea that the interests of the whole county and the whole party must be made to serve the spirit of revenge for a few would-be dictators is too extremely absurd for a serious thought. And yet it is too true. There are in every party men who, if they can not rule will do their best to ruin. All such deserve to be sat down upon severely.

What's the Matter with Paulsrud?

The democratic egotist on Second street, when he has nothing else to do, keeps constantly slapping our good natured sheriff in the face. He does a good deal of that business, and every time he makes a break he makes votes for Paulsrud, for, as he was never known to favor any good thing, people have learned to look with favor upon every man or every measure McKenzie opposes. Mr. Paulsrud took possession of the office two years ago with everything to learn, and if he has made a few mistakes it is no more than natural to expect, but we challenge any man to put his finger upon one dishonest act that he has ever done. If every democratic opponent had as clean a record Uncle Sam's treasury would contain a far greater surplus than it is now said to. Mr. Paulsrud's career in office has given him the experience necessary to avoid in the future the mistakes of the past, and if elected he will be a competent official. The Times howls most about the few escapades that have occurred; for which the county of Polk is as much in all cases, and more in some cases to blame than is Sheriff Paulsrud. The only wonder is that he has managed to keep so many as he has. With proper facilities at hand there would be no cause to complain of prisoners escaping. No republican voter need hesitate to vote for so honest and true an official as Paulsrud, especially when his opponent is a man without any experience whatever in the business, to prove his qualifications. It is a very bad policy after you have once got a true and honest man trained for the business for two years of good discipline to turn him out for a new, wholly untried man, with no better reasons for it than exist at this time. Mr. Paulsrud deserves to be and we think he will be triumphantly elected.

The County Superintendent.

Ezra F. Elliot, our accomplished Superintendent of Schools, and the nominee of the republican party, has well and faithfully served the interests of this large county and by all the rules governing such cases is clearly entitled to re-election. But this is not the reason why he is urged for the position. It is because he has been tried and found not wanting, that he is faithful and thoroughly competent, and that in his hands our school interests are safe. He has promptly attended to his duties during the cold, inclement weather of winter, as well and faithfully as during the pleasant summer weather. Miss Ella Harrington, the third party nominee, is the only competitor for the honor. Miss Harrington is a lady in every sense of the word, and if it was so ordered that a lady should be obliged to undertake the arduous duties of county superintendent we know of no one to whom we would more willingly consign them, but we should regret to see any lady obliged to leave her pleasant fireside to travel about this great county in all kinds of weather of winter. To go paddling about in the deep muds of spring, or wading about through the rains of dreary autumn. The Third Party ought to have better sense than to think of such a thing. Truly, the interests of the schools must suffer and that too through no fault of the lady. It is a man's business, and it requires a pretty rugged constitution at that, to attend to the requirements of our schools the year 'round, and for a regular thoroughbred, all 'round man, you have to go a good ways before you find a better than that same Ezra F. Elliot.

Marshall County Leader: Mr. Geo. R. Roberts, of this place, the republican nominee for representative from the 45th district, is a gentleman of wide and varied culture and high attainments, against whom not one word can be said as to his sturdy honesty and integrity of character. He is an old resident of the valley, a practical farmer, a business man of wide experience, and one of those men whom the people, of their own accord when left to themselves, delight to honor and put forward into places of trust and responsibility. Mr. Roberts has given much time and study to several questions of great importance to the people of the valley, and we do not hesitate to say that he is the best equipped man in the district to represent our interests in the next legislature. The railroad and drainage questions as well as important amendments to our state school laws, have received a great deal of careful study from him, at a time when he had no thought that the people would take him up and ask him to do their bidding as one of their lawmakers. Let it not be forgotten that in the case of Mr. Roberts it is really a question of the office seeking the man. Mr. Roberts' neighbors will all bear witness to the fact that he was taken up and put forward by them without his knowledge or implied wish. He has already received the promise of hearty endorsement and support from many prominent democrats, and when elected he will be a servant of the people and not a servile tool of any party organization or clique.

The Senate Bill.

The Senate bill for the revision of the tariff has been presented and shows that the republican party knows what it is about and is the true friend of the country. It provides for a gross reduction of over $73,000,000 in tariff and internal revenue taxation. Of this sum, upward of $42,000,000 is taken from the general customs list, $29,000,000 from interest revenue and $7,000,000 from sugar and tobacco. It is a bill that no democrat can find fault with unless he is an absolute free trader.

"A GREEN SOFT FOOL!"

Is The Compliment Which the Barnesville Review Pays the Times Young Man.

And Intimates Pretty Broadly That If His OWN RECORD

Should De Brought To Light the Times Man Would be Scorned and Shunned By All

HONEST AND TRUE MEN.

The following scorching article from the Barnesville Review places the Times young man in a very unenviable light as he is the man who published the Cronin letter, pretending that it was a "communication to the Times," from Cronin. While it is a pretty severe dose we cannot but feel that it is a deserved one for Mr. Kenzie knows that Mr. Comstock is in every sense an honorable and upright man, and when Mr. Comstock was here, he interviewed McKenzie in relation to slanderous reprots that he had published and McKenzie told him that he did not intend to be personal at all, it was only a bit of pleasantry for political effect. If the things that McKenzie has said about Mr. Comstock were true Mr. Comstock is everything but an honorable man. If Mr. McKenzie's past career is pure and honorable the following scorching arraignment will have no effect upon him. The Review says:

"Considerable has been said of late in regard to the dodging of Mr. Comstock in the legislature, of his shirking his duty in not voting or refusing to vote on certain bills brought out, and more especially during the last session of the legislature. Now anyone who was present at the last session, or has any knowledge of the large amount of business done, knows that committee men who frequently supported bills strongly were not always present when these bills were voted on, and more especially when there was little opposition manifested towards them.

Mr. Comstock was member of six different committees, and his time was occupied every minute; two of these committees, the judiciary and railroads are important and take an immense amount of time. One of these committees we think it was the judiciary, the work was all done by Comstock and another member, the other two members of the committee were sick nearly all of the session. That Mr. Comstock did not vote on these bills does not prove that he dodged them. He did not dodge these bills, duties on so many different committees made it impossible that he could be present at every vote, and with other members of the house who did work on committees it was exactly the same as we can show. It was only green members or those not on committees who were present and voted like stotin bottles at every division of the house, and were trying to work up a record. This man Cronin if there is such a man, who cooked up this statement of Comstock's shirking his duty is a lying whelp and any editor who would print such a disreputable communication is a green soft fool. Every charge that is brought against Comstock is similar to this in character. His opponents have time and again asserted that he was honest, upright, incorruptible as a man and a political, yet these villainous charges are made by men, who, if their own record was brought to light, would be scorned and shunned by all honest and true men."

The First Chunk.

THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE SENDS A PORTION OF ITS $300,000 INTO OTTER TAIL COUNUY—"ME AND MIKE" BUY THE OTTER TAIL COUNTY FARMER AND WILL MAKE IT A "BOSS ORGAN."

Fergus Falls Journal.

If a man had been at Minneapolis last Thursday he might have seen Alderman Cowie and M. R. Lowry under the guidance of an aged escort, making their way to the Boston block, where Candidate Eugene Wilson has his office, and where Chairman Lawrence, of the democratic state central committee, and Bob Miller are dispensing the $300,000 which Kelley and Doran secured from the national committee at the Chicago meeting to carry the state for tariff reform and "Me and Mike." They took the elevator, and as they saw the big crowd passing in and out of the headquarters, they wondered whether there would be anything left in the barrel when they got there. They found that while the demand for boodle was big, the supply was carefully guarded and that there was some left, as the McNair estate, which Wilson handles, had just thrown $30,000 into the pot to help his election and put a member of the family in the governor's chair. They made known their wants. Bob Miller was anxious to do something for his old county. He recognized its importance and wanted to do something to fix up old matters. At first there was a little chilliness. Bob still remembered the unkind things which Lowry had said about him, and Mil himself was not feeling just right over the treachery which Bob had shown in regard to giving him one of the federal offices in Fergus Falls. But when Mil. saw Bob step up to the barrel, turn the faucet and draw out some of the contents and give it to the applicants, he was willing to forget these old times when he ran Bob and Bob ran the party, for Bob was now running the barrel. They laid the case before the chairman and Bob. They had got to have a paper and there was a lot of money needed to do what they had to do. They had got to defeat Hompe for the legislature and Boen for register of deeds. They were both farmers' men, so a special war was to be made on them. They laid down their plan and it was finally decided to tap the barrel for $5,000 as a starter, $2,500 of which should go into a newspaper. Now it was known that the Otter Tail County Farmer was in a hard row of stumps. It had jumped from one party to another for the last three years, trying to survive. It changed hands every sixty days, and politics oftener. Its editors had tried the republicans, but they had no stuff. They then sought the democrats, begging them to buy it, or anything else so they could get out from under the mountain. It was thought necessary to have an organ, so $2,500 was appropriated for that purpose, but with the distinct understanding that Kelly and Doran should control it and should send a St. Paul man here to run it. The deal was closed Saturday, Scott T. Stewart, M. R. Lowry and Alderman Cowie representing Kelly and Doran, Salvage & Lambert removing their job office to the Prinzl building on Mill street. Kelly & Doran will send a man from the St. Paul News, their St. Paul organ, to run it. It will probably be Mr. Nowell, who performed the slick job of getting Johnson and Strolberg to sign the affidavits without knowing the contents. The plan now is to run a daily until after election, circulating it free, the state central committee furnishing the boodle. The Farmer will probably come out with its bi-monthly salutatory this week, telling about what it is going to do; what a strong company it has behind it; how it is going to be run in home interest and is not controlled by Minneapolis capital, but is wholly independent of the wheat rings and railroads. It will be purely democratic and will simply publish quotations on options at Doran's Jackson bucket shop and the price of peanuts at Kelly's grocery store. The other $2,500 which the local committee has received will be doled out to the workers, so the sooner you go in, boys, the more you will get. Don't take any bluffs for they have got the stuff and have the promise of more if needed. Stick up for your pay for what the committee does not pay out they will put down in their pockets.

Donnelly and Merriam.

The St. Paul Dispatch.

The determination of Hon. Ignatius Donnelly to withdraw from his candidacy for governor on the labor ticket, and to support the Hon. William R. Merriam, is one which it was inevitable should have been reached, sooner or later, by Mr. Donnelly.

In the legislature of 1887 Mr. Donnelly played a prominent part. He was the recognized leader of the house, and at the outset there was no hesitation among the members to recognize the force and follow the direction of that leadership. As the session progressed, however, differences of opinion developed themselves, and men who supported Mr. Donnelly at the outset differed with him and opposed some of the most important measures introduced and advanced by him.

Throughout that entire session there was no time when Mr. Merriam's discharge of his duties as speaker did not receive the fullest approval of Mr. Donnelly, and there was no measure introduced by Mr. Donnelly, and no suggestion offered by him in the direction of promoting the cause of the laborer or of the farmer, which did not receive Mr. Merriam's ardent approval. When the session came to a close one of those graceful and eloquent expressions of commendation which are so pleasing to listen to and which men of Mr. Donnelly's genial nature and delightful powers of expression and alone capable of rendering with entire grace, was bestowed by the labor candidate for governor upon his present republican opponent. If Mr. Donnelly was sincere then the continuence of his present opposition to Mr. Merriam would be wholly insincere now.

No man has ever been found to call in question the earnestness in the public cause of Ignatius Donnelly. In the same measure as the practical character of his advocacy has been denied, so has his disinterestedness, his broad democracy and his patriotism remained unquestioned.

The blind puppies of journalism find it necessary to assail the integrity of the republican candidate for governor, just as they do to assure the farmer that the railroad candidate of the democracy is just the man who may be relied on to secure to them low freight and passenger rates. Only the poor gudgeon whose distance from the centers of active life is great, or he whose idiotic adherence to party dictation blinds him, can alone be imposed on by such cant.

The farmers of Minnesota understand Mr. Donnelly. They know that there is not a dishonest hair in his head, and that he would readily tear the tongue from his mouth rather than advocate the election of a dishonest man. They will not accept the advocacy today of men who fro years past they have regarded as their enemies, and they will not be lied, by irresponsible newspapers, into the belief that the man proved himself their friend in official life now deserves their censure and hostility.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE CITY.

Ode to Grover.

The people now are on to you,
Grover dear, my Grover dear;
Your fishy gammon they see through,
Grover dear, my Grover dear.
Though now for war you loudly toot,
When rebels fired their first salute
'Tis said you sent a substitute,
Grover dear, my Grover dear.

Your promises you've all belied,
Grover dear, my Grover dear;
As a reformer you're a snide,
Grover dear, my Grover dear.
For public trusts you cares no rap,
The offices are all on tap,
The heelers shout: "Oh, what a snap!"
Grover dear, my Grover dear.

The rebel flags gave you the blues,
Grover dear, my Grover dear;
You thought for them we had no use,
Grover dear, my Grover dear,
But when the "boys" jumped up and said,
"Return the flags? It can't be did!"
You hid your much diminished head,
Grover dear, my Grover dear.

'Tis said of sheep you're not afraid,
Grover dear, my Grover dear;
In grangers' wool you'd have free trade,
Grover dear, my Grover dear.
But on this subject you're not wise,
Your sophistry is worse than lies,
You can't pull wool o'er farmers' eyes,
Grover dear, my Grover dear.

And now your party's on the run,
Grover dear, my Grover dear;
The first to speak was Oregon,
Grover dear, my Grover dear.
Green Mountain echoed back the shout,
The sons of Maine urged on the rout,
The fourth of March will see you out,
Grover dear, my Grover dear.

When from the White house you retire,
Grover dear, my Grover dear;
You'll find a cheerless hearthstone fire,
Grover dear, my Grover dear,
No more to Erie's lake you'll come,
In Buffalo you have no home,
An outcast, you the earth must roam,
Grover dear, my Grover dear.

Neby Briefs.

It is quite a time ago since the people of Neby, through THE JOURNAL, let their fellow-men of Polk County know that they are yet among the living. Of course it will not do to be sick now, just before election, therefore we are all well, and if some of our boys should be sick after election, see the druggist, he will give them some "Electric Bitters."

Well, Neby and vicinity is prospering A large elevator has been built on the bank of the Red River, above Neby. It is worth money to the farmers. Neby has also got two blacksmith shops, and they say three blacksmiths. Messrs. Gordon and Kenyon are both doing first class work in their line. The third blacksmith must be the prohibition candidate for sheriff, because they say he is at work constructing a crank with which he is going to turn his opponents out at the coming election.

Ole Martenson and P. A. Thompson & Co. are both running first-class threshing rigs and are doing very good work. Wheat is poor this year, but we must be satisfied; it could have been worse. We have probably just as good crops here as Polk County can show this year.

The school in district No. 6, town of Vineland, commenced Monday, Oct. 1, with Even J. Grefthen as teacher. It is his fifth term of school in said disrtict.

A new school house will be built in district No. 6. It is encouraging to see that so much interest has been taken in the line of educating our boys and girls of Polk County the last year. But we can't do too much for our boys and girls—"The precious jewels of our country."
A. LONGFELLOW.

Says the Duluth Tribune: "Accounts which come from the interior of the state show that the democratic candidates and speakers of Minnesota are ringing the changes on the Chinese racket and the dollar-a-day idiocy at every meeting. They must think the farmers of Minnesota are the most credulous and gullible of suckers.

State Press Sayings.

Duluth Herald: The democratic papers are all kicking because Scheffer was not nominated. Merriam does not suit them, and that is just why he was not nominated.

Fergus Falls Journal: Mr. Canning told the state central committee that he was going to carry the Fifth district. This will call to mind Geo. C. Water's famous statement in St. Paul when Baxter was running.

Moorhead News: It is stated that W. H. Barnum has succeeded Col. Brice as chairman of the national democratic committee. It looks like a desperate move to recover lost ground. But nothing will save Mr. Cleveland's bacon now, not even mules.

Duluth Tribune: The revelation is now made that the richest of all the seven candidates for the presidency is Mr. Streeter, the labor candidate. This affords a magnificent illustration of what a protective tariff has done for the laboring classes of the United States.

Morris Tribune: The side show of the democratic circus has almost entirely eclipsed the main show of late, and it is reported that negotiations are now pending, with a fair prospect of success, whereby Cleveland will withdraw from the show business and turn over to Gen. Fisk the entire circus outfit.

Duluth Tribune: Minnesota Democrats are almost sure their party will carry Michigan. Over in Michigan the democrats think their chances very doubtful, but they are sure of Minnesota. The fellow they are looking for is always in the other county or state.

Preston Times: The dastardly attempt to blacken Mr. Merriam's character by a series of affidavits, that his supporters offered money for his nomination, is proving a boomerang to the authors of the black mailng scheme. It now transpires that the affidavits were obtained through misrepresentations, and that they are in fact untrue. Shame upon this mode of political warfare.

Duluth Herald: The only objection thus far advaneed to Mr. Merriam's candidacy for governor by the democrats is that he is a good business man and as such has amassed a fortune. Had Mr. Merriam shown an inability to manage his business affairs and in consequence of that inability been a poor man instead of a rich one, how much better would he have been qualified to conduct the business of the great State of Minnesota.

Duluth Herald: The prohibition party is all but collapsed. A short time ago it was in a fair way to acquire great strength, but the importance of the tariff issue has brought prohibition republicans to their senses and they prefer to aid in preserving American industries rather than become the allies of free traders. The prohibition strength is rapidly dwindling, and on election day Gen. Fisk will not have as many followers as St. John had four years ago. Sensible men, even though they believe in prohibition, see that protection is menaced and they know that the triumph of democracy would be a fatal blow to American prosperity.

VERY SLIGHT MARGIN.

Fergus Falls Journal: Chas. Canning, the democratic candidate for congress, arrived here Saturday night and spent Sunday conferring with J. P. Schmitz and others in reference to his campaign. He is going to put in his time from now to November working the district, and will spend a week in Otter Tail County. He left Monday morning for Little Falls to attend a meeting of the district committee. Mr. Canning has got his majority figured out, and it is about 1,500. In view of the fact that there will be 60,000 votes voted in the district, this is hanging on by a very slight margin.

"THE BLOODY FIFTH."

Minneapolis Tribune: Me and Mike have bought an agricultural paper in Otter Tail County and are to convert it into a daily. Fifth district farmers will be instructed how to plant ballots, cultivate free trade, reap defeat and thresh the opposition. Me and Mike appear to have appropriated for use the excellent journalistic advice that they get free gratis in the Sunday Tribune each week.

THURMAN'S TEXT.

Pioneer Press: On every democratic stump, from one end of the country to the other, is now heard nightly the assertion that the democratic party abolished slavery. The democratic party abolished slavery in the same manner in which one of John Phoenix's heroes held a man to the ground—by inserting his nose between the man's teeth.

A CORDIAL SUPPORT.

Ortonville Herald-Star: The Herald-Star proposes to give Mr. Merriam a cordial and vigorous support. He went into the fight to win, and he has won, his victory being the result of as pretty a fight as was ever waged in a convention. It was a victory that challenged the admiration of even his opponents.

DEMOCRATIC OPINION.

Stillwater Gazette: Recently, a democratic office holder remarked in speaking of the candidates for governor of Minnesota that the republicans had selected a splendid man in W. R. Merriam, who would most certainly be elected.

The October Wide Awake opens with a delightful story of some original "Shut Ins" by Mrs. Ella Peattie, which we hope may be read by all invalids everywhere. Another sunny page from life, recording the good human beings may do to one another, is Mrs. Kate Gannett Wells's readable article about the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, entitled "Some Children of the M. S. P. C. C." "A Dogocracy" by Miss. Risley Seward describes the strange canine communities of Constantinople, where the dogs separate themselves into wards and districts—we commend this amusing article to all who doubt the existence of intellect in animals. "Puck and Puppypult," by George Parsons Lathrop, is a dog story too, a droll one, showing a funny side of a dog's character. This number publishes a remarkably fine historical paper, with some twenty illustrations; it is from the pen of Miss. Harris, and is entitled "Daniel Webster in his New Hampshire Home." It deals with the home life and heart-traits of the great American statesman, and tells the small home-y things about him that our young folks would like to know. A very little has been taken from published scources, but nearly all from aged friends and neighbors, diaries and letters, and from the family of his steward, John Taylor. There is also a good art article, well illustrated, "The Medal Children of the Renaissance," by Frances H. Throop. Edward Everett Hale concludes his interesting "Boston Common" articles, Mrs. Leonowens has a paper about the ancient and modern Japanese, Oscar Fay Adams writes about La Motte Fouque the author of Undine, Louise Stockton tells about a unique "House-keepers Table" which some young girls organized at a fair to pay for a stained glass church-window which one of them had broken; and there are several poems, among them an exquisite one by Mrs. Whiton-Stone, entitled "Violet's September Soliloquy;" the others are "To A Foolish Little Fellow," by M. E.B., "A Garland of Girls" by Emile Poulson, and "A Case of Insomnia,' by M. F. Butts.

This number gives the Prospectuo for 1889—announcing a serial by Trowbridge, "The Adventures of David Vane and David Crane," and another by Margaret Sidney, author of the famous "Five Little Peppers," entitled "The Peppers Midway." There are two other serials also, by Susan Coolidge and Charles R. Talbot.

The General Purpose Cow

Western Rural:—The general purpose cow comes to the front for discussion every now and then, without much profit in the end. A New York correspondent now asks us if we can recommend either of the breeds as general purpose cows. Yes, they are all general purpose. All cows give milk, more or less, and all cows make beef more or less. That is serving a general purpose is it not? In our judgment there is little profit in discussing this question.

Beef production and milk production require different characteristics. A Short-horn or Hereford will not answer the purpose of the dairy as the Holstein or Jersey will, and the Jersey and Holstein will not produce as much beef as a Short-horn or Hereford or Polled Angus will and neither can be brought into the other class and retain its characteristics to their fullest development.

That is all there is to be said upon the subject in that direction. But there is something more to be said, however.

The average man is desirous to make either the dairy or beef production conspicuous. He is situated so that he can make one or the other pay him the best, and so he should get the breed that will do the very best in the line that is most profitable to him. In our judgment that is all there is to be said in that direction. The usual idea of a general purpose cow—as The Rural And Stockman has frequently remarked—is practically that a beef breed shall be brought to the point of producing as much milk as a dairy breed and that a dairy breed shall be made to produce as much beef as a beef breed, and the idea is not practical. It is impossible to do it.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Sept. 6th, 1888.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE conditions of a certain mortgage executed and delivered by Daniel L. Kelley and Mary E. Kelley, his wife, mortgagors, to Caleb W. Palmer, mortgagee, dated the 2d day of February A. D. 1883, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds, of the County of Polk, in the State of Minnesota, on the 3d day of February A. D. 1883, at 11:30 o'clock a. m., in book "H" of mortgages, on page 511, on which there is claimed to be due, and now unpaid, at the date of this notice, the sum of eight hundred and eighty-four 90-100 dollars ($884.90-100.) and no action or proceeding has been instituted at law or in equity to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, except that a judgment for ninety-nine and 15-100 dollars was taken for interest, execution returned unsatisfied in whole, by reason of such default.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of a power of sale contained in said mortgage and of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by sale of the mortgaged premises therein described which sale will be made at the front door of the Court House, in the City of Crookston, in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, by the sheriff of said county, on Saturday the 20th day of October A. D. 1888, at nine o'clock in the forenoon to satisfy the amount that shall then be due on said mortgage with interest thereon, and costs and expenses of sale, the sum of thirty-six and 88-100 dollars ($36.88-100,) paid by said mortgagee for taxes of 1886 and 1887 and interest thereon, and twenty-five dollars attorney's fees stipulated in said mortgage in case of foreclosure.

The premises described in said mortgage and so to be sold, are pieces or parcels of lands situated in the County of Polk, and State of Minnesota, and known and described as follows, to-wit: The northeast quarter (ne¼) of Section number fourteen (14,) Township one hundred and fifty-one (151) north, Range forty seven (47) west of fifth principal meridian.

MORTGAGE SALE.

[First publication Sept. 20th, 1888.]

DEFAULT HAS BEEN MADE IN THE payment of three hundred and sixty dollars, which is claimed to be due at this date, on a certain mortgage bearing date November 28th 1881, executed by John Leo to Sarah P. Bartlett, duly recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds in and for the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, on the second day of December 1881, at 5:20 o'clock p. m., in book "N" of mortgages on page 570, and no proceedings has been had at law or otherwise to recover the sum or any part thereof.

Now therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale in said mortgage contained, and of the statute in such case made and provided, the premises described in and covered by said mortgage, situated in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, to-wit: Lot number four (4,) in block number twenty-two (22.) Honest and Just.

Some time ago a certain Fifth district farmer wrote to Knute Nelson in regard to the congressional contest and the following reply was received:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.
Washington, Sept. 24, 1888.

Dear Sir: Yours of the 17th has just reached me here at Alexandria. I have nothing to say against Mr. Canning as a man or a democrat. But I think there is no excuse or occasion for any republican to oppose Mr. Comstock. I have known him well and intimately since 1875 and have found him always honest, able and reliable. We have no better nor abler man in our district. There is nothing but mere politics in the hue and cry that he is a railroad man. The same cry was made against me when I first ran. But I think no respectable man can now be found who will say I have been the tool of the railroads. On all questions between the public and the railways I have always been on the side of the public, and I feel certain—as certain as I would be of myself—that Mr. Comstock will under all circumstances be on the side of the public, and that no railroad can use him for any unjust or improper purpose. Mr. Comstock is one of those men who are constitutionally and organically honest and just, and a man so constituted is always safe and can always be depended upon, Yours truly,
KNUTE NELSON.

Holstein Cattle As Butter-Givers

S. Hoxie, in Harper's Magazine for August.

Such records have been of so much interest in this country that the breeders have given much more attention to the production of quantity than to quality of milk. They have fed and cared for their cattle to produce quantity. In consequence many have inferred that this breed is an excellent one for the production of milk and cheese, but that it is not adapted to the production of butter. Notwithstanding this impression it has now entered into a contest for the highest place as a butter breed, and the rapidity with which it is gaining such a position is a public surprise. The first step towards this was the winning of the Challenge Cup offered by the Breeders Gazette of Chicago for the largest thirty days butter record. The contest for this cup was open to the world and to all breeds until July 1, 1883. It was won by Mercedes, a cow of this breed, owned by Thomas B Wales of Iowa City Iowa. Her record was 99 pounds 6¾ ounces. This result awakened much controversy. Demands were made for further competitive trials Several took place in the three years following, at cattle shows in the Western States, uniformly resulting in the success of this breed. Yet they were not considered conclusive, as the best cows of other breeds were not put in competition. At this stage of public opinion the New York dairy show of 1887 was conceived. Long before its opening it was widely known that one of its most important features would be a contest for the championship in butter production. This was to be decided by a twenty-four hours' trial in the hands of an impartial committee. It was entered upon for the purpose of testing the claims of the different breeds. Cattle clubs and breeders' associations were deeply interested in it, and gave every possible encouragement to the bringing forward of the best representatives of the breeds they maintained. Probably no similar contest was ever arranged on more even terms. No criticisms were made against the management up to the hour of announcing the result. The championship was won for this breed, the cow Clothilde receiving the first prize, and the three-year-old heifer Clothilde Fourth the second prize, both owned by Messrs. Smiths. Powell & Lamb. In other departments there were contests for quality of butter, where the breeds were indirectly pitted against one another. In these contests this breed also won more than its proportionate share of prizes.

It is only within the last five years that the breeders of these cattle have been specially testing the butter capacity of their cows. Messrs. T. G. Yeomans & Sons were pioneers in this work. In tests made of their herd of less than 40 cows, 29 were found to average a seven days' production of 17 pounds 7½ ounces. Aggie 2d made 56 pound 7 ounces in this length of time, 105 pounds 10½ ounces in thirty days, and 304 pounds 5½ ounces in ninety days. This was followed by tests of other breeders. Mr. Thomas B. Wales also found 29 cows owned by him that made an average of 17 pounds 2.67 ounces. One of these, Tritomia, a four years of age, made 25 pounds 3½ ounces. Messrs. Smiths Powell & Lamb find 100 cows owned by them that average 18 pounds 0.06 ounces in tests of the same length of time.

Among these, Netherland Princess 4th at twenty-eight months old, made 21 pounds 10½ ounces; Albino 2d, at three years old, 25 pounds 14½ ounces while in thirty days she produced 106 pounds 14 ounces. Their cow Clothilde, at full age' made in seven days 28 pounds 2½ ounces. In the small herd of Mr. Eugene Smith of Nashville, Tenn., seven cows are reported with an average of 17 pounds 6.57 ounces in seven days. Among other noted tests is that of Florence Herbert, owned by Home Farm, Hampton, Ia., at 27 pounds 13½ ounces in seven days, and that of Nieltje Korndyke, the property of E. J. Burrell, Little Falls, N. Y., at 93 pounds 12 ounces in thirty days.

THE FIRST LIE NAILED.

The Charge of the St. Paul News that Dahl Bribed Isak Johnson Proved False.

Fergus Falls Journal.

The attempt of the Kelley and Doran democrats through their organ, the St. Paul News, to convict Mr. G. O. Dahl, of Fergus Falls, of attempting to bribe Isak V. Johnson of the Otter Tail County delegation to vote for W. R. Merriam in the state convention, has not only been proven to be false, but the democrats have been convicted of taking advantage of the ignorance of the Finlander to trump-up charges which the democrats knew to be false. The democrats little knew what kind of a man they were tackling when they charged Mr. Dahl of being a bribe giver and what they thought would be allowed to pass as a ten strike will prove to be the worst kind of a boomerang. The facts of the case are as follows:

Isak V. Johnson, who is a Finlander living in the town of Leaf Lake, was put on as one of the Scheffer delegates to the republican state convention, instructed to vote for Albert Scheffer for governor. He went down in care of C. D. Baker, Mr. Scheffer's manager, who furnished him with transportation to St. Paul and paid his hotel expenses while there. It happens that during the time of the convention, while the talk of "boodle" was flying around, he said in fun to Baker, with whom he was very friendly, that "he had got an offer from the other crowd and he would have to come to the front," little thinking that the joke would go any further. It is supposed that Baker, in order to even up with the Merriam crowd, got him to tell the St. Paul News about it, and they at once took advantage of Mr. Johnson by getting him to sign the following, which was sent all over the state, thus injuring the republican party, Mr. Merriam and Mr. Dahl,

ST. PAUL, Sept. 6, 1888.

I am a delegate to the republican convention now in session and am from Otter Tail County. I was requested today by George Dahl, of Fergus Falls, to vote for Merriam. I told him I was elected a Scheffer delegate and that I was instructed for Scheffer. He said if I would vote for Merriam he would give me then and there $200 cash. I told him I could not as I had promised and my county had instructed all our delegates for Scheffer. Mr. Dahl then offered me $250 cash, but I told him it was no use, I should stand by my instructions and vote for Scheffer.

[Signed] ISAK V. JOHNSON.

The above statement was written out, signed and sworn to in the presence of three reputable and prominent citizens of this state, and it affords conclusive evidence of the corrupt and unprincipled means by which W. R. Merriam was nominated for governor of Minnesota.

WHO IS ISAK V. JOHNSON.

In the town of Leaf Lake, Otter Tail County, there is a large and prosperous settlement of Finlanders, and one of the most prominent men of this nationality in all Otter Tail County is Isak V. Johnson. He is a wealthy farmer, and is a leading member of the Lutheran church in his community. He is highly respected throughout the county and is the representative and the idol of his own nationality. The plain, blunt old farmer was too honest to accept a bribe, and at the first opportunity made and swore to this statement. The fact that he obeyed his instruction to the last and voted for Albert Scheffer, when, by means of that outrage upon all honor and decency—the secret ballot—he might have voted for Merriam and received $250 in hard cash, will and should entitle him to the respect and confidence of all men who believe in honest and honorable practices, even in politics.

But this man, George Dahl, who is he?

Mr. Dahl is a prominent capitalist and money lender of Fergus Falls. For some reason best known to himself he is and was an ardent Merriam man. Being a resident of Otter Tail County and having an acquaintance with Mr. Johnson and other delegates was chosen to approach them, but he failed to secure the vote of this sturdy representative of the people of Leaf Lake and New York Mills.

Now, Mr. Merriam, what do you say to this?

If it is false, produce George Dahl, and see if he will say so, and the Daily News will produce such proof as will bring the blush of shame to the cheek of every honest supporter of the banker in the state.

As soon as Mr. Dahl saw the above he pronounced it absolutely false and started to investigate it at once. He maintained that Mr. Johnson had either been imposed on or mistaken him for some other man. In the meantime the St. Paul News began to get alarmed and sent a man here to investigate the matter. He met Mr. Dahl just as he was starting out with his family for a drive, and demanded in the most imperious manner that, if Mr. Dahl were innocent, he make an affidavit then and there. Mr. Dahl made the following affidavit:

George O. Dahl, of Fergus Falls, denies that he at any time made an offer of money to Isak V. Johnson for his vote in the late republican convention, and furthermore alleges that he never met the said Isak V. Johnson, nor at any time made him the offer of a sum of money for any purpose whatsoever.

G. O. DAHL.

State of Minnesota, County of Otter Tail.—Subscribed and sworn to before me, a notary public, this 12th day of September, 1888. C. W. WARFIELD, Notary Public.

The News man then started for the Finland settlement, thinking that he could again bulldoze the Finlander. When he reached New York Mills he heard that another Fin. named Nils Strolberg had seen Dahl offer the money to Johnson; so two statements were written out for Strolberg and Johnson to sign. The News found a co-worker in the person of the democratic postmaster, C. E. Ormsby, who was a notary public and glad to leave his office to do a little work to help defeat the republicans. Accordingly they started out and came to Stollberg's place first. Ormsby who has got a trang to his voice from a harelip or some other deformity, read over the statement, Strollberg did not fully understand it, but he caught the name of Dahl, and said he did not know whether it was Dahl of Fergus Falls as he did not know him. The News man told him they would find out for sure when they got down to Johnson's, and would come back and let him know, but that was the last he saw of them. They then found Johnson, who was running a threshing machine, and read over the statement reaffirming what he had said in St. Paul. He did not know what to do, and anxious to go on with his threshing, signed the paper to get rid of the reporter, making some verbal reservations, which, of course, the reporter did not put in the affidavit, as he little cared whether he involved Mr. Johnson in the matter or not. All he cared for was to make votes for the democratic party, and in order to do it was willing to take advantage of a man who did not understand what he was doing. Mr. Johnson does not take the St. Paul News, and like any other farmer who cannot talk English good is not on to the city style of doing things, so he was easily misled by the smooth young man who had been sent out by Kelley and Doran. This was the last Mr. Johnson heard of it until he got a letter from Mr. Dahl, asking him to come to town and explain what he meant. He little dreamed that the young man was going to publish the following which appeared about a week later in the News:

"One of the most prominent merchants of New York Mills is Nils Strolberg, a man who stands high in the community, and is possessed of considerable property. Nils Strolberg came to St. Paul to the republican convention with Mr. Johnson, and like Mary and her lamb, these two men were constantly together during the convention, and he (Nils Strolberg) heard G. O. Dahl make an offer of a bribe to Isak V. Johnson. And here is his affidavit:

I, Nils Stolberg, of the town of Newton, county of Otter Tail and state of Minnesota, do solemnly swear that on the 5th and 6th days of September, 1888, I was at the republican state convention at St. Paul, with Isak V. Johnson, a delegate to said convention from Otter Tail County; and further that I then and there heard one G. O. Dahl, of Fergus Falls, said county of Otter Tail, offer the said Isak V. Johnson the sum of $200 cash in hand provided he cast his vote for William R. Merriam for the republican nominee for governor of Minnesota. NILS STOLBERG.

State of Minnesota, County of Otter Tail—ss. Subscribed and sworn to before me, a notary public, this 12th day of September, 1888.

C. E. ORMSBY, Notary Public,
New York Mills, Minn.

After securing Mr. Strolberg's affidavit the News man, somewhat elated, 'tis true, over his success, accompanied by C. E. Ormsby, a notary public of the village, secured a team and drove across the country about a dozen miles to the home of Isak V. Johnson. The matter was laid before him, and he again declared that he meant just what he said in his statement of Sept. 6th. To more completely substantiate the former statement, Mr. Johnson then made a second affidavit, as follows:

I, Isak V. Johnson, of the town of Leaf Lake, county of Otter Tail, and State of Minnesota, do solemnly swear and affirm that I was a delegate to the late republican state convention from the said county of Otter Tail, and that during the time the convention was in session, and before a nomination for governor had been made, I was approached by one G. O. Dahl, of Fergus Falls, said county and state, and was then and there offered by him, first the sum of $200 cash, and afterward $250 cash, provided I would cast my vote in said convention for William R. Merriam. To both offers I made the reply that I had been instructed to vote for Albert Scheffer, and that I would vote for him to the end. ISAK V. JOHNSON.

State of Minnesota, County of Otter Tail—ss. Subscribed and sworn to before me, a notary public, this 12th day of September, 1888. C. E. ORMSBY,
New York Mills, Minn.

The representative of the Daily News saw and talked to prominent men from every part of Otter Tail County, and from no one did anything but the highest praise of Isak V. Johnson come. He is everywhere spoken of as an honest man and one whose word is gospel. Dahl himself admitted that Johnson's character was above reproach. The witness to the whole matter, Nils Strolberg, stands equally high in the community in which both men reside, and two more desirable witnesses could not be found in the State of Minnesota.

Banker Merriam must explain or withdraw. Which course will he take?

When this last dose appeared Mr. Dahl determined to go and see Mr. Johnson and find out the facts. As he did not know Mr. Johnson he asked Henry D. Page, president of the Fergus Falls National bank, to go with him and at the same time be a witness to what Johnson should say. Accordingly Dahl and Page started Monday night, Sept. 17th, to New York Mills. As Mr. Page had business at Perham both went directly there. While in Perham Col. L. Ed. Davison saw them and, alive to his duty as a democrat, he thought he must follow them. Accordingly when they reached New York Mills they found that the doughty colonel was with them. He had become so used to handling the Perham people and especially the Perham democrats, without gloves that he thought he could handle Mr. Page the same way: so he informed him that he must not bulldoze Mr. Johnson and if he did have a note against him he must not try to run him, because the democrats wouldn't have it. Now, every one knows that Mr. Page is a mild mannered man. He has lived in Otter Tail County for sixteen years, but he hasn't done much bulldozing nor has he been bulldozed to any great extent. When the Perham editor came at him he simply smiled and conversed with him in a subdued tone, but in such a manner that the colonel soon asked to be allowed to go down to Johnson with them. Mr. Page informed him that he would have to see Mr. Dahl, as it was his interests they were looking after. Mr. Dahl said he would be glad to have him or any one else go and see Johnson, but as their team was full he would have to get another rig. The colonel hustled around and soon found Olaf Pary, a Finlander, who had recently joined the democracy and who is expected to drive all the Finlanders up to the polls and vote as he sees fit, in payment for his nomination as representative. The colonel and Mr. Pary got a single rig, and started for Johnson's house, six miles away, to prepare him for his visit from Messrs. Dahl and Page. Now Mr. Dahl proposed to do everything in a fair and business-like manner. He got a two-seated rig and then went and asked Mr. Ormsby, the democratic postmaster, who had gone out with the News man, to go along and take the acknowledgements to the affidavits. They first stopped at Mr. Strolberg's. Mr. Page went in to see if he was at home. On finding that he was he called Mr. Dahl in. Mr. Page, who knew Strolberg, said as he entered, "I suppose you know this man?" Strolberg repied that he never saw him before. Mr. Page said, "didn't you see him in St. Paul?" Mr. Strolberg said he did not and made the following affidavit. It was read over to him so that he knew the contents and fully understood it.

I, Nils Strolberg, of New York Mills, Otter Tail County, Minn., do solemnly swear that when signing affidavit of Sept. 12th, 1888, and published in the St. Paul Daily News of Sept. 14th, 1888, I stated that I did not know the party who I heard make the offer of two hundred dollars to Isak V. Johnson, provided said Isak V. Johnson cast his vote in the late state republican convention for Wm. R. Merriam, the republican nominee for governor of Minnesota, and I further stated that I did not know G. O. Dahl, of Fergus Falls, Minn., and I hereby state that I did not see G. O. Dahl while in St. Paul at the said convention, neither have I known G. O. Dahl, of Fergus Falls, until this day.

NILS STROLBERG.

Mr. Strolberg then went with Messrs. Dahl and Page to Johnson. When near the Fin. church, about four miles from town, they came upon Col. Davison and Mr. Pary, who were talking with Mr. Johnson and a neighbor. It seems that they had started towards town on some business, when the colonel and Mr. Pary met them. Dahl says that he knew he was all right when he first saw them. Both Davison and Pary had their heads down and looked sick. They acknowledged that they were beaten at the game; that Mr. Johnson said Mr. Dahl had made him no offer, and that he had never even met him. It was a good thing they were there. Davison is the boss democrat at Perham and Pary in the past has been the king among the Fins. Messrs. Dahl and Page had come no sharp practice, nor had they bulldozed any one, and Pary and Davison were witnesses to the fact. They then returned to town. The rest of the party repaired to the church steps and on that sacred spot Strolberg and Johnson told all they knew about it; neither had seen Dahl before; neither knew what they had signed. Mr. Ormsby, the democratic postmaster, then took the following affidavit from Mr. Johnson; it was read over word for word in English, and everything explained. As he speaks and understands Norwegian, it was translated into that language for him by Mr. Dahl. He said he understood everything thoroughly and then signed the affidavit, which is as follows:

I, Isak V. Johnson, of the town of Leaf Lake, county of Otter Tail, state of Minnesota, do solemnly swear and affirm that G. O. Dahl, of Fergus Falls, Minn., did not offer me two hundred dollars, or two hundred and fifty dollars, or any sum of money, or any other offer whatever, provided I would cast my vote in the late state republican convention, held at St. Paul, Sept. 5th and 6th, 1888, for Wm. R. Merriam, candidate before said convention for the office of governor, neither did I meet or see G. O. Dahl, of Fergus Falls, in St. Paul, while I was attending said republican convention; and in my affidavit made in St. Paul, Sept. 6, 1888, and published in the St. Paul Daily News of Sept. 8th, also in my affidavit of Sept. 12th, 1888, and published in same paper Sept. 14th, I did not know that it appeared in said affidavits that G. O. Dahl, of Fergus Falls, was the party making me the offer referred to in said affidavits. ISAK V. JOHNSON.

Thus the first campaign lie of the democrats was nailed, their first conspiracy shown up. Will they have the manliness to retract a charge shown to be false? Will they attempt to hoodwink the Fins again? We guess not. Mr. Johnson has made up his mind on two things. He will not attend any more St. Paul conventions and he will not sign any more papers for strangers. The whole Fin settlement are greatly aroused over it and they will let the democrats know that it won't do to take any such advantage of one of their number.

The democratic press labors hard to prejudice the farmers against Mr. Merriam on the pretense that he is an "aristocrat!" To see the haughty, dignified Mr. Wilson walking along the street beside the genial, social Merriam, one would never take the latter for an "aristocrat."

In St. Paul last week we met Theodore Roosevelt, of New York. He is just from that State and says that never before did he see so much enthusiasm manifested in any election, and he says that the great Empire State is good for a good rousing republican majority. He urges Minnesota to do her whole duty in the campaign, and, from what he has seen he thinks she is going to do it.

We are established in Crookston TO STAY. We do not do business here this year to go away the next. In loaning money, as in other business, we have a character for fair dealing to sustain Call on us before going elsewhere. Remember all interest on our loans is payable at our office.

A. J. Hamre was up from the town of Garfield last week. He is one of the leading farmers in that section, one whose opinion always carries weight. He reports considerable shortage of wheat, thinks the yield will not exceed seven bushels and the grade for the most part under No. 1 Hard. Thinks the people will all pull through, though there may be some individual cases, where total loss has been met that will require some help.

I. U. Jennings has bought the Carey elevator and is prepared to buy all grades of wheat and barley and give the farmers an honest deal. If they will bring him samples of their grain he will give them pointers that will be of advantage to them. [24-tf

Grand Forks Plaindealer: Judge Montague, of Crookston, and Ira P. Shissler, of Mankato, addressed a large gathering of republicans at East Grand Forks Wednesday evening. Their talk was not ineffectual, either. Like the Phillipian jailor, the knees of some of the local Demos—notably Johnnie Dwyer—smote together, and tears of repentance were not lacking on the cheeks of a goodly few followers of Cleveland. Mr. Shissler will continue his efforts ten days longer in the Red River Valley region. Speaks at Crookston Monday night.

What's the matter with the Pioneer Press specials from this place? If they have not regard enough for the wishes of their patrons to employ a republican special reporter, they ought at least to secure an honest democrat—one honest enough to give a truthful report; or else they should employ a night editor to see that no such garbled reports crept in as was the report of the Johnson-d'Autrement meeting here on the evening of the 8th. The friends of the Press here are very indignant that such an account should be allowed to appear and they think the Press should call a halt on their very fresh young man.

Dr. Dodds, of Northfield, one of the best, if not the best, veterinary surgeons in the state, was in the city on Sunday night en route to Devil's Lake, D. T., where he goes to attend on important cases. He is one of the best known veterinarians in the state and has business in all parts of it. Speaking of the surgical operation that Dr. Leguee performed on Wm. Welsh's horse a few weeks since. Dr. Dodds said that it was an operation requiring the highest of skill and even then very often resulted fatally. He said that we have a very skillful veterinary in Dr. Leguee, far more than the average; that he would feel safe to trust him with very difficult cases. Such an opinion from such a source is a very high recommend for our genial doctor, the more as it comes wholly unsolicited and unknown to him.

A Grand Republican Rally.

On Monday night, the republicans, to the number of several thousands, gathered to hear the political issues of the day discussed and to parade the streets in honor of the event. In the parade, which reached five or six blocks, were several hundred torch and motto bearers, while the streets were lined with republicans, who preferred to gaze upon the grand spectacle rather than to march. The head of the column reached the Opera House at a few minutes before eight o'clock and found the house then nearly filled. P. C. Schmidt was elected to preside, which he did with dignity and grace. First on the program was music by the Grand Forks cornet band, then a piece was sung by the Crookston campaign glee club. The chairman then introduced Hon. Ira P. Shissler, who briefly addressed the large audience, saying that as Hon. Ignatius Donnelly would speak he would give up his time to him. He earnestly urged the voters to do their whole duty, saying "if you do we will bury the democratic party so deep that Jacob's trump can't waken it" Geo. R. Roberts, republican candidate for the legislature, was then introduced, who said that he was not an orator but he knew how to shock a sheaf of wheat; that he was pretty well acquainted with the modus operandi of raising and marketing wheat in this country and the necessity for legislation on the subject; pledged himself, should he be elected, to use his best endeavors in the interests of this great district. Mr. Roberts impressed his hearers as an earnest, honest man, a man fully competent to grasp the great questions of the hour in the legislature and handle them intelligently and ably. His remarks were greeted by three hearty cheers that made the building ring again. The Fisher cornet band rendered a piece in fine style and then the chairman introduced the Hon. E. W. Huffcutt, of New York, who held the vast audience listening to his eloquent words for an hour. He said the present administration had ridden into power upon the jackass of reform which had captivated the mugwump vote. The administration had accomplished one reform he must admit—it had got married! He said the tariff is a license to do business. We tax circusses, cheap Johns and the like, and why should not foreign countries who wish to trade, help to pay our taxes? The republican party believe in a tariff that will protect its own institutions. Things we do not produce should not be subject to tariff. He believes in protection to American homes and American property. At the close of his speech the glee club sang; "Come down, Grover, come down." The chairman then introduced Hon. Ignatius Donnelly, who spoke until after 11 o'clock. Mr. Donnelly alluded to his speech in the state convention wherein he had said: "I do not belong to your parish." Since the Labor Party had taken its ticket from the field he now believed they had better join the republican parish. He said the republican party is now working for the principles he advocates, and urged all his friends to support the republican ticket, national, state, congressional, legislative and county—from president down to coroner. On the tariff, he said that it did not appear to him that the people of the United States desired free trade, but that England does, and England believes that free trade will follow if Grover Cleveland is re-elected. He had been in England and Ireland and forcibly depicted the evils of free trade, and urged upon his hearers the urgent necessity of taking care of our own interests in this campaign, which is to determine whether free trade or protection to homes shall obtain. He believes in a revision of the tariff on the republican plan, which is with a view to the protection of its own homes and its own industries. The fact that the people all over the world flock to our shores and that Americans never emigrate to other countries, is a true test of the question whether protection is best for the laboring man. But, he said, while the tariff question is of importance, there are other questions of as great importance to the farmers and the people in the Northwest. The democrats are holding up the tariff before you to blind your eyes to the watered stock of monopolistic railroads. Spoke of his efforts to pass his bill in the last legislature, saying it was the democrats in the house that blocked his way. Said that Jim Hill was a democrat and backs Mr. Wilson and the democratic ticket. Mr. Wilson does not kick against railroad monopolies for fear of creating a coldness on the part of his railroad supporters. Said that Mr. Merriam had stuck right by the farmers in the last legislature, appointing such committees as the Farmers' Alliance wanted, and appointing him, Donnelly, chairman of the railroad committee in face of the most bitter opposition and with the knowedge that he thus antagonized the railroad and millers monopoly against him. He said that Mr. Merriam earnestly supported the bill to reduce the rate of interest from 10 to 8 per cent, even leaving his seat to go upon the floor to make a speech in favor of it. That speech caused the passage of the bill in the House. He urged his friends to vote for Mr. Merriam, assuring them that Mr. Merriam has always been the true and tried friend of the people against monopoly and that he would continue to be. Mr. Wilson, if elected, would owe his election to the bosses, Kelley and Doran, to Jim Hill and the millers' association, all of which powerful influences back him and are opposing Mr. Merriam's election with all the power that money can command. The hall remained packed to suffocation during the entire program though several hundred had to stand during the entire exercises which lasted until after 11 o'clock. We believe that Mr. Donnelly's earnest presentation of the case will result in many votes for the entire republican ticket.

They then took a spin around the block returning to the same corner where they were caught. No one hurt.

General Harrison's idea that $20,000,000 of the surplus might be righteously and beneficially applied to the repayment of the direct tax paid by the loyal states for the prosecution of the war is a manifestly sound and practical one. And the people of those states should bear the fact carefully in mind that such a step would have been taken by congress but for the revolutionary opposition of the democrats, who pretend to be so much distressed by the fact that the government has more money than it needs for ordinary uses.

General Fisk is being patted on the back by the democratic press. The reason is that he is assisting them, particularly in New York, where his party is working side by side with the saloon-Hill element, to defeat a good temperance man, the candidate of the party that has done everything that has been done in this country to effect the restriction by law of the liquor traffic. General Fisk is helping the democrats. Of course they pat him on the back. They will continue to so pat him until they have no further use for him, and then they and the saloon owners will laugh at him and at the rest of the prohibitionists.

Ex-congressman Findlay of Maryland, is a democrat, but he is also a protectionist and is going to vote for Harrison and Morton. He says: "The idea some people have of the function of government is to collect enough money to pay the salaries of public officers and then sleep. General Harrison is not that kind of a man. There is nothing in his ideas of the functions of government to prevent him from giving his support to improvements which, in a commercial and military sense, would be of benefit to the country."

Reports from Otter Tail County show the republicans uniting on the straight ticket in a satisfactory manner, and the prospects good for the usual majority, if not a large increase. H. E. Boen, secretary of the Farmers' Alliance, who sometime ago was said to be working against our ticket, has his coat off and sleeves rolled up and is working like a beaver for the good old republican party, and hundreds of others, whom the democrats confidently expected to get are doing the same. Let the good work go on.

The labor ticket has been withdrawn from the field and Mr. Donnelly announces that he will take the stump for W. R. Merriam. Mr. Donnelly has the credit of having been a true friend of the farmer in the last legislature, and Mr. Donnelly says Mr. Merriam aided and abetted him in everything he attempted in the interest of the farmers. The democrats ring the changes on the chestnut "Merriam is not the farmer's friend!" As yet they have not put their finger on one point in proof of their assertion, for the very good reason that they can't do it.
